Charlevoix kicked to Petoskey. We were pushed back to the three yard line where we held Petoskey for downs. We then worked the ball back to their twenty yard line, where Paddock by an end run made a touch down. Levinson kicked the goal. Petoskey kicked to Charlevoix. After the ball had moved back and forward for a little while, time was called.

Charlevoix kicked to Petoskey. We held them for downs and after a series of plays, Small made a touchdown. Then Petoskey kicked to Charlevoix, Bridge received the ball and Durgan ran interference for him while he made a touchdown, but it was taken to the twenty-five yard line where he stepped out of bounds. Petoskey punted several times in the second half. Time was called with the final score of 17 to 0 in favor of Charlevoix.

Petoskey said that we had the fastest backfield in the northern part of the state. In the Petoskey game a week ago, Petoskey made lines almost at will, but in this game they were unable to make any lines at all, due to the steady practice during the week.

Saturday, November 7, will be a game with Harbor Springs.

Is the Sugar Beet Crop so Decided at Pomona Meeting

MET WITH IRONTON GRANGE OCT. 29

Value of Charlevoix Grange Property $9000

Next Meeting Will be Held With Wilson Grange Nathan Liskum and Wife Elected Delegates to State Grange.

Charlevoix Pomona grange met with Ironton grange, Thursday, October 29. Owing to farmers being busy, with the beet harvest, the attendance was not as large as expected, although a fairly large crowd was present.

Just before noon the meeting was called to order by E. B. Ward, Master of Charlevoix Pomona, who explained that Pomona always adapted itself to circumstances being guided by what it considered was the best plan to follow with the grange with which it was meeting, and after due consideration, believed that it would be for the best interests of all to conduct the meeting in the fourth degree, after which a recess was taken for dinner, in the preparing of which Ironton grange did itself proud.

On reassembling the address of welcome was given by Peter Knudsen, Master of Ironton Grange, who gave a fine address, laying stress on the great good, socially, which came to the farmers from the grange organization. Worthy Master Ward in responding, called attention to the fact that the birth-place of Charlevoix Pomona was at Ironton grange, and since that time it had advanced to the proud position of being the largest Pomona in the west. Brother Ward also dwelt on the splendid system of agricultural education in Michigan, which had given it a world wide reputation, all states and countries bidding high for the talent developed at our Agricultural College, which had been fostered and encouraged by the order of Patrons of Husbandry.

A general discussion of what was the best money crop for the farmer, in this section, took place. Sugar beets being the favorite by a large majority, although oats, cucumbers, string beans, onions, corn, hay and poultry had their advocates. Brothers Knudsen and Burns presented figures to show that they would receive a net profit of between fifty and sixty dollars from their beets this year. It was also conclusively shown that Charlevoix county beets had the highest test of any beets grown anywhere. Subordinate grange reports were received from all but three of the sixteen granges in the county, and while no increased membership was shown, no falling off was apparent. The value of grange property in Charlevoix county at the present time is nearly $9000. It was decided to hold the next meeting with Wilson grange.

After a supper, fully equal to the magnificent dinner served, the grange again proceeded to business and Nathan Liskum and wife were elected as delegates to the state grange.

Worthy Master Ward then took up the work of the order, explaining and answering questions in regard to its general practices, after which he exemplified and explained the secret work. The grange was called to order in the degree of Pomona, and a class of nine were instructed in the fifth degree.

Throughout the sessions music and recitations were given as well as a paper on "The grange as an educator," which will be published later by H. Butterbee. Taken altogether it was a very profitable and pleasant meeting and a credit to Charlevoix patrons and their leader, E. B. Ward.

CORRESPONDENCE

FROM ATWOOD.

No man can lounge into success.

Be careful how you rebuke the other fellow.

Mabel Wood has been quite sick during the past week.

Don't forget the pie social Friday evening by the busy helpers at Will Knights.

Miss Mabel Blow left for Elk Rapids last week to be absent for some time.

Ladies aid society will on Thanksgiving evening have an old fashioned chicken pie supper, everything else in the eatable line that is good. Good program, speeches, etc. All for 25 cents.

FROM BAY SHORE.

Mrs. Frank Burnett was called to Chicago by the illness of her sister.

Ruby Jones and Amos Williams were taken to the Lockwood hospital last week.

The indoor baseball outfit arrived Saturday. The blues and athletes practiced it the hall, November 1.

The Woodmens dance was well attended last Friday. All reported a good time. Mr. C. Lamphere and Tunath of Charlevoix, furnished music.

There will be a dance at the hall in Bay Shores, November 13. All are cordially invited. Good music will be furnished by C. Lamphere and Tunath.

Misses Hazel Gillmartin, Bessie Tillotson and Thea Bowman gave a very plesant Hallowe'en party at the home of the latter. Master Eugene Atwood succeeded in capturing four apples out of a pail of water with his teeth, all others failed.

Mrs. Sears, living two miles southwest of Bay Shore, died at her home Saturday, October 24, after a long and painful sickness. While we shall miss her we feel it is a blessing she is at rest. The funeral was held from the home, interment at Greenwood cemetery.

BEAVER ISLAND.

SAVE RECIPE ANYWAY

Put It in a Safe Place, for it may Come in Handy

Says Home-made Mixture is Easily Prepared and Cures Weak Kidneys and Bladder.

Here is a simple home-made mixture as given by an eminent authority on Kidney diseases, who makes the statement that it will relieve almost any case of Kidney trouble if taken before the stage of Bright's disease. He states that such symptoms as lame back, pain in the side, frequent desire to urinate, especially at night; painful and discolored urination, are readily overcome. Here is the recipe. Try it:

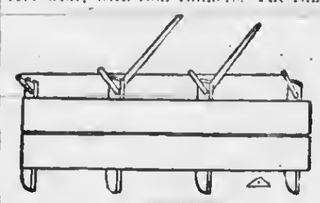
Fluid Extract Dandelion, one-half ounce; Compound Kargon one ounce; Compound Syrup Sarsaparilla, three ounces. Take a teaspoonful after each meal and at bedtime.

A well-known druggist here in town is authority that these ingredients are all harmless and easily mixed at home by shaking well in a bottle. This mixture has a peculiar healing and soothing effect upon the entire Kidney and Urinary structure, and often overcomes the worst forms of rheumatism in just a little while. This mixture is said to remove all blood disorders and cure the rheumatism by forcing the kidneys to filter and strain from the blood and system all uric acid and foul, decomposed waste matter, which cause those afflictions. Try it if you aren't well. Save the prescription.

Eradicating Weeds.

In many sections of the west when the weeds get too large for the harrow, farmers use what is known as a slicker. The details of construction are shown in the accompanying illustration.

The slicker is usually about twelve feet wide, with four runners. The runners are made of 2 by 6 high or 2 by 8 inch scantling. Boards are nailed on top of the runners. An iron five-eighths of an inch in diameter is fastened at the back of the runners, so that it drags in the soil one to two inches below the surface. A thin bar of steel as long as the width of the implement, about two inches wide and sharpened on the front, is sometimes used instead of the iron rod. The bar is bolted to the bottom of the back of the runners.



A SLICKER.

The weight of the driver who rides the implement causes the rod or knife to run just under the surface of the ground. When the rod clogs it is dumped by lifting on the handles, shown in the cut. It works very nicely when the soil is smooth, finely pulverized and reasonably free from stubble and other trash. When the slicker is to be used, care should be exercised in turning the stubble under well.

Potato Rot.

A man who has tried the experiment claims that it is very easy to prevent potatoes from rotting by placing in different parts of the cellar in which they are kept a box containing a quantity of lump slack lime. He states that this lime absorbs the moisture which has such a detrimental effect upon potatoes and in his case has resulted in keeping his stock of this commodity always in good condition. The plan is simple enough and is well worth a trial by any grocer who has had difficulty in keeping his potatoes in a damp cellar.

Aplomb means true to the plumb line, but is generally used to express that self possession born of perfect self confidence and composure.

College Towns and the Saloon

College towns should be temperance towns. No friend of youth can fail to mark the importance of this proposition. Let the following facts emphasize this claim:

In one college town, where there were open saloons, in a single year 500 intoxicated students were arrested by the police, and turned over to the college authorities!

A sorrowful father, whose son had been expelled for drunkenness, sent this message to a certain college president: "I sent my boy to you a sober boy, and you have returned him to me a drunkard!" How awful significant, and instructive, are these facts!

Look at the other side. Oberlin, O., a famous college town, has been free from the saloon for seventy-five years. President Fairchild, the third president in succession and for thirty-five years the head of the college, said before his death, "We settled it once for all, we would not have a dram-shop among us!" And Oberlin has been "dry" for three quarters of a century, without a break!

In a village of 4000 permanent population, such as Oberlin is, and where from 1,500 to 2,000 students annually gather, the importance of this sustained determination cannot be overestimated. Little wonder that Oberlin college has graduated thousands of students of such high grade of scholarship and character.

Harvard University is located in a city (Cambridge) where there has not been a saloon of twety years. President Elliot testifies to the inestimable value of such a college environmet.

And not only should college authorities do all possible to banish the saloon, and so remove temptation, but they should, also, add to their curriculum a department of scientific temperance instruction. It is a shame and disgrace to send young men out into life, not knowing the destrictive power of stimulants and naracotics. Every college faculty out to urge total abstinence upon the student body, both by precept and example.

Do not the "Signs of the times" point toward the early consummation of these conditions, so devoutedly to be wished?

THE LION AND THE MOUSE.

By CHARLES KLEIN.

A Story of American Life Novelized From the Play by ARTHUR HORNBLOW.

COPYRIGHT, 1906, BY G. W. DILLINGHAM COMPANY.

"No, no, I will not!" he thundered. "You have wormed yourself into my confidence by means of lies and deceit. You have tricked me, fooled me to the very limit! Oh, it is easy to see how you have beguiled my son into the folly of loving you! And you—you have the brazen effrontery to ask me to plead for your father? No! No! No! Let the law take its course, and now, Miss Rossmore, you will please leave my house tomorrow morning!"

Shirley stood listening to what he had to say, her face white, her mouth quivering. At last the crisis had come. It was a fight to the finish between this man, the incarnation of corporate greed, and herself, representing the fundamental principles of right and justice. She turned on him in a fury:

"Yes, I will leave your house tonight! Do you think I would remain another hour beneath the roof of a man who is as blind to justice, as deaf to mercy, as incapable of human sympathy, as you are!"

She raised her voice, and as she stood there denouncing the man of money, her eyes flashing and her head thrown back, she looked like some avenging angel defying one of the powers of evil.

"Leave the room!" shouted Ryder, beside himself, and pointing to the door.

"Father!" cried Jefferson, starting forward to protect the girl he loved.

"You have tricked him as you have me!" thundered Ryder.

"It is your own vanity that has tricked you!" cried Shirley contemptuously. "You lay traps for yourself and walk into them. You can tell every one around you to lie to you, to cajole you, to praise you, to deceive you! At least you cannot accuse me of flattering you. I have never fawned upon you as you compel your family and your friends and your dependents do. I have always appealed to your better nature by telling you the truth, and in your heart you know that I am speaking the truth now."

"Go!" he commanded.

"Yes, let us go, Shirley!" said Jefferson.

"No, Jeff, I came here alone, and I'm going alone!"

"You are not. I shall go with you. I intend to make you my wife!"

Ryder laughed scornfully.

"No," cried Shirley. "Do you think I'd marry a man whose father is as deep a discredit to the human race as your father is? No, I wouldn't marry the son of such a merciless tyrant! He refuses to lift his voice to save my father. I refuse to marry his son!"

She turned on Ryder with all the fury of a tiger;

"You think if you lived in the olden days you'd be a Caesar or an Alexander. But you wouldn't! You'd be a Nero—a Nero! Sink my self respect to the extent of marrying into your family!" she exclaimed contemptuously. "Never! I am going to Washington without your aid. I am going to save my father if I have to go on my knees to every United States senator. I'll go to the White House; I'll tell the president what you are! Marry your son—no, thank you! No, thank you!"

"Leave the room!" shouted Ryder.

Exhausted by the vehemence of her passionate outburst, Shirley hurried from the room, leaving Ryder speechless, staring at his son.

CHAPTER XVI.

WHEN Shirley reached her rooms she broke down completely. She threw herself upon a sofa and burst into a fit of violent sobbing. After all, she was only a woman, and the ordeal through which she had passed would have taxed the strongest powers of endurance. She had borne up courageously while there remained the faintest chance that she might succeed in moving the financier to pity, but now that all hopes in that direction were shattered and she herself had been ordered harshly from the house, like any ordinary malefactor, the reaction set in, and she gave way freely to her long pent-up anguish and distress. Nothing now could save her father, not even this journey to Washington which she determined to take nevertheless; for, according to what Stoit had said, the senate was to take a vote that very night.

She looked at the time—11 o'clock. She had told Mr. Ryder that she would leave his house at once, but on reflection it was impossible for a girl alone to seek a room at that hour. It would be midnight before she could get her things packed. No, she would stay under this hated roof until morning and then take the first train to Washington. There was still a chance that the vote might be delayed, in which case she might yet succeed in winning over some of the senators. She began to gather her things together and was thus engaged when she heard a knock at her door.

"Who's there?" she called out.

"It's I," replied a familiar voice.

Shirley went to the door and opening it found Jefferson on the threshold. He made no attempt to enter, nor did she invite him in. He looked tired and careworn.

"Of course, you're not going tonight?" he asked anxiously. "My father did not mean to-night."

"No, Jeff," she said wearily; "not tonight. It's a little too late. I did not realize it: Tomorrow morning, early."

He seemed reassured and held out his hand.

"Good-night, dearest. You're a brave girl. You made a splendid fight."

"It didn't do much good," she replied in a disheartened, listless way.

"But it set him thinking," rejoined Jefferson. "No one ever spoke to my father like that before. It did him good. He's still marching up and down the library, chewing the cud"—

Noticing Shirley's tired face and her eyes, with great black circles underneath, he stopped short.

"Now, don't do any more packing tonight," he said. "Go to bed, and in the morning I'll come up and help you. Good night!"

"Good night, Jeff," she smiled.

He went downstairs, and after doing some more packing she went to bed. But it was hours before she got to sleep, and then she dreamed that she was in the senate chamber and that she saw Ryder suddenly rise and denounce himself before the astonished senators as a perjurer and traitor to his country, while she returned to Massapequa with the glad news that her father was acquitted.

Meantime a solitary figure remained in the library, pacing to and fro like a lost soul in purgatory. Mrs. Ryder had returned from the play and gone to bed, serenely oblivious of the drama in real life that had been enacted at home. The servants locked the house for the night, and still John Burkett Ryder walked the floor of his sanctum, and late into the small hours of the morning the watchman going his lonely rounds saw a light in the library and the restless figure of his employer sharply silhouetted against the white blinds.

For the first time in his life John Ryder realized that there was something in the world beyond self. He had seen with his own eyes the sacrifice a daughter will make for the father she loves, and he asked himself what manner of a man that father could be to inspire such devotion in his child. He probed into his own heart and conscience and reviewed his past career. He had been phenomenally successful, but he had not been happy. He had more money than he knew what to do with, but the pleasures of the domestic circle, which he saw other men enjoy, had been denied to him. Was he himself to blame? Had his insensate craving for gold and power led him to neglect those other things in life which contribute more truly to man's happiness? In other words, was his life a mistake? Yes, it was true what this girl charged—he had been merciless and unscrupulous in his dealings with his fellow man. It was true that hardly a dollar of his vast fortune had been honestly earned. It was true that it had been wrung from the people by fraud and trickery. He had craved for power, yet now he had tasted it, what a hollow joy it was, after all! The public hated and despised him. Even his so called friends and business associates toadied to him merely because they feared him. And this judge—this father he had persecuted and ruined—what a better man and citizen he was! How much more worthy of a child's love and of the esteem of the world!

What had Judge Rossmore done, after all, to deserve the frightful punishment the amalgamated interests had caused him to suffer? If he had blocked their game he had done only what his oath, his duty, commanded him to do. Such a girl as Shirley Rossmore could not have had any other kind of a father. Ah, if he had had such a daughter he might have been a better man, if only to win his child's respect and affection. John Ryder pondered long and deeply, and the more he ruminated the stronger the conviction grew upon him that the girl was right and he was wrong. Suddenly he looked at his watch. It was 1 o'clock. Roberts had told him that it would be an all night session and that a vote would probably not be taken until very late. He unhooked the telephone and, calling "central," asked for "long distance" and connection with Washington.

It was 7 o'clock when the maid entered Shirley's room with her breakfast, and she found its occupant up and dressed.

"Why, you haven't been to bed, miss!" exclaimed the girl, looking at the bed in the inner room, which seemed scarcely disturbed.

"No, Theresa, I—I couldn't sleep." Hastily pouring out a cup of tea, she added: "I must catch that 9 o'clock train to Washington. I didn't finish packing until nearly 5."

"Can I do anything for you, miss?" inquired the maid. Shirley was as popular with the servants as with the rest of the household.

"No," answered Shirley, "there are only a few things to go in my suitcase. Will you please have a cab here in half an hour?"

The maid was about to go when she suddenly thought of something she had forgotten. She held out an envelope which she had left lying on the tray.

"Oh, miss, Mr. Jorkins said to give you this and master wanted to see you as soon as you had finished your breakfast."

Shirley tore open the envelope and took out the contents. It was a check, payable to her order for $5,000 and signed "John Burkett Ryder."

A deep flush covered the girl's face as she saw the money—a flush of annoyance rather than of pleasure. This man who had insulted her, who had wronged her father, who had driven her from his home, thought he could throw his gold at her and insolently send her pay as one settles haughtily with a servant discharged for impertinence. She would have none of his money—the work she had done she would make him a present of. She replaced the check in the envelope and passed it back to Theresa.

"Give this to Mr. Ryder and tell him I cannot see him."

"But Mr. Ryder said"— faltered the girl.

"Please deliver my message as I give it," commanded Shirley with authority. "I cannot see Mr. Ryder."

The maid withdrew, but she had hardly closed the door when it was opened again and Mrs. Ryder rushed in without knocking. She was all flustered with excitement and in such a hurry that she had not even stopped to arrange her toilet.

"My dear Miss Green," she gasped, "what's this I hear—going away suddenly without giving me warning?"

"I wasn't engaged by the month," replied Shirley dryly.

"I know, dear, I know. I was thinking of myself. I've grown so used to you—how shall I get on without you? No one understands me the way you do. Dear me! The whole house is upset. Mr. Ryder never went to bed at all last night. Jefferson is going away, too—forever, he threatens. If he hadn't come and woke me up to say goodby, I should never have known you intended to leave us. My boy's going—you're going—every one's deserting me!"

Mrs. Ryder was not accustomed to such prolonged flights of oratory, and she sank exhausted on a chair, her eyes filling with tears.

"Did they tell you who I am—the daughter of Judge Rossmore?" demanded Shirley.

It had been a shock to Mrs. Ryder that morning when Jefferson burst into his mother's room before she was up and acquainted her with the events of the previous evening. The news that the Miss Green whom she had grown to love was really the Miss Rossmore of whose relations with Jefferson her husband stood in such dread was far from affecting the financier's wife as it had Ryder himself. To the mother's simple and ingenuous mind, free from prejudice and ulterior motive, the girl's character was more important than her name, and certainly she could not blame her son for loving such a woman as Shirley. Of course, it was unfortunate for Jefferson that his father felt this bitterness toward Judge Rossmore, for she herself could hardly have wished for a more sympathetic daughter-in-law. She had not seen her husband since the previous evening at dinner, so was in complete ignorance as to what he thought of this new development, but the mother sighed as she thought how happy it would make her to see Jefferson happily married to the girl of his own choice, and in her heart she still entertained the hope that her husband would see it that way and thus prevent their son from leaving them as he threatened.

"That's not your fault, my dear," she replied, answering Shirley's question. "You are yourself, that's the main thing. You mustn't mind what Mr. Ryder says. Business and worry make him irritable at times. If you must go, of course you must; you are the best judge of that, but Jefferson wants to see you before you leave." She kissed Shirley in motherly fashion and added: "He has told me everything, dear. Nothing would make me happier than to see you become his wife. He's downstairs now waiting for me to tell him to come up."

"It's better that I should not see him," replied Shirley slowly and gravely. "I can only tell him what I have already told him. My father comes first. I have still a duty to perform."

"That's right, dear," answered Mrs. Ryder. "You're a good, noble girl, and I admire you all the more for it. I'll let Jefferson be his own advocate. You'll see him for my sake!"

She gave Shirley another affectionate embrace and left the room, while the girl proceeded with her final preparations for departure. Presently there was a quick, heavy step in the corridor outside and Jefferson appeared in the doorway. He stood there waiting for her to invite him in. She looked up and greeted him cordially, yet it was hardly the kind of reception he looked for or that he considered he had a right to expect. He advanced sullenly into the room.

"Mother said she had put everything right," he began. "I guess she was mistaken."

"Your mother does not understand, neither do you," she replied seriously.

AT the meeting of the Pomona grange held at Ironton Thursday, prominent farmers presented the figures to show that their crop of beets would net them over fifty dollars per acre.

These were actual results, not results figured out on paper but results which were given backed up by the money paid out and the beets delivered and the test known. These results were not attained, however, by haphazard methods of farming but were the result of a study of the needs of the beet crop, of the plant food needed to produce a good crop and how to reduce the labor cost to a minimum by doing it the right way at the right time.

With the land of Charlevoix county capable of bringing to its owners a net profit of fifty dollars per acre, by the production of beets, the factory should be able to have a campaign lasting for four months instead of the short time that they are forced to run. It is only a question of time and a determination to know their business, by the farmers of this region and the sugar company will come to be recognized as one of the greatest benefits that can come to the people of northern Michigan.

DON'T forget to vote yes at the special election November 12, for the purpose of building city docks. The time has come when Charlevoix must get a move on herself or see her sister cities without one-half the natural advantages we have forge ahead.

November 12 will be an epoch in Charlevoix history. The carrying of the proposition will proclaim to the outside world that we are a hustling wide awake city and have the proper facilities to take care of the city's growth.

THE WHEAT.

Binding and Shocking It So as to Get Best Results.

From the time the wheat stands waving yellow in the field until it is in the hands of the miller is an important period. The cutting of the wheat may not be a difficult task, but much depends on how well the grain is gathered and bound and shocked. If the machine does not gather the grain well, a good deal of it will be lost falling down before the sickle or stringing out from beneath the aprons. Care should be taken to avoid this.

The binder should also gather the straw evenly, so that the bundles may not look ragged or part be lost in the shocking. The binder should be shifted just right, so that the bundles may be bound near the middle. Binding too close to the butts or heads will make them inconvenient to handle, as well as cause the dropping out of a part of the bundles.

The shocking of the wheat is very important, especially in those sections where rains and winds are frequent. The bundles cannot be thrown together any old way and be expected to stand the storms of wind and rain.

My experience has proved that the best and strongest shock is made in the following manner: Place three pairs of bundles in a row, then set one bundle at each end and three on each side. The caps should be placed on lengthwise of the shock and spread so they will cover the top of the shock and hang down on the sides, protecting the heads of the wheat and turning the water like the roof of a house. For twenty years we built our shocks in this manner and seldom ever lost any wheat from winds or rain. It was often necessary to go over the field after a severe windstorm and replace some of the caps, but seldom did we have to rebuild a shock.

After the wheat is all cut and shocked it is the best plan to have it thrashed as soon as it will do. It can then be stored away in a rat proof granary or hauled direct to market. We believe it is wise to sell immediately after thrashing. The higher price for which one may hold will not more than offset the shrinkage and loss in handling, and sometimes the higher price is never realized. A person had better take a few cents less than run the risk.

BEES AND HONEY.

The Way They Gather Their Harvest From the Flowers.

Bees gather honey from the nectar vessels of flowers and plants. The sugar, starch, albumen, etc., are carried up by the sap to the seed bearing pods. To a marked extent nature is assisted by the natural law of heat and cold to produce a sweetling or condensation of moisture, which we call dew. This takes place in the corolla of the flower, making it more easy for the plant to deposit its overflow of sugar, starch, albumen, etc., in the dew already in the flower.

This sweet nectar is carried up by the sap and discharged in the dew through the pores of the plant. When the sun rises evaporation takes place, and the result is a tiny drop of nectar in the cup of the flower. The bee goes to the flower and with its long silken tongue sips up this drop of nectar and deposits it into its honey sack back of the throat.

The bee is provided with a stomach for its physical well being back of this storage stomach, and all the honey that goes to this stomach is used for the life or physical demands of the bee. When the bee has its storage tank full of nectar it straightway flies to the hive and exudes it into the cell. The bee is endowed with the power of exuding as naturally as in taking, so there is nothing wonderful about it except the natural curiousness of the matter.

Experiments show that there is an intimate relation between the color of sea water and the proportion of salt the water holds in solution, the blue water containing much more salt than the green water, the difference in the two colors being entirely a matter of more or less brine.

HER SUFFERINGS ENDED

Mrs. E. S. Stacks Dies at her Home after a Long Illness

A Lady Who Will be Remembered for Her Many acts of Kindness.

Mrs. E. S. Stacks died at her home in this city Saturday morning, October 31, after a long illness.

Estella S. Hamilton was born in Brazier, St. Lawrence county, New York, May 14, 1850, and was married to E. S. Stacks, January of 1880, coming to Charlevoix five years ago, where she at once took a prominent part in the religious and social life of the city, owing to her many lovable qualities. A member of the Methodist church, she was chosen as president of the Ladies' Aid Society and the faithful service rendered will be long remembered.

Her illness dates back for several years, last winter going to Chicago in hopes that her ill health might be over come by skillful treatment only to learn that she was beyond the reach of human skill. Throughout her long illness she was a very patient sufferer, never uttering a word of complaint during the many weeks of suffering. She leaves besides her husband, two children, Donald and Mayford, and two brothers.

The funeral was held at the home Sunday afternoon, Rev. R. A. Wright officiating, burial at Brookside.

Farm and Garden

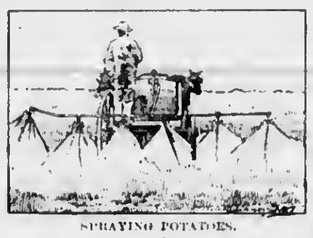
ENTERPRISE PAYS.

Progressive Methods — Good Staples Are the Secrets of Success.

The progressive farmer is the one who scores at the markets. Good methods in raising crops, the selecting of staples for which the demand is greater than the supply, these are the combinations that count for success.

One farmer in New York experimented with a spraying apparatus in raising potatoes and results justified the expense because the increased gain of sixty-seven bushels an acre gave a cash profit of $37.15 an acre, or $8.94 on the field. The spraying cost only $3.05 an acre for labor, materials, etc.

The experiment was tried on fifteen acres of potatoes, which were sprayed four times to prevent injuries by blight and insects. Three rows 180 feet long and 2½ feet apart were left unsprayed for a check. Bordeaux was applied at the rate of sixty gallons an acre at each spraying. The soil is sandy loam, and the variety of potato Carman No. 3. During the season plant lice and flea hoppers were abundant in all parts of the field, but there was no early blight. Owing to the great press of work it was impossible to make a fifth spraying and also give the field attacked proper attention in the way of cultivation. Large weeds covered the potato plants to such an extent that it would have been impossible to reach more than half the plants with a spray.



SPRAYING POTATOES.

The test rows were dug with a double moldboard plow Oct. 18 and yielded, sprayed, 134 bushels 36 pounds marketable tubers; unsprayed, 67 bushels 28 pounds, making a gain of 67 bushels 8 pounds an acre. The yield of culls was 23½ bushels an acre on the sprayed and 20 2-3 on the unsprayed. The loss from rot was somewhat greater on the unsprayed rows than on the sprayed, but not large in either case. It is doubtful, however, that the gain represented was due wholly to spraying. The owner says both sprayed and unsprayed had practically the same chance, but if anything the unsprayed rows suffered somewhat more from insects, which were treated once with paris green applied with a powder gun, while the sprayed rows received one application of paris green in bordeaux at the first spraying.

The cost of spraying fifteen acres four times was as follows: Three hundred and eighty-four pounds copper sulphate at 6 cents, $23.01; one and one-half barrels lime at $1.35, $2.03; twenty-six and one-half pounds paris green at 11 cents, $2.74; forty hours' labor for team at 25 cents, $10; forty hours for man, at 15 cents, $6; hundred and eighty-four pounds copper sulphate at 6 cents, $23.01; one and one-half barrels lime at $1.35, $2.03; twenty-six and one-half pounds paris green at 11 cents, $2.74; forty hours' labor for team at 25 cents, $10; forty hours for man, at 15 cents, $6; $3.05 an acre. At this rate the cost of each spraying was 76¼ cents. The market price of potatoes at picking time was 40 cents a bushel. At that rate the crop should be worth $40.20; subtracting $3.05 the cost of spraying, the net profit is $37.15 an acre.

SEA KALE.

There are many plants little known to the market gardener that, if rightly pushed, would enjoy a ready sale. Sea kale, for instance, will furnish a spring vegetable ahead of asparagus.

From seed sown in May good plants can be set into a permanent bed in August or September and will remain for years. Earth is lightly piled over the bed to a height of about a foot in early spring, and when the shoots come through this covering they are cut off to the roots. This gives one stalks of kale much resembling celery. Pull the leaves apart as you would celery, cook in boiling salted water until tender and serve with drawn butter, melted butter or with or without vinegar, as taste desires. This is a most delightful dish and, being extremely early, would, along with rhubarb, be a money maker.

These are only instances of the way that intelligence may make profitable.

William Tooley, well known throughout this entire region, died at the marine hospital in Chicago October 14, from heart trouble. Mr. Tooley was forty-nine years of age and had been a sailor from early boyhood. He made his home in Charlevoix county for many years, leaving here in the early nineties and has since been engaged in the Atlantic and Gulf coast trade. He was visiting his son in Milwaukee when his failing health caused him to go to the Marine hospital for treatment, and his death occurred in that institution as above noted.

At the meeting of the East Jordan board of trade last week, R. A. Brintnall was elected secretary and W. E. Palmiter, treasurer. The following committees were appointed for ensuing year: New Industries, W. A. Stroebel, F. A. Kenyon, J. W. Eppley. Advertising, W. A. Loveday, Carl Stroebel. Finance, C. H. Whittington, G. G. Glenn, W. P. Porter, R. E. Waterman, A. M. Haight. Transportation, F. E. Boos-inger, H. I. McMillan, F. D. Tower, A. E. Cross. Public improvements, John F. Kenny, Horace Hipp, H. D Olney, Martin Ruhling, R. A. Brintnall. Fair exhibits, A. E. Cross, Orrin Bartlett.

THEATRICAL

One of the best equipped productions on the road today is "The District Leader's." No expense has been spared to make a stupendous scenic garniture. The first act is a reproduction of the rotunda of the Hoffman House, New York, one of the most magnificently appointed hostelries in the United States. The second act, a scene from Chinatown, was built from sketches made by the scenic artist for this production, from studies made in San Francisco's Chinese quarters. The costumes for the chorus and principals in this act are made by a Chinese importing tailor and are replicas in silk and brocade of the royal court costumes of China. The last act is a palatial summer home and gardens of beautiful Riverside Drive, overlooking the Hudson river and Palisades.

The act fairly scintillates with electrical effects. The chorus is gowned in gauzy summer draperies from the hands of the best Parisian modistes.

The District Leader will appear at Charlevoix Theatre for one night only, Thursday, November 12.

Neighborhood Notes

When the Michigan Central southbound train drew near Trowbridge, last Friday, Mrs. William Fisher, wife of a lake captain and residing at 1511 Seymour street, Sault Ste. Marie, became violently insane and jumped through a car window.

She was finally found at a fishing club near Vanderbilt.

Mrs. Fisher was enroute from the Soo to Detroit. She left a note saying that she wanted the money she had given to her son Eddie in Detroit.

Near Wolverine, farther north, the woman smashed some of the car windows and showed signs of mental abberation, but she quieted down again. It was only temporarily, however, for her tragic disappearance occurred soon after the train left Wolverine. The conductor stated she acted strangely after the train left the Soo.

Her furs, wraps and purse, which contained about $13 were left with the station agent at Vanderbilt. In the note regarding the money it was also stated that her body would be found in the bottom of the river.

The deal was made by Mr. Bosworth who purchased the interest of his partners.

The Central Lake Canning Co. finished a 23 day run on pumpkins and squash on Friday last, using up in that time nearly 550 tons of raw material. This quantity of raw material taken in itself conveys some idea of the amount used. Suppose we reduce it to pies, for that is the ultimate destination of the finished product. In one day they canned enough squash to make nearly 50,000 pies, such as mother use to make. Or the entire quantity handled would make in the round numbers of 1,250,000 pies. If laid side by side, this number of pies would make a continuous row of pies along the right of way of the P. M. R. R. reaching from here to Grand Rapids, and have a nice little bunch of pies left. It would require something like 200,000 dozen of eggs besides some 600,000 quarts of milk to say nothing of the other ingredients which enter into the make-up of a good old fashioned pumpkin pie. The company will have a few days run on beets and red kidney beans after which it will close for the season.

A BALD-HEADED WOMAN

Shorn of her Crown of Beauty Loses in Love and Marriage.

Hair is certainly most necessary to woman. Who could love and marry a bald-headed woman? What charms could one array to off-set such a disfigurement?

A woman's goal is usually love and marriage. Her crowning glory is her hair. The loss of her hair mars her beauty, happiness and success. Yet, right here in Charlevoix, there are thousands of women who are neglecting or injuring their hair to such an extent that it is only a matter of time when it will be utterly ruined.

Many women destroy the beauty of their hair through thoughtlessness or ignorance of certain facts. They use curling irons over-heated, or to excess, which destroys the natural oil of the hair, causing it to split, break and come out. They do not shampoo their hair often enough, or too often. They use soaps or preparations which contain ingredients positively harmless to the scalp and hair.

As the result of such treatment, dandruff is created, the hair loosens loses color, falls out, and baldness commences, unless prompt precautions are taken in time. Then again, microbes and certain diseases bring about unhealthy scalp and hair conditions.

Almost anyone may rid themselves of dandruff and diseased scalp and hair if they will but use the right remedy. We have that remedy and we positively guarantee that it will either cure dandruff and baldness or it will not cost the user anything.

That's a pretty broad statement, but we will back it and prove it with our own money. Rexall "93" Hair tonic is the remedy that will grow hair and overcome all scalp and hair troubles. It will grow hair even on bald heads, unless all life in the hair roots is extinguished, the follicles closed, and the scalp is glazed and shiny. It gets its name from the fact that it grew hair in 93 cases out of 100 cases, where it received a thoroughly hard impartial and practical test.

We want you to try Rexalls "93" Hair Tonic at our risk. You surely cannot lose anything by doing so, while you have every thing to gain. You had better think this over, and then come in and see us about this offer. You will be well repaid for your visit to our store. The Ivy Drug store, A. B. Fleischer, proprietor.

The Sheet Anchor.

"That was my sheet anchor"—i. e., my best hope, my last refuge—the sheet anchor of a ship, which in stress of weather is the sailors' chief dependence. The word sheet is a corruption of the word shote (thrown out), meaning the anchor "thrown out" in foul weather. The Greeks and Romans said, "My sacred anchor," referring to the sheet anchor, which was always dedicated to some god.

MRS. COHEN

AYERS BLOCK, opposite Ferguson House CHARLEVOIX, MICHIGAN

THE LION AND THE MOUSE.

By CHARLES KLEIN.

A Story of American Life Novelized From the Play by ARTHUR HORNBLOW.

Copyright, 1904, by G. W. Dillingham Company.

"Nothing can be put right until my father is restored to honor and position."

"But why should you punish me because my father fails to regard the matter as we do?" demanded Jefferson rebelliously.

"Why should I punish myself—why should we punish those nearest and dearest?" answered Shirley gently. "The victims of human injustice always suffer where their loved ones are tortured. Why are things as they are? I don't know. I know they are—that's all."

The young man strode nervously up and down the room, while she gazed listlessly out of the window, looking for the cab that was to carry her away from this house of disappointment. He pleaded with her:

"I have tried honorably and failed. You have tried honorably and failed. Isn't the sting of impotent failure enough to meet without striving against a hopeless love?" He approached her and said softly: "I love you, Shirley—don't drive me to desperation. Must I be punished because you have failed? It's unfair. The sins of the fathers should not be visited upon the children."

"But they are—it's the law," said Shirley, with resignation.

"The law?" he echoed.

"Yes, the law," insisted the girl; "man's law, not God's, the same unjust law that punishes my father—man's law which is put into the hands of the powerful of the earth to strike at the weak."

She sank into a chair and, covering up her face, wept bitterly. Between her sobs she cried brokenly:

"I believed in the power of love to soften your father's heart, I believed that with God's help I could bring him to see the truth. I believed that truth and love would make him see the light, but it hasn't. I stayed on and on, hoping against hope until the time has gone by and it's too late to save him—too late! What can I do now? My going to Washington is a forlorn hope, a last, miserable, forlorn hope, and in this hour, the darkest of all, you ask me to think of myself—my love, your love, your happiness, your future, my future! Ah, wouldn't it be sublime selfishness?"

Jefferson kneeled down beside the chair and, taking her hand in his, tried to reason with her and comfort her.

"Listen, Shirley," he said; "do not do something you will surely regret. You are punishing me not only because I have failed, but because you have failed too. It seems to me that if you believed it possible to accomplish so much, if you had so much faith—that you have lost your faith rather quickly. I believed in nothing, I had no faith, and yet I have not lost hope."

She shook her head and gently withdrew her hand.

"It is useless to insist, Jefferson. Until my father is cleared of this stain our lives—yours and mine—must lie apart."

Some one coughed, and, startled, they both looked up. Mr. Ryder had entered the room unobserved and stood watching them. Shirley immediately rose to her feet indignant, resenting this intrusion on her privacy after she had declined to receive the financier. Yet, she reflected quickly, how could she prevent it? He was at home, free to come and go as he pleased, but she was not compelled to remain in the same room with him. She picked up the few things that lay about and, with a contemptuous toss of her head, retreated into the inner apartment, leaving father and son alone together.

"Hum," grunted Ryder senior. "I rather thought I should find you here, but I didn't quite expect to find you on your knees—dragging our pride in the mud."

"That's where our pride ought to be," retorted Jefferson savagely. He felt in the humor to say anything, no matter what the consequences.

"So she has refused you again, eh?" said Ryder senior, with a grin.

"Yes," rejoined Jefferson, with growing irritation. "She objects to my family. I don't blame her."

The financier smiled grimly as he answered:

"Your family in general—me in particular, eh? I gleaned that much when I came in." He looked toward the door of the room in which Shirley had taken refuge, and, as if talking to himself, he added: "A curious girl with an inverted point of view; sees everything different to others. I want to see her before she goes."

He walked over to the door and raised his hand as if he were about to knock. Then he stopped as if he had changed his mind, and, turning toward his son, he demanded:

"Do you mean to say that she has done with you?"

"Yes," answered Jefferson bitterly.

"Finally?"

"Yes, finally—forever!"

"Does she mean it?" asked Ryder senior skeptically.

"Yes; she will not listen to me while her father is still in peril."

There was an expression of half amusement, half admiration, on the financier's face as he again turned toward the door.

"It's like her, just like her," he muttered.

He knocked boldly at the door.

"Who's there?" cried Shirley from within.

"It is I—Mr. Ryder. I wish to speak to you."

"I must beg you to excuse me," came the answer. "I cannot see you."

Jefferson interfered.

"Why do you want to add to the girl's misery? Don't you think she has suffered enough?"

"Do you know what she has done?" said Ryder, with pretended indignation. "She has insulted me grossly. I never was so humiliated in my life. She has returned the check I sent her last night in payment for her work on my biography. I mean to make her take that money. It's hers. She needs it. Her father's a beggar. She must take it back. It's only flaunting her contempt for me in my face, and I won't permit it."

"I don't think her object in refusing that money was to flaunt contempt in your face or in any way humiliate you," answered Jefferson. "She feels she has been selling under false colors and desires to make some reparation."

"And so she sends me back my money, feeling that will pacify me, perhaps repair the injury she has done me, perhaps buy me into entering into her plan of helping her father, but it won't. It only increases my determination to see her and her"— Suddenly changing the topic, he asked, "When do you leave us?"

Velocity of Sound.

The velocity of sound depends upon the medium through which the sound has to travel. The mean velocity of sound in air is 1,125 feet per second, while the velocity of sound in water is given at 4,708 feet per second, being about four times quicker than in air. Cast iron conveys sound at the rate of 16,822 feet per second, or about sixteen times more quickly than air.—New York American.

The Youth's Companion for Christmas.

There are three good reasons why the Youth's Companion makes one of the best gifts for Christmas time, for a birthday, for any occasion when a present is in order.

IT NEVER FAILS TO GIVE PLEASURE

There is something in every issue of the Companion for every member of the family. The children never pass it by, and the parents are restless until the children are restless and put it down to go to bed.

IT IS EASY TO ORDER BY MAIL.

You need not go through the vexation of Christmas shopping to make a present of The Companion. Sit down in the quiet of your own home, and send the subscription. The Companion will be delivered wherever you say, on Christmas morning.

IT COMES EVERY WEEK IN THE YEAR

Nine out of ten Christmas presents have lost their novelty by New Year's. The Companion provides a continual pleasure, for it is renewed 52 times until Christmas comes again. Is there another present equal to it that costs so little $1.75?

The new subscriber receives free the double Holiday numbers and The Companion calendar for 1909, "In Grandmother's Garden," lithographed in 13 colors.

Full illustrated announcement of the new volume for 1909 will be sent with sample copies of the paper to any address free.

Grange

The season of the year has arrived for the pushing of grange work and systematic effort for increased membership. Let it not be said that there is any where within your jurisdiction a person, eligible to membership, who have not had the advantages of the order presented to them. Make a list of all who would make desirable members and then whenever it looks like a favorable moment present the subject to them, sooner or later the time will arrive when you can fold their application away in your pocket ready to present at the next meeting, not only with a feeling of pleasure over a victory won, but with an added feeling of pleasure, that another tiller of the soil has decided to join hands with you for the elevation and advancement of the American farmer.

South Arm Grange No. 815.

South Arm grange met October 31, and was opened by the worthy overseer the worthy master being absent.

The grange was to initiate in the third and fourth degrees, but one of the candidates failed to be present, so they decided to put off the initiation until the next meeting. The lecturer's hour consisted of songs, recitations, readings and several short speeches by the different members. A very interesting speech on raising chickens was given by Brother Keat. Brother Liskum made a report of his visit to the Pomona Grange meeting at Ironton. Several of our members attended the Pomona meeting. The grange chose sides for their regular annual hunt. The master appointed Brothers James Keat and Willard Robinson captains of the hunt. The hunt is to be Friday, November 6. The supper will be the following Saturday evening.

The ladies of the grange organized a club to be known as the "Sister Circle." The club will meet with Sister Mary Stanke, November 5. Closed in form.

STORY ABOUT A WASP.

Instinct Shown by Insect In Hunt For Hidden Food.

A well known naturalist tells an interesting story illustrating how bees and wasps find their way back to their food, not to their nests, says the Chicago News. He saw a sand wasp in his garden hunting about for caterpillars, and, having found one about an inch long, it began biting it from head to tail, soon reducing it to a mass of pulp. It then rolled half of it into a ball and prepared to carry it off.

Being at the time in the middle of a fine leafed climbing plant, it proceeded before flying away to note where it was leaving the other half of its prey. To do this it hovered in front of it for a few seconds, then took small circles in front of it and even larger circles around the entire plant. Having thus noted the surroundings, it flew away.

It came back in a few minutes, having evidently deposited its first load in its home. It made a circle around the bush, and then, alighting on a certain leaf, it ran inside the mass. The green remnant of the caterpillar was lying on a leaf inside, but as that leaf was not connected with the one on which the wasp alighted it missed it and got lost in the thick foliage. Presently it came out again, and, having taken a circuit around the plant, it alighted in the same spot as at first. The observer noticed that there was a small cluster of seed pods at that point, and these the wasp had evidently taken as a guide mark. But it missed the caterpillar again, and again came out and made the circuit of the plant and alighted in the same spot as before.

This it repeated five or six times, and, having failed to find its prey, it seemed to get angry, for it buzzed about quite rapidly until after a search that was remarkable for its persistency it succeeded in finding the caterpillar, with which it flew off without taking any further notice of the locality.

MAN AND OBJECT.

An Interesting Game That Any Number Can Play.

Two persons go out of the room and, after agreeing together as to what they shall represent, come back again and sit down side by side in front of the company. One of the two takes the part of some well known person, and the other represents an object which is closely connected with that person—for instance, George Washington and the hatchet or the king of England and his crown.

After the two take their seats the other players in turn ask each of them a question, to which both the man and the object must answer only "Yes" or "No" until the right person and the right article have been guessed. The first player may perhaps ask the man, "Are you alive?" The man will reply, "Yes." Then the object may be asked, "Are you made of wood?" "No." Then the second in order asks a question of each, and so on along the line until all have had a turn at questioning or until the person and object have been rightly guessed.—Philadelphia Record.

The Farmers' Autos.

The farm paper that constantly discounts the automobile is not very enterprising. If you were to get at the facts you would find about as many road hogs who drive horses as who run autos. The machine is becoming popular with farmers too. One prosperous little Iowa town of about 1,500 boasts of only three cling buggies, but all through the surrounding country farmers own and use them extensively. These are conservative, practical men, too, not sports. The self propelled vehicle has many advantages, chief of which is a great influence on road improvement.

First Smoker—Yes, I tell you a clay pipe is the thing.

Second Smoke.—Well, I admit there's one great advantage about a clay pipe. When you let it fall on the pavement you don't need to bother about picking the blamed thing up again.—Manchester Guardian.

A CALIFORNIA FAIR

evening entertainments at the pavillion. It was arranged in this manner, Tuesday, Alta day; Wednesday, Visalia day; Thursday, Tulare day; Friday, Lindsay day; Saturday, Portaville day.

It Charlevoix county would try this method, say Boyne City have a day or display with home talent in the evening. Charlevoix, Central Lake, Ironton and East Jordan with the granges to exhibit and strive one with the other for an agricultural diploma for the granges; with good speed programs perhaps the people would wake up to the fact that a good agricultural fair is as good an advertisement of their homes and their county as they could ask for.

The horticultural display was very beautiful for there is beauty to be found in gardening. The floral display is what I expected of California, had it of been otherwise I should have been disappointed. The high school and other grades had a very fine display, also the Jennie Wren sewing club consisting of very young girls, the ladies fancy work department, also the Mexican drawn work, weaving and other mexican acts in the display was wonderous.

Of course a great many was interested in the thornless cactus, for forage uses it is marvelous. There were fifty kinds of cereals exhibited. The citrous fruit was all you could wish for and of course you will not be surprised when I tell you that southern California has shipped 20,230 car loads of citrous fruit with 400 cars still to be shipped. The crop is divided thus 21,421 cars of oranges and 1,912 cars of lemons, practically all the 400 cars are lemons. If I should tell you of all the different kinds of fruit I saw at the fair it would take your readers so long to read my letter, it might try their patience to much, so it may be better to simply say that the Tulare fair was a grand success.

ELEVENTH DISTRICT CONVENTION

Of W. C. T. U. Met in Charlevoix Last Week Tuesday and Wednesday

OVER THIRTY DELEGATES PRESENT

Charlevoix Union Awarded the Banner for Increase

Old Officers are Re-elected—Meetings were Full of Interest—Other Convention Notes.

The 24th annual convention of the Woman's Christian Temperance Union of the Eleventh District of Michigan, held in Charlevoix, November 3-4, 1908, in the Methodist church, beginning Tuesday afternoon at 2:30, may be considered a success in spite of some disappointments at the first.

There were twenty-three delegates from different parts of the district, Mrs. B. P. Howard, district president being at her best. Miss Margaret Bilz of Spring Lake, "Y" secretary, was in attendance throughout the convention and had charge of the table of literature. Opening service scripture and prayer was conducted by Miss Bilz, after this seating of convention, roll call and appointment of committees. Memorial service in charge of Mrs. H. A. Putnam, was beautifully carried out, eight deaths were reported from unions in the district, Traverse City reporting four. Mrs. S. A. Marting sang a beautiful solo which closed this service.

The evening scripture and prayer was by Rev. H. A. Putnam. Music and greeting followed. Rev. R. A. Wright welcomed the convention on behalf of the churches, George R. Green for the Young Peoples' societies and Mrs. H. A. Parmalee for the local union. District President Howard gave the response. The address of the evening was by Miss Bilz and was full of interest, inviting those present to take a trip with her in the "water wagon." Beginning with Maine, she took us over the states now under prohibition, Michigan not among them altogether as yet, but we are hoping, working and praying that the time is not far distant when Michigan too will be a prohibition state. God speed the day.

Wednesday morning after devotionals by Mrs. Stone of Petoskey, and secretary's journal, was a reading of "Our Belief, Principles and Platforms." The superintendents of departments gave their reports, also the general officers. This was followed by the election of officers for the ensuing year. By this time the attendance of voting delegates had reached thirty-three. Mrs. Howard was reelected president with but two dissenting votes, her own being one of them. Corresponding secretary, Mrs. Jennie Alcox, of Charlevoix; Recording Secretary, Mrs. Hattie Lawton of Petoskey; Treasurer, Mrs. Wallace of Mancelona; Mrs. Howard appointing Mrs. M. E. Heston, formerly of Charlevoix now of East Jordan, vice president at large.

Following the election of officers, Mrs. Jennie Alcox, president of the Charlevoix union, and in their behalf in a few loving words of appreciation presented a beautiful bouquet of roses and carnations to the reelected president. The following superintendents of departments were chosen.

Loyal Temperance Legion, Mrs. Hattie Hoats, Petoskey; Work among lumbermen, Mrs. O. J. Gager, Boyne Falls; anti-narcotics, Mrs. Mary Mason, Mancelona; Medal contest, Mrs. M. M. Bailey, Benzonia; Flower mission, Mrs. Lizzie Burns, Charlevoix; Literature, Mrs. Sarah M. Wilkinson, Charlevoix; Press and parliamentary usage, Mrs. Mary E. Heston, East Jordon; Red Letter days, Mrs. Porter, Petoskey; Soldiers, Sailors and Sabbath observance, Mrs. Emma Cameron, Central Lake; medical temperance, Mrs. Martha Joiner, Benzonia.

Wednesday afternoon, Mrs. J. A. Sulna conducted the devotional exercises. Several very interesting papers were read. "Origin of the White Ribbon Badge, what it is to us, what to others," was read by Mrs. Wallace. The paper by Mrs. C. A. Osborne of Petoskey, was an excellent one, subject of which was, "Mothers and Girls." Mr. Swift of Benloh Home, was in attendance and gave an interesting talk.

A symposium, (a) The Advance Temperance Movement: Woman's part in it, Mrs. Hattie Lawton; (b) The schemes of the enemy, Mrs. Adelia Irish of Traverse City. Miss Bilz was very helpful during the convention.

The evening was full of good things! Rev. R. A. Wright conducted the devotionals. Good music, vocal and instrumental. Mrs. A. L. Coolter, vocal solo; Mrs. A. M. Burdick, vocal solo with chorus by six girls; "There's a shadow on the Home," Eva Munyon piano solo and Mrs. Davison a violin solo, both were exceptionally fine. Drs. A. M. and F. H. Wilkinson each a vocal solo. The music was all choice.

Of the contestants who were to take part but three were present. From Benzonia one, have not the name; Charlevoix, Margaret McNeil; Benlah Home, Floyd Bishop. The selection of the Benzonia contestant was an dialect and carried off the medal, but the others were not forgotten, a book being presented to each. The convention closed with Wednesday evening. Invitations for the next convention were extended by the delegation from Petoskey also Herman Swift of Benlah Home, who said he could care for them all. Mr. Swift has a big heart big enough to "mother" and "father" all the boys who need help and sympathy.

The prize banner was presented Charlevoix union, it having gained the most new members during the year of any union in the district. It was quite a surprise to us. Traverse City "Willard" having held the banner the past year. Mrs. Curtiss of that union in a few well chosen words gave the banner into the hands of Mrs. Jennie Alcox, president of the local union, and it is up to us to keep it if we can.

Much credit is due the ladies of the Baptist, Episcopal and Methodist churches for the manner in which they served meals to the delegates. As the convention closed on Wednesday evening, instead of Thursday noon as was expected, the ladies of the Congregational church did not have the opportunity of serving dinner on that day as they had planned.

When dinner was served Wednesday, at each place had been placed a carnation, furnished by Mrs. B. B. Blair (as also other flowers and sprays of green on the table). President Howard called attention to the flowers, saying "What a fine thing it is to have a greenhouse belong to the W. C. T. U."

On behalf of the local union we desire to express thanks to those who opened their homes to the delegates and all who in any way helped in making the convention so much of a success as it was, to the committees and all who responded to the call of the committees.

A resolution of thanks was read Wednesday evening by the chairman of the resolution committee, which (over the whole ground but we have not a copy.

The following delegates were in attendance from neighboring towns: Petoskey, Mesdames Osborne, Lawton, Cross, Stone, Bolieo, Stowell, Howard; Mancelona, Mesdames Wallace, Lockhoss, Wilcox; Elk Rapids Mrs. F. M. Bosworth; East Jordan, Mesdames Robertson and Heston; Chebaygan, Mrs. Gregg; Central Lake, Mrs. G. W. Morrow; Traverse City, Mesdames Curtis and Irish; Benzonia, Mesdames Marshall, Joiner, Heman.

A CALIFORNIA RABBIT HUNT

Three Thousand Killed at One Drive at Delano.

A few days ago there was a rabbit drive at Delano. The weather being perfect, there was one of the largest crowds that ever assembled at Delano out to the rabbit drive. It was a noteworthy affair as well as a striking success in the way of lessening the number of rabbits which have grown to be a pest in the vicinity, as well as the ground squirrel and the gopher.

People were present from Los Angeles and Tulare and from a good proportion of the many intervening points, the line of people as it was formed was eight miles long. The corral into which the rabbits were herded and slaughtered was built several miles from the town near a ranch. Between 2500 and 3000 rabbits and three coyotes were caught and killed in the corol, and as many more rabbits and several times as as many coyotes made their escape through the lines or around the wings of the corral. Fully one hundred teams were in the line besides many on horseback, but most of the work of driving was done by people on foot. One of the coyotes captured was lassoed by a vaquero in the open field.

The drive began at 9:30 o'clock a. m. and ended at 1:30 p.m. After the rabbits were killed a barbecue was served at the ranch near by and it was nightfall before all of the immense crowd had returned to town. After the 1000 pounds of barbecued beef had been disposed of a number of the expert horsemen present gave an exhibition of broncho busting, and the days activities closed with a dance in Delano which was largely attended. The drive will result in materially lessening the damage by the rabbits and another drive will be held in the near future in order to stamp out the pest.

MUST BORROW MONEY

State Finances are very Low at the Present Time.

Application has been made by the state administration to Detroit banks for a loan of $750,000 in order to provide funds for current expenses.

Absolute necessity compelled the state officials to secure funds.

During the primary recount the state treasury was close hauled for funds and the statement was made at that time that Michigan would be forced to borrow about $1,000,000 in order to meet general expenses until February, 1909, at which time the tax moneys will begin to come in.

It is twelve years since the state has been under the necessity of borrowing funds to pay salaries and running expenses.

THEATRICAL

The District Leader.

A comedy with music well describes "The District Leader" which is to be seen at the Charlevoix Theatre Thursday evening, November 12. Joseph E. Howard's music, a real plot and an excellent company have made this production one of the hits of the season. It is enough to say Mr. Howard wrote the music. That fact alone guarantees the catchiness and beauty of the songs which are plentiful in "The District Leader", but although the writing of the plot is somethings new for the popular composer, in this his latest effort, the story is as much of a feature as the music and is of the degree of excellence. As every number in "The District Leader" is a pronounced hit, some idea of the quality of the plot may be obtained. Miss Grace Sloan heads a company made up in part of C. Milford Giffen, Albert Benier, Frank Weed, Gustave Neville, Naomi Dale and and Vera Hamilton and is assisted by a large chorus. All the principals have made hits in their respective parts and together with such song successes as "Heart to Let", "What's the use of Dreaming", "Same Old Story", "Home is Home" and "Something doing Around My Heart," have made "The District Leader" a well rounded entertainment calculated to please the present up-to-date audiences.

OUR NEIGHBORING COUNTIES

Emmet and Antrim Elect the Entire Republican Ticket.

Antrim county elected the entire Republican ticket by the following majorities. Representative, N. W. Burdick, 1412; Judge of Probate, E. R. Harris, 951; Sheriff, William H. Kittle, 1520; Clerk, James Deevy, 1447; Treasurer, Warren B. Beams, 1400; Register, Charles S. Guile, 1180; Prosecuting Attorney, Clark E. Densmore, 1130.

Emmet county elects the entire Republican ticket by the following majorities. Representative, Morrice, 1133; Judge of Probate, Denil, 304; Sheriff, Jones, 1413; Clerk, Dickison, 1297; Treasurer, Crandall, 1200; Register, Ide, 995; Prosecuting Attorney, Smith, 2322.

These returns are both unofficial.

PARK IMPROVEMENTS

Decided Upon at Meeting of the Council Thursday Night.

At the last meeting of the council it was decided to clean up the city park, work to commence at once, under the supervision of the committee on park and public buildings. While it is not thought that it will be possible to make a complete job, the dead timber will be cut out and the underbrush and low-hanging limbs removed. The plan is to cut the same into wood, which will reimburse the city for the cost of the improvement.

This is a move in the right direction, as the park has been neglected too long and with this slight beginning a great change will soon be apparent and with a little more work next season we will have a park, which cannot be excelled by any city of like size.

COUNTY NORMAL NOTES.

Monday, November 2, Maude Cross of East Jordan, joined the class making our number fifteen.

The manual training class have been weaving mats and baskets of reeds.

Pearl Sheldon of East Jordan, visited the normal Friday.

Florence Sheldon and Margaret Ryan were absent part of last week on account of sickness.

For an observation lesson Friday afternoon the normal class visited Miss Jarvis' room in the north ward.

Miss Lewis spent Sunday in East Jordan and Alma Brodie took charge of her room Monday morning until the boat arrived.

Tuesday morning the normal class with Miss Himes, Superintendent Woodley and the boys of the senior class, visited the third ward voting place. The men in charge explained the method of voting and counting votes so that in the afternoon the high school and normal each held an election. The normal elected Mr. Chafin as president of the United States.

ARE AGAIN THE WINNERS

Charlevoix Defeats Harbor Springs in hot Game Saturday

SCORE ELEVEN TO NOTHING

Game was won by Individual Playing Rather than Team Work

Next Saturday They Will Meet East Jordan in Benefit Game—Large Attendance Hoped for.

The Charlevoix high school foot ball team met and defeated the husky team from Harbor Springs in the hardest game of the season Saturday. The visitors who outweighed the local team nearly ten pounds to the man and combined with the snap and speed with which they ran through a preliminary signal practice, especially as the locals seemed far below the standard set in the Petoskey game of last Saturday, looked from the side lines to be an easy winner.

The lack of practice on the part of Charlevoix during the past week probably accounts for their being off color, as at no time since last Saturday had the team been together.

Charlevoix won the toss and Captain Small chose to defend the south goal. Harbor Springs kicked and Charlevoix carried the ball back to about the 40 yard line, where on the first play Captain Small ran 70 yards for a touchdown Levinson failed to kick a difficult goal. During the remainder of the half Harbor Springs seemed to have a little better of it as the ball was in Charlevoix's territory with the locals fighting hard to prevent a touchdown. Twice the visitors worked the ball within ten yards of the goal where the line by a stone wall of defence held for downs. The half ended with the ball near the middle of the field. Charlevoix 5—Harbor Springs 0.

In the second half Charlevoix kicked to Harbor Springs, who by line series of line smashes, largely, carried the ball again to Charlevoix's ten yard line, where they were held for. Charlevoix failed to make the necessary 10 yards. Things looked dark for Charlevoix as Harbor Springs had the ball on the ten yard line, 4th third down the visitors attempted a drop kick but fumbled and the ball went over. From this time on the game was Charlevoix's, as they seemed for the first time to be working together. They worked the ball down to about the forty yard line, Paddock dodging through a broken field, got away with a 30 yard run for a touchdown. Levinson kicked goal and with but four minutes to play the game was won. The half ended with the ball in Charlevoix's possession in the middle of the field Score Charlevoix 11, Harbor Springs 0.

The team work of Harbor Springs was good, but fumbling at critical times weakened their plays. "Buck" their Indian full-back is probably the best individual player in northern Michigan. Nearly all of their offensive work was built around him and he was in every defensive ploy either breaking up interference or getting the man with the ball. With the exception of the line, which held remarkably well when a gain meant a touchdown for Harbor Springs, the locals won the game by individual playing rather than the team work which characterized the Charlevoix-Petoskey game.

The next game will be with East Jordan who is confident of winning.

In as much as it is a benefit game for the team it is hoped that the people of Charlevoix will show their appreciation for good, clean manly sport by coming out to this, the last game of a successful season. Coach Wilson is justly pleased with his team as he has brought them to a standard where they rank well with any team in northern Michigan.

Neighborhood Notes

Manton has troubles of its own. President McAfee has sued the village for damages to his mill property by reason of the flood there last spring, and now the council has asked him to resign his position.

At the recent sessions of the boards of supervisors of Antrim and Kalkaska counties an appropriation of $500 was made by the former county and $300 by the latter to pay the expense of dredging a seven-foot channel through Torch river, a portion of which has been so badly filled with sand for some time that the inland boats have made the run through the river with difficulty. The contract for dredging has been let to Captain Joseph Hawley and Ira Sharp, who began work last week. They will use a sand pump, which has been shipped from Monroe. A scow and one of the inland boats for steam will be used in the work. Since the close of navigation they have constructed a breakwater at the entrance to Torch lake, and they feel confident that after the work is completed there will be no further filling of the channel. The contract calls for a channel seven feet in depth, twenty-five feet in width, and thirty-five rods in length. This is the result of a petition circulated by Captain Hawley.

Dennis Alward, secretary of the republican state central committee, is serving in his last campaign, if a statement he made Wednesday is to be taken literally. However, Mr. Alward has held the same views before, but the committee has always refused to allow him to retire and has insisted that he continue to serve the republican party as the man at the tiller of the committee.

"I've been 11 years in the office," said Mr. Alward Wednesday, "and it is too wearing. This is my last campaign, and two years from now I will not be a candidate for the secretaryship."

The auditor-general has received from the warden of the state prison at Jackson $49,934.59 which represents the amount received by the prison for the sale of binder twine manufactured at the new plant, over and above the cost of the raw material used.

L. H. Henry, representing the Eastern Power Co., which is conducting the project of harnessing the Au Sable river and furnishing the Saginaw valley with electric power, has applied to the Saginaw council for a franchise to sell light and power in the city of Saginaw. A similar application will be made to the Bay City council.

The company is building 12 dams varying in height from 25 to 40 feet. It has purchased the entire right of way along the river from Mio to Au Sable. The company will also make propositions to Au Sable, Oscoda, West Branch, Grayling, Gaylord, Standish, Alpena, Tawas City and East Tawas.

Equal Suffragists of Michigan will drop all their regular and routine work and for the next year or a longer time, if required, devote all energy to securing a petition of 100,000 names of Michigan men and women to be presented to congress. The petition will be part of a roll of one million names of people who ask congress to grant women equal political rights with men.

The state convention of Women Sufferagists meeting at Bay City last week decided that Michigan could produce 100,000 persons who will go on record as favoring the elective franchise of women. The action was taken in response to appeals from the international association, which has asked every state in the union where Women Sufferage is not in force to secure the congressional petition.

Michigan Sufferagists will abandon this year even their activity before the legislature to give their time to the petition.

Mrs. Clara B. Arthur of Detroit, was Friday afternoon re-elected state president of the association. Mae Bontell of Detroit, was elected secretary and Mrs. May Stocking Knaggs of Bay City, treasurer. Auditors are Rev. Olivia Carpenter Woodman, Paw Paw, and W. J. Emory, president of the Michigan Federation of Labor.

A Remarkable Prediction.

Manasseh Cutler of Massachusetts, in a circular in 1787 "booming" the settlement which the New Englanders were about to plant on the Ohio at the mouth of the Muskingum, declared that "the current down the Ohio and the Mississippi" for produce and merchandise of all sorts would one day "be more crowded than any other streams on earth," which was a remarkable prediction, considering that it was made twenty years before Fulton's Clermont was launched in the Hudson, which was the first steamboat in the world ever put in successful operation.

BEAUTIFUL BLOCK SYSTEM.

How to Arrange Trees Along Streets and Parkways.

The question has frequently been asked if the uniform planting of streets necessarily involves placing the trees at uniform distances apart. As the writer uses the term uniform it does not—in fact, if the width of the parkway allows, street trees should be grouped rather than planted singly. It is just as well to preserve a uniform spacing unless such interferes with drives or paths leading into private property or obscures some exceptionally fine view from same. In such cases it is best to so adjust the trees that certain ones may be several feet removed from the position wherein uniform spacing would place them. But in any event plant street trees.

Those taking up neighborhood or community improvement should obtain expert opinions as to how best to plant whole blocks along the front property line. At present we either find ugly fences, dirty and conventional hedges or, what is still worse, the "open lawn front."

Workers for the beautiful block system should see that after uniform street trees there follows uniform treatment of parkways, says the Los Angeles Times. For this purpose grass looks well, but is hard to maintain under much shade. When a street is first planted and before the trees are much in evidence whole blocks of parkway planted to scarlet verbena make an impressive sight, and the plants require as little care as any that may be obtainable. If one objects to scarlet or lurid and luminous shades, white verbenas may be used. Uniformity of street planting shows very plainly a spirit of cooperation and friendly neighborhood feeling, a desire to create real beauty and relegate personal wishes to the background when questions of community interests are at issue. Only with such a spirit prevalent may the maximum amount of civic beauty be obtained. Furthermore, where all agree on a method of planting or treatment all take a pride in maintaining their own frontage up to a reasonable standard. In time this co-operation extends to other matters, and also at before we are aware we are living in the "city beautiful."

Little Things Count.

An improvement company subdivided a farm, and in place of cutting down a large tree in the sidewalk they went to some expense to lay a stone walk around both sides of it. As no one purchased the lot by the tree in that it died from lack of moisture. Some one removed it for wood, and a family near by planted flowers in the circle. Then the family left the neighborhood, and attending to the space was "nobody's business." Year after year hundreds of people walked by the place daily. This year a man a half block from the circle had a tree planted in it. The tree is growing. A great many have spoken well about it. He did not have to do it, but he did it. He does not expect to buy the lot, but his little girl sees the tree every day. Every locality has little opportunities for all who are willing to do such little things.

The ground under the city of San Salvador is full of caverns of unknown depths. A man was once digging a well there. At the last stroke he gave with his pick the bottom fell out, and he and his pick fell through. Nobody knows where. At least so "they say."

THE LION AND THE MOUSE.

By CHARLES KLEIN.

A Story of American Life Novelized From the Play by ARTHUR HORNBLOW.

COPYRIGHT, 1906, BY C. W. DILLINGHAM COMPANY.

"Now—at once—that is, I—don't know," answered Jefferson, embarrassed. "The fact is my faculties are numbed. I seem to have lost my power of thinking. Father," he exclaimed, "you see what a wreck you have made of our lives!"

"Now, don't moralize," replied his father testily; "as if your own selfishness in desiring to possess that girl wasn't the mainspring of all your actions." Waving his son out of the room, he added: "Now, leave me alone with her for a few moments. Perhaps I can make her listen to reason."

Jefferson stared at his father as if he feared he were out of his mind.

"What do you mean? Are you"— he ejaculated.

"Go—go; leave her to me," commanded the financier. "Slam the door when you go out, and she'll think we've both gone. Then come up again presently."

The stratagem succeeded admirably. Jefferson gave the door a vigorous pull, and John Ryder stood quiet, waiting for the girl to emerge from sanctuary. He did not have to wait long. The door soon opened, and Shirley came out slowly. She had her hat on and was drawing on her gloves, for through her window she had caught a glimpse of the cab standing at the curb. She started on seeing Ryder standing there motionless, and she would have retreated had he not intercepted her.

"It is useless to insist, Jefferson."

"I wish to speak to you, Miss—Rossmore," he began.

"I have nothing to say," answered Shirley frigidly.

"Why did you do this?" he asked, holding out the check.

"Because I do not want your money," she replied, with hauteur.

"It was yours. You earned it," he said.

"No. I came here hoping to influence you to help my father. The work I did was part of the plan. It happened to fall my way. I took it as a means to get to your heart."

"But it is yours. Please take it. It will be useful."

"No," she said scornfully. "I can't tell you how low I should fall in my own estimation if I took your money. Money," she added, with ringing contempt, "why, that's all there is to you! It's your god! Shall I make your god my god? No, thank you, Mr. Ryder!"

"Am I as bad as that?" he asked wistfully.

"You are as bad as that!" she answered decisively.

"So bad that I contaminate even good money?" He spoke lightly, but she noticed that he winced.

"Money itself is nothing," replied the girl. "It's the spirit that gives it, the spirit that receives it, the spirit that earns it, the spirit that spends it. Money helps to create happiness. It also creates misery. It's an engine of destruction when not properly used. It destroys individuals as it does nations. It has destroyed you, for it has warped your soul."

"Go on," he laughed bitterly. "I like to hear you."

"No, you don't, Mr. Ryder; no you don't, for deep down in your heart you know that I am speaking the truth. Money and the power it gives you has dried up the wellsprings of your heart."

He affected to be highly amused at her words, but behind the mask of callous indifference the man suffered. Her words seared him as with a redhot iron. She went on:

"In the barbaric ages they fought for possession, but they fought openly. The feudal barons fought for what they stole, but it was a fair fight. They didn't strike in the dark. At least they gave a man a chance for his life. But when you modern barons of industry don't like legislation you destroy it, when you don't like your judges you remove them, when a competitor outbids you you squeeze him out of commercial existence! You have no hearts, you are machines, and you are cowards, for you fight unfairly."

"It is not true; it is not true," he protested.

"It is true," she insisted hotly. "A few hours ago in cold blood you doomed my father to what is certain death because you decided it was a political necessity. In other words, he interfered with your personal interests—your financial interests—you, with so many millions you can't count them!" Scornfully she added: "Come out into the light—fight in the open. At least let him know who his enemy is!"

"Stop! Stop! Not another word!" he cried impatiently. "You have diagnosed the disease. What of the remedy? Are you prepared to reconstruct human nature?"

Confronting each other, their eyes met, and he regarded her without resentment, almost with tenderness. He felt strangely drawn toward this woman who had defied and accused him and made him see the world in a new light.

"I don't deny," he admitted reluctantly, "that things seem to be as you describe them, but it is part of the process of evolution."

"No," she protested; "it is the work of God!"

"It is evolution!" he insisted.

"Ah, that's it," she retorted; "you evolve new ideas, new schemes, new tricks—you all worship different gods—gods of your own making."

He was about to reply when there was a commotion at the door, and Theresa entered, followed by a manservant to carry down the trunk.

"The cab is downstairs, miss," said the maid.

Ryder waved them away imperiously. He had something further to say which he did not care for servants to hear. Theresa and the man precipitately withdrew, not understanding, but obeying with alacrity a master who never brooked delay in the execution of his orders. Shirley, indignant, looked to him for an explanation.

"You don't need them," he exclaimed, with a quiet smile in which was a shade of embarrassment. "I—I came here to tell you that I"— He stopped as if unable to find words, while Shirley gazed at him in utter astonishment. "Ah," he went on finally, "you have made it very hard for me to speak." Again he paused and then with an effort he said slowly: "An hour ago I had Senator Roberts on the long distance telephone, and I'm going to Washington. It's all right about your father. The matter will be dropped. You've beaten me. I acknowledge it. You're the first living soul who ever has beaten John Barbett Ryder."

Shirley started forward with a cry of unlugled joy and surprise. Could she believe her ears? Was it possible that the dreaded Colossus had capitulated and that she had saved her father? Had the forces of right and justice prevailed after all? Her face transfigured, radiant, she exclaimed breathlessly:

"What, Mr. Ryder, you mean that you are going to help my father?"

"Not for his sake, for yours," he answered frankly.

Shirley hung her head. In her moment of triumph she was sorry for all the hard things she had said to this man. She held out her hand to him.

"Forgive me," she said gently. "It was for my father. I had no faith. I thought your heart was of stone."

Impulsively Ryder drew her to him. He clasped her two hands in his, and, looking down at her kindly, he said awkwardly:

"So it was; so it was! You accomplished the miracle. It's the first time I've acted on pure sentiment. Let me tell you something. Good sentiment is bad business, and good business is bad sentiment. That's why a rich man is generally supposed to have such a hard time getting into the kingdom of heaven." He laughed and went on: "I've given $10,000,000 apiece to three universities. Do you think I'm fool enough to suppose I can buy my way? But that's another matter. I'm going to Washington on behalf of your father because I—want you to marry my son. Yes, I want you in the family, close to us. I want your respect, my girl. I want your love. I want to earn it. I know I can't buy it. There's a weak spot in every man's armor, and this is mine. I always want what I can't get, and I can't get your love unless I earn it."

Shirley remained pensive. Her thoughts were out on Long Island at Massapequa. She was thinking of their joy when they heard the news—her father, her mother and Stott. She was thinking of the future, bright and glorious with promise again now that the dark clouds were passing away. She thought of Jefferson, and a soft light came into her eyes as she foresaw a happy wifehood shared with him.

"Why so sober?" demanded Ryder. "You've gained your point. Your father is to be restored to you. You'll marry the man you love."

"I'm so happy!" murmured Shirley. "I don't deserve it. I had no faith."

Ryder released her and took out his watch.

"I leave in fifteen minutes for Washington," he said. "Will you trust me to go alone?"

"I trust you gladly," she answered, smiling at him. "I shall always be grateful to you for letting me convert you."

"You won me over last night," he rejoined, "when you put up that fight for your father. I made up my mind that a girl so loyal to her father would be loyal to her husband. You think," he went on, "that I do not love my son. You are mistaken. I do love him, and I want him to be happy. I am capable of more affection than people think. It is Wall street," he added bitterly, "that has crushed all sentiment out of me."

Shirley laughed nervously, almost hysterically.

"I want to laugh, and I feel like crying!" she cried. "What will Jefferson say? How happy he will be!"

"How are you going to tell him?" inquired Ryder uneasily.

"I shall tell him that his dear, good father has relented, and"—

"No, my dear," he interrupted, "you will say nothing of the sort. I draw the line at the dear, good father act. I don't want him to think that it comes from me at all."

"But," said Shirley, puzzled, "I shall have to tell him that you"—

"What!" exclaimed Ryder. "Acknowledge to my son that I was wrong, that I've seen the error of my ways and wish to repent? Excuse me," he added grimly. "It's got to come from him. He must see the error of his ways."

"But the error of his way," laughed the girl, "was falling in love with me. I can never prove to him that that was wrong."

The financier refused to be convinced. He shook his head and said stubbornly:

"Well, he must be put in the wrong somehow or other. Why, my dear child," he went on, "that boy has been waiting all his life for an opportunity to say to me, 'Father, I knew I was in the right, and I knew you were wrong.' Can't you see," he asked, "what a false position it places me in? Just picture his triumph!"

"He'll be too happy to triumph," objected Shirley.

Feeling a little ashamed of his attitude, he said:

"I suppose you think I'm very obstinate." Then as she made no reply he added, "I wish I didn't care what you thought."

Shirley looked at him gravely for a moment, and then she replied seriously:

"Mr. Ryder, you're a great man, you're a genius, your life is full of action, energy, achievement. But it appears to be only the good, the noble and the true that you are ashamed of. When your money triumphs over principle, when your political power defeats the ends of justice, you glory in your victory. But when you do a kindly, generous, fatherly act, when you win a grand and noble victory over yourself, you are ashamed of it. It was a kind, generous impulse that has prompted you to save my father and take your son and myself to your heart. Why are you ashamed to let him see it? Are you afraid he will love you? Are you afraid I shall love you? Open your heart wide to us. Let us love you."

Ryder, completely vanquished, opened his arms, and Shirley sprang forward and embraced him as she would have embraced her own father. A solitary tear coursed down the financier's cheek. In thirty years he had not felt or been touched by the emotion of human affection.

The door suddenly opened, and Jefferson entered. He started on seeing Shirley in his father's arms.

"Jeff, my boy," said the financier, releasing Shirley and putting her hand in his son's, "I've done something you couldn't do. I've convinced Miss Green—I mean Miss Rossmore—that we are not so bad after all."

Jefferson, beaming, grasped his father's hand.

"Father!" he exclaimed.

"That's what I say—father!" echoed Shirley.

They both embraced the financier until, overcome with emotion, Ryder senior struggled to free himself and made his escape from the room, crying:

"Goodby, children; I'm off for Washington!"

THE END.

Ideas of the Soul.

The old Egyptians thought the soul was a bird with a human face and human hands, which, on the death of him in whom it dwelt on earth, flew to the gods, its kin. Drawings and sculptured figures show this little winged soul, sometimes represented as perched by the sarcophagus, touching the mummy, in a last farewell before it rose in heavenward flight.

Among the Greeks the soul was thought of as a tiny human figure. In Roman days the butterfly was taken as its symbol. In mediaeval pictures and reliefs we see it leaving the mouth of the dead, either as a child or as a tiny naked man—as, for example, is shown in the Campo Santo of Pisa in Orcagna's fresco of the "Triumph of Death."

In northern lands we learn from folklore the soul not seldom left the body as a mouse, or a snake. It was on the former superstition that the story of the bishop of Hatto was based and also, as some say, that of the "Pied Piper of Hamelin."

An Impediment to Plain Speaking.

"Down in Pike county," said an Arkansas statesman, "we had a trial I attended once where a man named Johnson was on the stand. Johnson was for the defense, and the way he was setting things straight was a caution.

"'Here,' said the attorney for the prosecution when he took Johnson in hand, 'I want you to stop prevaricating. Don't you know you are under oath?'

"'Stop what?' asked the witness.

"'Stop prevaricating.'

"The witness drew himself up with great dignity. 'Well,' he said, 'I'd like to know how a man can help prevaricatin' when he's lost two front teeth!'"

"In your opinion," asked the member of the investigating committee, "what is the cause of the evident unrest among the Indians?"

Comanche Pete, the noted scout, blew a cloud of smoke into the air. Then he took his pipe out of his mouth. "Fleas," he answered.

THURSDAY, November 12, is the day when the people of Charlevoix will have an opportunity to say whether or no they are alive to the possibilities which lie before them or will let the opportunity pass to show to industries which seek a location here that the city has the facilities which are asked for.

The proposition to borrow the sum of $15,000 to build city docks should receive the affirmative vote of every voter who is interested in not only having Charlevoix the best and the most beautiful little city anywhere but also the busiest.

THE repeated failure of farm organizations to control the prices of farm products, accentuated as it is by the more recent failure of Brazil to regulate the price of coffee, ought to be a lesson to the National grange, which meets in Washington this week. The Farmers' National Union and the Society of Equity have both tried their hands at price regulations. If the first named failed of its purpose, there is no wonder that the second has not succeeded. The Farmers' National Union is reported to comprise practically three-fourths of the southern farmers raising cotton. This, as a rule, is sufficient to control prices; particularly with such commodity as cotton, which can be stored without deterioration, and which, when stored, furnishes good security on which to borrow money.

The membership of the National Grange runs into the hundreds of thousands. There are more than 50,000 members in Michigan, but the organization has not heretofore seriously attempted to interfere with demand and supply and the control of prices. It has been content to eliminate "middlemen" where possible buying direct from first hands, and establishing close relations with manufacturers catering to the farm trade. In this way they have undoubtedly saved themselves some commissions, although they have occasionally have had sad experience with those with whom they have made contracts.

As a social and educational institution the grange has achieved its greatest success. The opportunity to exchange experiences in farming and as well as dealing with mail order and other houses outside of their immediate territory, has been taken advantage of. In consequence the "gold brick" in business is being eliminated among the farming class, and the old-time "hayseed" is becoming conspicuous by his absence. Of course the trolley has also had something to do with this education, but after all the grange has been effective instrument for good.

The grange has failed to politically unite the farmers, just as the trade union has failed to politically unite wage workers. The members do not believe that they have a community of interests politically, and insists on voting according to their environments and political education. The southern farmer is a democrat, the northern farmer is a republican. No financial emergency has heretofore been powerful enough to make them march under the same political banner.—Detroit News.

PARK IMPROVEMENT.

Reaction Against Former Absurdities Is Observable.

Of late years our parks have become much more restful and satisfying than they were in days of long ago. There was a period of years when every park was full of bizarre effects in carpet bedding, these beds often being given the most conspicuous positions, as though nothing better could be presented to the public. The truth of the matter is that the parks should first present a restful appearance and effect. Broad expanses of lawn and long vistas across greensward and water or both should be the first glimpse to be seen by the visitors to a large park, says the Los Angeles Times. In smaller areas, in more formal surroundings, carpet beds of quiet and simple design are permissible, especially for the purpose of showing flowering plants. In large parks, where more naturalness is in evidence, the flower beds should appear as incidentals in plantation borders or in recesses in the woodland or shrubbery masses.

Carpet beds have usually marred our parks as much by the use of hideous colors as by ugly designs. There is no beauty in purple beet tops, yet much of the material used is of the same "moribund" hue, or some variegated vagaries in foliage are used when beet tops are scarce. It is just as easy to use plants that are beautiful in themselves as these colors at enmity with all that we call beauty in garden vegetation. There has of late been a marked reaction against these absurdities that shows a more healthful public taste, and the words of disapproval publicly and privately called forth by wall paper designs and colors in our park bedding are an indication of an improved general taste in gardening. Carpet bedding has for many years been gradually on the wane, and it may be expected to so continue until we have the unbroken charm of fine stretches of restful lawn without these bizarre effects.

A rule which should be at all times observed in landscaping, either public or private gardens, is that edges of lakes or water courses should never be bare except for boat landings in certain spots. No path should touch the water's edge except occasionally, and a border plantation of varying width should always be kept between path and water. This is a fundamental rule too often violated in both park and garden.

In Kalamazoo, Mich., the most active woman improver in the United States made a novel use of the camera. She had been attempting to have nasty vacant lots cleaned up and bad back yards improved, but the property owners were uninterested in anything she could say or print in the newspapers. When she had pictures made of these bad spots—and so skillfully made as to emphasize the unpleasant conditions—and when she showed these pictures to the guilty ones with the suggestion that this was the first view of them and that they were going into the daily paper, if nothing was done, something was done, and quickly done.

Keeping It Secret.

Village Postmistress—And what are those dashes? Hodge—Oh, he'll understand them right enough. Postmistress—Yes, but we can't send them by telegraph. Hodge—Well, they're the price o' the pigs. He'll understand. Postmistress Yes, but you must put it in words or figures, else we can't send it. Hodge—Must I? Well, I'll whisper it to 'e, then.—Punch

BUYING HOME GOODS.

The Value of Patronizing the Local Merchant.

HELPS BUILD UP THE TOWN.

Money Sent to the Mail Order Houses Could Be Spent to Far Better Advantage Right In Your Own Community.

Did you ever receive a catalogue from one of the large mail order houses? Very likely you have, as they are sent broadcast throughout the land, but especially into the small towns. They tend likely, don't they? You are astounded that they can afford to sell their goods so cheap. You wonder how they can do it. Probably, like thousands of others, you have sent them your money and waited anxiously for the wonderful bargains that you have selected. Then again, like thousands of others, you have probably been a bit disappointed when the goods arrived and you found you could have purchased the same thing of your local merchant at about the same price. Then, too, there was another advantage in buying at home. At your home store you could have secured a better fitting garment or chosen a more becoming color, etc.

Now, this isn't an attack on the mail order houses. They are doing a legitimate business, of course, and nine times out of ten give you your money's worth, but it has been proved in thousands of cases that they cannot give you more for your money than the merchant doing business right in your own community. Why, then, choose the mail order house to do business with in preference to the local merchant? Do the big city concerns do anything for your town? Do they help out when new improvements are needed and every dollar counts? Most certainly not. On the other hand, are the local tradesmen interested in the welfare of your community? They certainly are.

The local merchant has a family. He wants a clean and prosperous town in which to bring up his children. He pays taxes, he gladly chips in for improvements, he makes his store a credit to the town when given the right support. The rapid and vigorous circulation of money is as necessary to the well being of the merchants as plenty of good blood is to the body. The more money that is spent at home the more money for churches, schools, etc.

Business makes the town, and you make the business. There cannot be business without customers, and if you send your money to the mail order houses that much custom is lost. As a matter of fact, there is no necessity for going elsewhere. The local merchants carry always everything that can be found in the great cities, and if you can't find what you want it is probably your own fault. Give them the opportunity, and they will be glad to serve you. You buy only one bonnet or dress or suit of clothes at a time, and what does it matter if you buy it in a large city or a smaller one? Many times you pay car fare to other cities and pay higher prices than you would have to pay at home for the same article.

Did you ever stop to consider that when you spend your money in other places all you get is the goods you buy. When you spend it at home you not only get the goods, but the money comes back to you in better streets, better schools or perhaps better patronage of your husband, brother or son.

If you will read the advertisements of your local merchants you will find that about everything needed is kept in stock. These advertisements are generally true,—Not because the advertisers are any better than other people, but they can't afford to misrepresent.

The store that advertises is the store that is known, and the store that is known is the store that trade goes to, and the store that trade goes to is the store that does the business, and the store that does the business is the store that can't afford to cheat.

To Beautify a Town.

The mayor of Birmingham, Ala., has been leading a popular movement to beautify the city and, being a wise man, has been making a special effort to interest the women. They know more about such matters than men, he says, and have better judgment. The mayor addressed the following exhortations to the citizens:

"Pull down your fence. The city will haul it away and keep off the cows. If you can't be induced to part with it, fix it up and paint it.

"Plant lawns, flowers and trees. Wherever the ground shows bare plant something green in it.

"Report any one who mutilates or ties a horse to a tree. You get half the fine on conviction.

"A few dimes and a lot of enthusiasm and determination will transform an unsightly back yard into a little spot of beauty."

Voltaire's Quick Wit.

When Voltaire was living in London a crowd gathered to mob him as he passed along the street. For what reason? Because he was a Frenchman. Boldly confronting the mob, he mounted a stone and addressed them. "Brave Englishmen," he cried, "am I not sufficiently unhappy in not having been born among you?" This speech was so effective that the crowd carried him on their shoulders to his lodgings.

Claribel—I wonder what that creature meant.

Lizzie—What creature?

Claribel—Why, Tentworth, of course. When I told him everybody said I was improving in my singing he said he was delighted to hear it. The idea!—Exchange.

THE CAUSE OF COLDS

Good Advice Regarding the Prevention of Coughs and Colds.

If people would only properly fortify and strengthen their system almost 98 per cent of colds, coughs and pneumonia might be avoided. These troubles are simply the result of weakness, which produces a catarrhal condition of the mucous membrane, which is an internal skin in the body. When this skin is weakened, it becomes infected with germs which are carried through the system by the blood. These parasites attack and break these delicate tissues and set up a soreness which produces what is in reality an external scrofula.

The only thing that will cure coughs and colds and prevent pneumonia is a medication which is absorbed and carried by the blood so that the diseased membrane is disinfected, cleaned, soothed and healed.

We have a remedy which we honestly believe, infallable and unsurpassable for the prevention and cure of coughs, colds and all catarrhal conditions. It is the prescription of a famous physician, who has an enviable reputation of 30 years of cures gained through the use of this medicine. We promise to either effect a cure in every case or make no charge for the medicine. We urge everybody in Charlevoix who has need of such a medicine to try Rexall Mucu-tone.

It stands to reason that we could not afford to make such statements and give our own personal guarantee to this remedy if we were not absolutely positive that we could substantiate our claim in every particular, and we see no reason why anyone should hesitate to accept our offer and try it. We have two sizes of Rexall Mucu-tone. Prices 50c and $1. Sometimes a 50c bottle is sufficient for a cure. As a general thing, the most chronic case is cured with an average of three large bottles. Remember the medicine will cost you nothing if you are not satisfied in every particular. The Ivy Drug Store, A. B. Fleischer proprietor.

C. H. S. NOTES.

Pearl Sheldon of East Jordan, visited the high school Friday.

The English III class began the study of Washington Irvings Sketch book, Monday morning.

The senior class completed solid geometry last week and will take up review algebra for the remainder of the semester.

Next Saturday the C. H. S. football team plays East Jordan on the home grounds. Everyone should turn out and help the boys keep up their reputation.

Mr. Fuller, the superintendent of the East Jordan high school, attended the football game Saturday in this city, and arranged a game for next Saturday with the Charlevoix team.

The Charlevoix high has this year one of the best football teams that has ever represented the school on on the field. This is the first years experience for part of the boys and for that reason the showing is all the more remarkable. Our football record for this season is exceedingly satisfactory, losing only one game.

Rev. Mr. Putnam will give an illustrated lecture on the Yellow National Park, Wednesday night, November 18, for the senior class. Mr. Putnam camped for some time in the Park and no one is better fitted to explain the natural beauties of this great American wonder. He has obtained the use of especially prepared slides so this is an opportunity of a life time for those who cannot visit the park in person.

Monday morning's program consisted of singing by the school from the new books, purchased by the board of education for the use of the high school. They contain a very good collection of songs. The singing was superintended by Miss Gregory and the spirit shown by the students was very good considering this was the first time they had used the books. Margaret Durance rendered the famous masterpiece "Thanatopsis." We were father entertained by a duet entitled "Laudis atque Carmina" the university song, sung by Drs. Allen and Frank Wilkinson.—It was a treat to us and brought forth a great deal of enthusiasm, the results of which were two more songs.

The results of the second months work in the high school are more satisfactory than those of the first month, if the monthly standings are an indication. The senior class has the largest number gaining an average of 90 per cent or above, and also contains the number of the school who has obtained the highest standing for the month.

Leslie Cram leads with an average of 94⅓. The other members of the class with an average above 90 are: Mary Dunlop, 93 2-5; Kenneth Bridge, 92⅔; Charles Wilkinson, 90⅔; Clarence Bridge, 90 1-6; Georgg Small, 90.

In the Junior class are Lila Shapton, 91; Ray Bennett, 93; Guy Lamphenr, 91 2-5; Pearl Small, 90 3-5.

Of the Sophomores, Edward Edwards, 90 4-5 and Amos Mason 90 4-5.

In the Freshman class are Elijah O'Brien, 91⅓; Mabel Dunlop, 93 2-5; Walden Valentine, 92⅓; and Countess Mason, 90 2-5.

GRANGE AS AN EDUCATOR

Paper Read at Pomona Meeting by H. Batterbee of Wilson

While the Grange has Accomplished Much, Work still lies Before it.

"The first and highest object of our order is the education and uplifting of the American farmer." To ask the question; Is the grange an important factor in the education of the farmer? is equivalent to asking, is the grange in any way a success?

Education is absolutely indispensible if we are to be uplifted, therefore, the two words become practically synonymous. The deduction is simple. They are the two rivulets which join to make the broad, rushing, irresistible stream of progress.

The consideration of the education which the American farmer has derived from the grange first carry us back to the time of the organization of our great order. At that time the agriculturist was traditionally stupid in most things that comprise practical knowledge a hayseed, a mossback, an ignoramous, a farmer; a being whose only chance to become anything else than the butt for the jokes and jibes of all comers; a victim of each organized graft or political conspiracy, lay in the possible accident of having an iron will and a colossal brain, and even then it was absolutely necessary for him to desert the farm as did Lincoln, Grant, Garfield and scores of lesser lights in the history of our nation. Indeed we did in our early history have great men who retained their country homes in the south, but the ability to do so was the direct result of the infamous and cruel practice of slavery but "better the darkness of ignorance than the red stain of guilt."

The abolishing of slavery disturbed the social and economic equilibrium of the American farmer in a way which left him decidedly in the lurch. The promoters of education at the north bent their efforts, rather on the newly franchised negro than on the prairie or lackwoods settler, while at the south the result was too obvious to require comment. Necessity held prices on farm produce at a sufficient pitch to induce people, still to adhere to the soil, but their moral and educational advantages were vastly inferior to those of the average citizen and they were in danger of becoming worse off than before the war.

At this critical time the first grange was organized by less than half a score of persons in the East, and thus began a new era of progress for the American farmer. From behind the Alleghanies the farmers of the middle west saw the first ray of light appearing, and the growth of the grange and consequent progress was like the coming of a summer day.

The grange was the first to educate the farmer in regard to the merits of concerted action and this principle is so nearly perfect in the granges of Michigan today that, Horton's "cyclone cellar" is a "terror to politicians" and this same mysterious cavern, from which issues at times a whirlwind of pamphlets and circular letters, comprises an absolute protection to the farmer from the ravages of swindlers of all sorts. All this is the result of grange education; and how this education is acquired and of what manner of learning it consists I will endeavor to show.

The subordinate grange work inevitably brings out the best there is in any member and likewise suppresses the evil. This is accomplished by the highly moral and religious trend of the ritualistic work. In the grange all classes of character and temperament are brought into contact under circumstances which give the "good that is in us" a distinct advantage over the bad.

Here also the young farmer acquires a perfect knowledge of parliamentary rules and a practice in public debate and the use of correct and fluent language, hardly outclassed by that acquired at Harvard or Yale. In Pomona and state granges he observes the example and in the subordinate grange he gets the practice.

The grange is the only farmer's society which has fully accomplished its chief purpose, that of placing the farmer on his proper level, and its success in that and other lines is certainly due to the fact that it places education and moral betterment before wordly wealth and honor.

The friction of the farmers with good and wise men through the grange has rubbed all the moss off their backs and the government, seeing that the clay was "worthy of the Gods" adds to our comfort and finance in various ways, for instance, the "farmer's institute," the "R. F. D.", "Agricultural college", "Department of Agriculture" etc., still he believe the grange is greater then them all although owing to it, the farmer, starting from a greater depth has climbed a steeper hill and attained a greater height than his competitors of any and all trades and professions. We still believe that, though it has done so much in the past it will do more in the future.

The infinitely beneficient work the grange has accomplished is only a beginning to the happy results that will accrue from "the Grange as an Educator."

RAISING THE CALF.

One Dairyman's Method of Keeping the Youngsters Thrifty.

In feeding calves, as in feeding all other animals, no hard and fast rules can be made to govern the quantity to be fed. Calves, like children, are often of delicate appetite and not good feeders. Here is an Ohio dairyman's method of feeding them, and that it is a good one is shown by the fine stock he has raised.

If strong and healthy the calf should be taken away from the dam when two or three days old, he says. Sometimes we only allow it to suck once. The calf is fed whole milk for about two weeks, sometimes less. We then add about one-fourth skimmilk and keep increasing it for a week or ten days, when the calf is placed on skimmilk altogether. Frequently, with excellent results, I use a little flaxseed jelly in the skimmilk. I add this when I begin feeding skimmilk and have used it even when the calf was a week old, with no bad results.

To make this jelly soak whole flaxseed in hot water. I think this far superior for young calves to any calf meals used as a substitute for milk. If you cannot get the whole flaxseed, ground oil cake meal as found on the market is a very good substitute.

At two weeks old place a little whole corn and oats in a box so the calves can get at it—they soon learn to eat and relish it as well as hay. With this system calves will do well at three weeks old on flaxseed jelly, grain and hay, with about one pint skimmilk added to each feed, morning and evening, so as to give the jelly a milk flavor.

Do not allow calves to get fat, but keep them in a good, thrifty, growing condition. Get them to eat a maximum amount of roughage and a minimum amount of concentrates. Continue this system with the calf until within three or four months of cowhood, then feed concentrates liberally, so as to develop the milk secreting organs for service after the birth of the calf.

I prefer the heifer being about thirty months old before coming into milk. For the experienced breeder who is a careful observer of weak and strong points inbreeding is wise, as this is the quickest and, in fact, almost the only way to fix type in a herd, but for the inexperienced it is not safe to inbreed.

Milk With Dry Hands.

It is a bad habit with many milkers to let the fingers get wet, sometimes deliberately dipping them into the milk so as to make them slide down the teats. The proper way is to milk with perfectly dry hands by squeezing, not by sliding. Only in "stripping" to start the flow to get the last drops of milk it may be preferable to slide the fingers down the teats. These last drops, the strippings, contain the largest per cent of fat, being almost as rich as cream, and not only for that reason, but also to keep up a rich flow of milk from the cow, it is important not to neglect the strippings. It is well known that by leaving more and more of the milk in the bag at each consecutive milking the cow is soon dried up.

THE VETERINARY.

Baking soda is said to be a good remedy for colic in horses, as it starts the distressing gases, thus giving relief.

Congested Udder.

When a cow is suffering from a congested udder, it is a good plan to dry her off at once and feed one-half ounce of nitrate of potash night and morning in soft feed. Give plenty of clean water, feed pure and wholesome food and massage the udder once a day with a little iodine ointment.

Paralysis In Pigs.

For paralysis in pigs, if recent, give three drops of the fluid extract of nux vomica in fifteen drops of the oil of gaultheria and a tablespoonful of cod liver oil twice a day for several weeks. Old cases are hopeless.

Worms In Colts.

For intestinal worms in colts the following mixture is used by some veterinarians: Mix together as a base one pound each of salt and granulated sugar, in this mix one-half pound of tobacco dust or fine cut tobacco; four ounces of sulphate or iron powder, six ounces of powdered worm seed. Give a heaping teaspoonful in the feed at first once per day, then twice per day and keep it up for three weeks.

Remedy For Cowpox.

Oxide of zinc ointment rubbed on the cow's bag morning and night is a very good remedy for cowpox. The disease is carried from cow to cow on the hands of the milker, so when the disease is in the herd milkers should wash their hands carefully after milking each cow. Do not use the milk from affected cows until they are cured.

Wood Ashes For Horses.

A little wood ash is held to be very beneficial to horses. It is given a teaspoonful at a time, sprinkled on a feed of oats.

A Curious Experiment For the Children.

Cut two crosses out of black paper and place them with their extremities almost touching at about three inches from the eye on a sheet of white paper. You will see three crosses, the middle one being dark and quite separate. The experiment becomes more interesting when red or green figures are used, but in this case a dark background must be used, and a white cross will appear in the middle.

Iron Cloth.

Instead of horsehair or canvas the tailors now use a new fabric for stiffening the shoulders and collars of coats. It is called iron cloth and is said to be more effective than any of its predecessors.

THE ENCALYPTUS TREE

Its Many Uses Described by our California Correspondent

Truly the Most Useful of Trees—Has a Great Future Before It.

There are twenty-nine different species of encalyptus tree; and one hundred in all of the different species and it is pronounced the tree of the twentieth century. Some of the species are as hard as hickory, while others are as soft as pine. The tree can withstand a temperature of 18 degrees as well as 120 degrees Fahrenheit.

Growing equally as well in swampy places, the encalyptus can live on a desert. While the age of maturity varies in the different species ample returns on an investment can be expected in ten years, in thirty years the blue gum will have the hardness of hickory.

Encalyptus has now passed the experimental stage and may be considered without question as a commercial proposition. The value of the crop and the possibilities of growing it in California have been sufficiently demonstrated to make judicious plantings on a large scale, perfectly safe, with an assurance of sure and reasonably large profits. The profits to be derived from encalyptos in the future will be found in hard wood lumber, for wagon work, farm implements, railroad coaches and house finishings, furniture, etc. Ties, telephone poles, and bridge timber will also prove profitable, for any of the above named products of encalyptus at least ten years growth will be required and of course the older the trees the greater the profits in proportion. The lumber is being used in every place when great strength is required, the finished product is valued at the same price as oak lumber.

The well known oil extracted from from the leaves and twigs of the tree, has great medicinal properties as it is nonirritant antiseptic, the oil can be used without the slightest injury on all tissues of the body and internally in very small quantities.

Some people think that encalyptus planting commercially, has a number of points in its favor as an investment over the fruit business or industries, because the fruit business is more or less of an uncertainty while the timber business is comparatively sure. A heavy rain during the blooming period of the fruit trees checks fertilization a small crop being the result. This is not the case with the timber crop the more rain the greater growth and profits. The harvesting period of most fruits extends over but a few weeks, and if it is not gathered at that time the crop is a total loss, which the harvesting period of timber trees extend over a lite time: it is also claimed that the trees are valuable as a bee pasture all of the encalyptus trees have more or less value as bee pasture when in bloom and from the large number of species it is possible to select a group that will furnish bloom for the bees to work on the year round.

I saw the exhibit at the county fair which gave me an insight into some of the uses to which encalyptus may be put and its educational value. Many people have heard of encalyptus tree planting, with very little ideas of the great scope of utility for the wood, the high polish and beautiful grain of the wood shows its value for furniture and interior finishings for buildings. No wonder much capital is going into the culture of trees. Thousands are being planted in California. The trees sometimes grow to great great heights up to 300 feet. They are ever green and shed the bark as well as the leaves, continually causing a litter under the trees the year round. So much for the encalyptus.

MOOSE IN CAPTIVITY.

Not Difficult to Domesticate, but Hard to Keep Alive.

"The reason so few moose are seen in captivity in the parks and circuses of the country is not because they are naturally too wild to be domesticated, but because they usually do not live long in captivity," said a St. Paul man: "My father was for many years a settler in northern Minnesota, and at different times in his experience he had three moose on his homestead which recognized him as their master.

"All the animals were captured when they were very young, and in each instance it took them only a few days to become apparently attached to father and his small farm. For two or three weeks he would keep them fenced in and then would allow them to roam around at will. They would be gone for two or three hours, or perhaps half a day at a time, but always came back all right. By allowing them the run of the premises this way they met practically the same conditions as if they were wild in the forest, and therefore were always in good health, but the moment any of them were shipped to the city a change was noticeable.

"Two of the animals were sold to city park associations at different times, and in each instance the moose finally died. They seemed willing enough to remain in the parks, but conditions were not such as they were used to, and from the first it was to be seen that they were failing in health. A moose can stand all sorts of hardships in the woods, but when he is in captivity lack of exercise or lack of proper food or lack of something else puts him on the down grade, and as a rule he passes in his checks in a few weeks or a few months at the outside.

"One of the animals my father owned was a handsome bull, and he was trained to harness. The animal could pull a good sized load and travel through the woods with a sleigh behind him at a very lively clip. This third moose was one day shot by a hunter near the house. So all three animals met with an untimely fate, which goes to prove, I suppose, that man should not monkey with the plans of nature."—Duluth Herald.

In the waiting room of the Union station at Washington, recently the wife of a federal official who is extremely fond of dogs figured in an amusing incident.

In the next seat to her sat a small dog, evidently belonging to a showily dressed woman in the seat just beyond. As the canine, a friendly little beast, evidenced by sundry wags of his tail his desire for friendly relations, the Washington woman leaned over and began to pat him on the head. Then, as she leaned even closer toward the dog, the showily dressed individual, whose air of concern indicated her disapproval of the situation, immediately reached out and withdrew the pet from the stranger.

"Excuse me," said she, "but I never allow my dog to kiss strangers."—Philadelphia Ledger.

MARGARETTA DREXEL

Society Girl Who Adorns Her Boudoir With Marriage Proposals.

Framing the written proposals of marriage from one's admirers and using them as ornaments for one's boudoir is the latest fad among the young buds of British society.

Originated by an American girl, the idea has taken strong hold, and it has England's titled gallants by the ears, for many of these fortune seeking noblemen have obeyed literally the old time motto, "If at first you don't succeed, try, try, try again."

Margaretta Drexel, the beautiful young daughter of Anthony J. Drexel and wife of New York, who has amazed English society by going heart-whole through two London seasons, walled upon by a virtual train of courtiers, started the fad. A score or more such proposals decorate her bedroom walls.

And the amusing part of it all is that a comparison of notes as a result of the new idea shows that some of the peers have been working overtime in their efforts to capture some one of the many debutantes well endowed with this world's goods.

Miss Drexel's career in London society has been brilliant enough to satisfy the utmost desires of the most ambitious. Both the king and the queen commented upon her loveliness when she was presented at Buckingham palace two years ago, and ever since she has had peers of every degree constantly in her train of admirers. Scarcely a week passes that rumor does not have her engaged to this or that one. The latest victim is Lord Dalmeny, heir to the earldom of Rosebery.

No picture gives an adequate idea of the young girl's loveliness because of its ever varying expression. Her coloring, one of her great charms, is lost in a photograph. It has been the dream of Shannon and Sargent to paint her, but the willful beauty has not yet found time for the sittings.

Her charm of manner tells more than her actual beauty. In a room you will see her surrounded by a dozen or more men, while other girls of her age will be talking to each other. Yet no one accuses her of being a flirt. She never tries to outrival her sex, and for all her success she is extremely popular.

She is much of an idealist, and it would not be surprising if in the end she made a romantic marriage. So devoted to her are her parents that they would hardly make objection to her choice if it entailed her happiness.

What a Woman Can Do!

Abolish unnecessary noise.

Establish traveling libraries and so bring reading matter within the reach of all.

Help to save the forests from demolition.

Clean up her own back yard and make it such a thing of beauty that it will be an inspiration to her neighbors.

See that the health of her fellow citizens is cared for by securing the appointment of a public nurse whose duty is the care and instruction of the poor.

Secure lighted streets at night and thereby prevent crimes.

Insist upon paved sidewalks.

Demand clean streets and get them.

Get rid of tramps by having an ever ready town wood pile; no work, no pay.

Help to prevent the injustice of child labor.

Do away with immoral theaters, moving picture shows and postal cards.

Beautify her street with window boxes.

Prevent telephone and telegraph companies from hacking off and mutilating the branches of trees.

Prevent much loss of life by insisting that all wires be underground.

Arouse public interest in the public welfare.

Keep her garbage box clean and covered and insist upon her fellow citizens doing the same.

She can, because she has done every one of these things. And when she does them all towns and cities will be clean, happy, wholesome places in which to live.—Hellmentor.

Japanese Floral Calendar.

Reference is frequently made to the floral calendar of Japan. What this calendar is is explained in the Housekeeper. The Japanese are extremely fond of all flowers, and they have therefore made a calendar from them, giving to each month a favorite blossom or leaf. Thus the pine, the emblem of lasting prosperity and life, belongs to January, and its branches are used to decorate all houses on New Year's day. To February belong the blossoms of the plum tree, which stand for purity, and the beautiful blossoms of the peach tree, to which young girls are compared, are associated with the month of March. Next the cherry blossom, the most beloved of all flowers, is held to belong to April, and to May are assigned the gorgeous clusters of the wistaria vine.

The iris flower, to which is compared the strength and beauty of young boys, belongs to June, and July has the glory and perfume of the water lily. The flowering hibiscus tree attaches its beauty to the month of August, while September lays claim to the exquisite charm of the azalea. The royal flower of Japan, the chrysanthemum, which forms a part of the crest of the imperial family, belongs to the month of October, while to November is given the maple leaf, admired for its decorative quality. Finally, with December is associated the beautiful camellia, which blooms in the gardens even in the midst of snow.

Men Do Housework.

In England the proportion of men to women indoor domestics is as one to three or four. In France the reverse is the case, parlor maids being unknown, the one femme de chambre being lady's maid as well as housemaid. The housework—sweeping, dusting, etc.—mainly falls upon the menservants.

One element enabling much extra work for domestics in England is absent in a French home. This is the staying guest, the succession of visitors. Outside private hotels and in the handsome flats of fashionable quarters there is, indeed, no room in Parisian households for friends. The expressions "dine and sleep" and "week end" visits have not found their way into French dictionaries, nor have "dine and sleep" or "week end" guests yet become French institutions.

It is easy thus to understand why three or four domestics suffice in France, while in England a dozen would be needed for people of similar means and position, and where three or four maids are kept in England only a general servant is kept in France.

"De Writer was telling me he expected Crittick of the Morning Eagle to do his book a good turn."

"Yes? Well, he seems to have given it two or three good turns. He roasted it pretty thoroughly."—Exchange.

Setting Him Right.

The poet was busy at his desk.

"The life of genius is lonely, sir," queried the casual caller.

"Not so you can notice it," replied the rhymester. "That's my cigar you smell."—Chicago News.

For a man to exert his powers in doing good so far as he can is a most glorious task.—Sophocles.

The Obliging Girl.

The obliging girl may be popular; she is also imposed upon.

To get the reputation of being obliging is to be made the dump of all the disagreeable things that others should do and won't.

Unless you can draw a tight line at imposition better cultivate an accommodating spirit.

Don't think it is obliging to do the other girl's lessons. It is mistaken kindness to them and unfair to the teacher.

The obliging girl usually finds herself loaded with all the extra coats and bundles when out on a day's jaunt.

When the other girls have a way of saying, "Ask Jane to do it; she won't care," be sure Jane is afflicted with misguided good nature and is obliging.

To be too accommodating is often a sign of weakness. It takes strength of character to be able to say "No."

Learn to distinguish between selfishness and overobligingness. The latter breeds selfishness in your friends.

DOOM OF AN EYESORE

How Kansas Women Transformed Town's Ugliest Block.

PUBLIC LIBRARY THEIR AIM.

Through Efforts of Abilene's Clubwomen an Unsightly Spot Was Condemned For Park Purposes—Carnegie Library Erected In Its Center.

After nine years of effort, sacrifice and planning the women of Abilene, Kan., recently saw a fruition of their hopes in the dedication of a public library costing $12,500, equipped with 6,000 books and set in the midst of a pretty city park in the most central block of town.

This is a striking example of what can be done in the average country community when the right persons have the right inspiration and endeavor to do some good to those around them. Ten years ago the people of Abilene laughed at the idea of a successful public library. Several attempts had been made to establish such, and each was a failure. The books gradually had been lost, and finally the rooms were given up.

The clubwomen took up the idea, appointing a committee composed of members from each of the clubs, and made another effort, says the Kansas City Star. It was a slow and tedious process at first. The first books were gifts from individuals, making a very meager collection of indifferent literature. The first money in any amount that was secured for the library was from a lecture by William Jennings Bryan soon after the election of 1900. The proceeds were divided between the library and other local enterprises, and $100 was realized. Then came the first rummage sale, something the town never had experienced and which created much hilarity when it opened.

But in those days old clothes were much more in demand than in these times, and the proceeds surprised even the managers. After this the library fund grew steadily from all sorts of entertainments, donations and schemes that would add to its proportions. A small room was secured over a grocery store, and the first books were installed with a librarian who practically gave her services.

This librarian was Miss Lida Romig, a graduate of the University of Kansas and with experience in the large book concerns of Chicago and Boston. She entered into the work of the struggling library with all the enthusiasm of the clubwomen's committee and gave it the same earnest and careful attention that might characterize the largest city institution.

After awhile the town voted a library tax. This amounts to about $1,200 a year, which speedily put the library on its feet. It had become by this time an established institution. The application for books far exceeded the equipment, and the little room became too small for the growing number of volumes. Next the women sought a library building, but they had no place to put it nor money with which to buy a site. Finally they evolved a way out of the difficulty and included in their plans the wiping out of what had become the town's eyesore, the ugliest block in Abilene.

This block was in the center of the town, flat on low ground which had often been overflowed at flood time. On one corner was the badly located city hall, built in the boom days and used for the marshal's residence and the fire department. An unsightly livery barn, an old house, a great sheet iron shed for implements, four or five rickety store buildings used for blacksmith shops and second hand stores and three or four lots covered with discarded traction engines, thrashing machines and rubbish of every sort completed the disfigurement of the square. It was laughed at, scorned and abused by everybody and considered a disgrace to the city. Visitors never were taken just that block if it was possible to avoid it.

The clubwomen undertook to transform this unsightly spot into one of beauty. The mayor assisted them by calling a special election to issue park bonds, and by the work of the women these bonds were voted by a small majority. Then the entire block was condemned for park purposes, and all the buildings and disfigurements on it were removed, leaving the city hall as its only occupant. Then by request of the women the city made formal application to Andrew Carnegie for $12,500 for a public library, accompanying the request by the assurance that the park block would be used for a site. The library tax already in force, together with the income from other methods of money raising, insured a sufficient income to meet the requirements of the Carnegie gift. The city hauled in dirt from the higher portions of the town and filled up the block far above the high water mark, and in the center has been placed the new public library. It is all stone and brick, with cement basement and foundations, and is one of the handsomest buildings of its class in the state. The furniture is all oak and in the simplest lines and most artistic form. A handsomely furnished assembly room is open to the clubwomen for their meetings.

When the new building was opened the people thronged the rooms and are effusive in their praise of the accomplishments that the women of the town had brought about.

The pretty park block has been planted in elms and sown to blue grass and will be one of the beauty spots of Abilene. Every visitor now is taken by the public library and the town park.

MODERN SILO CONSTRUCTION.

The farmers of the corn belt are coming to realize more and more the value of silage as a cheap, succulent feed. For dairy cows it is almost indispensable if the best results are to be obtained. Experiments at various stations show that it may also be used successfully for fattening steers, sheep and even hogs. To aid farmers in selecting the type of silo best adapted to their conditions the Iowa experiment station has made a thorough investigation of silo construction and issued a bulletin on the subject, from which the following is taken:

Of the silos reported by their owners or visited, 135 were located outside of the barn and 26 inside. Those located inside of a building were largely of a type not well adapted to be placed outside. These reports indicate that a location of the silo outside of all buildings meets with greater favor among those using silos. There are good reasons for this. First, the silo, with the exception of a few types, is of such a construction that it does not need the protection of a covered building. Second, it is not economical to place a silo in a building where it will occupy space which may be put to other use. Third, a silo located inside of a building is often unhandy to fill. The forage cannot be delivered to the cutter conveniently. Fourth, by locating a silo outside of the building and only connecting it thereto with a passage provided with doors, the objectionable odor of the silage may be kept out of the building. By arranging the silo so as to be connected to the feeding room with a feed way, it should be as convenient for feeding as when located in the building itself. A very common arrangement is to so locate the silo that the passage way from silo to barn is a continuation of the feed way in the barn. In general it seems that there are few advantages in building a silo inside of a building and many in building it outside.

Square silos are practically a thing of the past. They were developed before the round silo, but generally gave trouble by the bulging of the straight sides and the spoiling of the silage in the corners. In addition to this the material of construction is not so economically used or distributed to resist the pressure of the silage as in the round silo. The first two difficulties were somewhat reduced by filling the corners of the square silo, making it octagonal. However, this was only a transitional stage in the development of the round silo, and very few are in use.

A BRICK SILO.

Where brick may be secured at a reasonable price it may be used for silo construction with good results. Several brick silos were investigated and as a whole they were very satisfactory. The chief trouble with their erection seemed to be with the reinforcement. Attempts to build brick silos without any reinforcement resulted in failures as far as investigated. The solid wall brick silo is not much, if any, better than the stave silo as far as protection from freezing is concerned. The wall is usually eight inches thick and re-enforced by hoops or bands on the outside. The inside must be plastered with cement plaster to make the walls air and water tight.

Out of the 124 silos reported in Iowa eighty-two were of the stave type. There is no doubt whatever but that the stave silo is a thoroughly established success. The measure of success depends largely, however, upon the method of construction, material used and care that is taken of the silo.

A few years ago it could have been said that concrete silos were in the experimental stage, but now it has been demonstrated by the success of many of them that concrete is one of the best building materials from which to construct permanent silos. Considering that the general use of concrete has been developed within a very few years and the majority of concrete silos have been built by men with little or no experience the success of the concrete silo has been remarkable.

The silo may be made an ornament to any group of farm buildings. Its form is such that it may be made to add to the appearance of any style of construction. One or more conical silo roofs when viewed from a distance or the full height of the curved walls at a closer range gives a very pleasing effect when placed in a setting of rectangular buildings.

A Kissing Nation.

In no other part of the world is kissing so much in vogue as in Russia. From time immemorial it has been the national salute. Indeed, it is more of a greeting than a caress. In public affairs, as in private, the kiss is an established custom. Fathers and sons kiss; old generals with rusty mustaches kiss; whole regiments kiss. The emperor kisses his officers. On a holiday or feast day the young and delicate mistress of a house will not only kiss all her maidservants, but all her menservants, too, and if the gentleman does not venture above her hand she will stoop and kiss his cheek. To judge also from the number of salutes, the matrimonial bond in these high circles must be one of uninterrupted felicity. A gentleman scarcely enters or leaves the room without kissing his wife either on her forehead, cheek or hand.

Several men were talking about how they happened to marry.

"I married my wife," said one, "because she was different from any other woman I had ever met."

"How was that?" asked the others.

"She was the only woman I met who would have me!"

MAKE THIS YOURSELF

Says Many Persons Here Can be Made Happy Again

Tells How any one can Prepare Simple Home-made Mixture, Said to Overcome Rheumatism.

There is so much Rheumatism here in our neighborhood now that the following advice will be highly appreciated by those who suffer:

Get from any good pharmacy one-half ounce Fluid Extract Dandelion, one ounce Compound Kargon, three ounces of Compound Syrup Sarsaparilla. Shake these well in a bottle and take in teaspoonful doses after each meal and at bedtime; also drink plenty of good water.

It is claimed that there are few victims of this dread and torturous disease who will fail to find ready relief in this simple home-made mixture, and in most cases a permanent cure is the result.

This simple recipe is said to strengthen and cleanse the eliminative tissues of the kidneys so that they can filter and strain from the blood and systems the poisons, acids and waste matter, which cause not only rheumatism, but numerous other diseases. Every man or woman here who feels that their kidneys are not healthy and active, or who suffers from any urinary trouble whatever, should not hesitate to make up this mixture, as it is certain to do much good, and may save you from much misery and suffering after awhile.

Our home druggists say they will either supply the ingredients or mix the prescription ready to take if our readers ask them.

For Feline Protection.

A new society for the "protection of cats" has just started into activity in Paris under the name of "Velvet Paws." Pierre Loti is the honorary president and Edmond Harancourt the executive president. The suppression of convents has, it seems, cast many of these poor animals homeless into the streets, and Miss Louisa Reid, who houses and feeds the cats of departed great men, has tried to protect these wandering pets. Her home is overcrowded, so this new society will have to create fresh asylums for the unfortunate pussies that have not had the good luck to belong to a celebrity. The funniest part is that these charming but rarely faithful animals have a newspaper, Le Monderlef.

Few women appreciate the value of a bran bath, which soothes the nerves and softens the skin. Take it just before retiring and you will sleep like a child. The bran, which may be bought at any feed store, should be put into a bag a foot and a half long and filled to the thickness of a high pillow. The bag should be allowed to remain in the water until thoroughly soaked and the water pressed out, so the bran can permeate all parts of the tub. Do not remain in the water longer than five minutes, and massage the skin thoroughly after.

SEASON CLOSED WITH VICTORY

East Jordan Defeated Friday In Hard Fought Battle

SCORE STANDING FIVE TO NOTHING

Charlevoix has met only one Defeat This Season

Coach Wilson Has Brought the Team up by Hard Labor until it Has a Record Hard to Beat in the State.

Again the high school foot ball team was victorious. This time it was East Jordan's sturdy team that went down to defeat to the score of 5 to 0. The snow which covered the grounds hindered the work of back field but otherwise the game was well played and both teams did some good work. The teams seemed about equal in the work of the line, tackling, interference, etc., but Charlevoix showed a greater versatality in plays and it was this that won the game.

Captain Small won the toss and chose the south goal. Charlevoix kicked to East Jordan who was held for downs. The locals secured the ball and run it back by on side kicks and cross bucks for a touch back. The visitors kicked from the 25 yard line and the ball was worked back to East Jordan's 15 yard line where they held but were forced to punt. Durgan broke through blocked the punt and fell on the ball. On the next play a delayed pass, Hampton took the ball and ran for a touchdown. Levinsan failed to kick goal. The whistle blew soon after and the game ended with the score Charlevoix 5, East Jordan 0.

In the second half neither team seemed able to make downs and the ball was wet so could not be punted with any accuracy. The The only long gain was on a forward pass by East Jordan which was unsuccessful and Small secured the ball and ran 20 yards before being downed. Soon the whistle blew and the game was won.

This game was the closing one of the season and with the exception of one game, lost to Petoskey, Charlevoix has been the victors each time and has a record which is unsurpassed by any high school team in Michigan.

Starting the season without any former practice their work has been remarkable and is a tribute to the hard, careful work of their trainer, Coach Wilson.

Later we will give comparative figures to prove that in football, as in everything else, Charlevoix has come to her own again and acknowledges no rivals.

WAS NEARLY UNANIMOUS

Bonding Proposition Carried by a vote of 439 to 11.

Thursday's special election for the purpose of borrowing $15,000 to build city docks created considerable interest 450 votes being polled.

As an evidence of the new progressive spirit of the city, the result was eloquent only eleven votes being registered against it.

November 30 the township of Charlevoix will hold a special election for the purpose of borrowing $5000 to build roads etc., and as their interests and the city's are identical an equally unanimous vote is looked for.

Vote of Charlevoix County.

Else where in this issue appears the report of the County Board of canvassers. The total vote based on presidential electors is:

Republican	2,538
Democratic	800
Prohibition	147
Socialists	178
Socialist Labor	7
Independence	11

In 1904 the vote was as follows:

Republican	2,772
Democratic	400
Prohibition	100
Socialist	58
People's	0

This is based on the vote received for Roosevelt and of course is not a fair comparison of the party vote.

ONE OF BEST IN STATE

Truant Officer Bashaw of East Jordan, so Considered.

Everybody in Charlevoix county knows that Truant Officer Will Bashaw is one of the most efficient officials and the letter below shows that our state department is not behind in appreciation of merit. The letter is in response to one written by Mr. Bashaw to the Michigan department of Public Instruction asking for certain rulings.

Lansing, Oct. 27, 1908.

Mr. Wm. F. Bashaw,
East Jordan, Michigan.

Dear Sir:—

Your letter of October 26 has been received and I have read it very carfully. The attorney general has ruled that one notice is sufficient for the year and if after receiving the notice the child is not in consecutive and regular attendance you should proceed at once to have the parent arrested and brought into court. The law contemplates that the attendance shall be consecutive and when it fails in that the parent is liable to arrest. If you can make an example of one or two cases of this sort you will doubtless have no further difficulty.

I consider that you are one of the best truant officers in the state.

Yours very truly,
L. L. Wright.

The Truant Officer's field only covers territory outside corporates villages and cities. This explanation is made owing to the fact that several residing in such have spoken to Mr. Bashaw relative to cases over which he has no jurisdiction.

Herald, East Jordan.

AN IMPORTANT SESSION

Will be the next one of Michigan Legislature

New Constitution will make Necessary Many New Statutes.

The legislature, which will meet January 1, will have more important legislation to consider than any session in recent years.

Through the necessity of amending and revising the statutes to confrom to the new constitution the schedule adopted by the convention directed the attorney general to advice the legislature relative to the necessary changes in existing laws to make them comply with the constitution as well as to suggest new laws needed to put into force the directory sections of the new constitution. The legal department already has a list of 25 measures.

In some cases the attorney general will present bills for consideration and in other cases will simply call attention to needed enactments. One important measure will be that to provide home rule for cities and villages; another is a law to prevent the use of streets by public utility corporations without the consent of the localities interested, and another will restrict franchises to 30 year terms. One subject, which will require careful consideration, will be a law providing for a uniform accounting in state, county and municipal offices.

The constitutional provisions relative to the initiative and referendum will require a statute to carry out the plans provided. Provisions must be made for the appeal of criminal cases in the supreme court where the respondent is without funds to carry his case to the higher court. The elective franchise is granted to woman taxpayers on all propostions to tax property owned by them.

The state officers and legislators secure a raise in salary which must be provided for.

The constitution also provides for the election of members of the state board of agriculture and also regulations relative to the deposit of state money in state banks. In the future members of the state board of education must be elected in the spring, which will require some changes in the election law.

The state railroad commission must be given increased power relative to regulating freight rates in the state.

Certain other acts will be required to provide several legislations and the entire list is not complete.

Nina Wilbur, who last season played "Bossy" in Hoyt's "A Texas Steer," will appear as the "Widow" at Charlevoix Theatre, Monday evening, November 23. 47tf

Thanksgiving Proclamation

To the people of the State of Michigan:

In accordance with an honored custom and with the proclamation of the President of the United States, I hereby designate Thursday, November 26, 1908, as a day of Thanksgiving.

This day should be set aside as one apart and observed as one that brings comfort and pleasure for the blessings conferred upon us during the year that has gone.

Material prosperity has come to us as a people and those upon whom the hand of affliction has been laid have realized that their lines were cast among a generous, sympathetic people who have shared with them their abundance. As a people and a state we have sought to care for and protect those of our number less fortunate than ourselves and those in charge of Michigan's great institutions where dwell our unfortunate and dependent should endeavor to make this day such a one that trouble and misfortune will be forgotten. Nor should those be overlooked whose liberty is restrained for our own protection, but upon this day we should remember that we are all God's children and give to them their measure of happiness.

A good world growing better every day and better opportunities than our fathers dreamed of are chief among God's blessings we have to be thankful for. To make our children's opportunities better yet than ours, to give to the coming generations their share of our rich heritage, to equalize, as far as possible, the burdens and blessings of government, these are the duties that devolve upon us and that we should upon this day of sacred memories of self-sacrificing and devotion ask God's help to reform.

A day of devout thanksgiving in the churches, of joyous reunions about the hearthstones will make us happier and better and those who aid in the observance of the day along these lines are proving themselves desirable citizens of the state we all love and honor.

In testimony whereof I have hereunto set my hand and caused the Great Seal of the State to be affixed at Lansing, this tenth day of November, in the year of our Lord, one thousand nine hundred and eight.

Fred M. Warner
Governor.

THEATRICAL

PLENTY OF FUN

The Madison Square Theatre Company Comes to Charlevoix Theatre.

The Madison Square Theatre company comes to the Charlevoix theatre Monday, November 23, presenting "A Race for a Widow." The play is said to be a capital one having met with success in this country as well as in most of the European countries. From all reports it seems to have the ingredients necessary to success; plenty of fun, a dash of society, a bit of love, a hint of pathos, and lots of movement, and presented by an excellent company of players selected because each was especially adapted to his or her particular character.

Nina Wilbur, will be seen as the "Widow" in which she was the star for two seasons.

The Majestic Theatre is rapidly nearing completion, and Manager Stoddard informs us that he will be ready to open it to the public very soon after Thanksgiving.

Engon's Theatre continues to give a good show each night and maintains its reputation as a good place to spend a half hour in resting.

NEW BARBER SHOP

I have opened my new barber shop in the building next to Mason's grocery. S. M. Rose will be in charge and I will be pleased to meet all my old friends.

STATE FORESTY ASSOCIATION

Held at Battle Creek Discussed the Forest Fire Question.

With difference between Professor Roth and State game Warden Pierce partly settled, the state forestry association closed its third annual convention at Battle Creek with an elaborate banquet. At the afternoon session officers were elected as follows;

President, J. H. Bissell of Detroit; vice president, Morris Quinn, Saginaw; treasurer, William Mershon, Saginaw; secretary, Henry Stevens, Detroit.

Resolutions were passed urging the passage of laws for the protection of property and lives; that the state make use of the waste lands, and that taxation be adjusted. They also urged that fires be treated as a public enemy and the state patrol its own land. They asked that the fire laws be made stronger and the people who set fires vigorously prosecuted, and that part of the revenue from the sale of timber go to roads and schools. They recommended the appointment of a state forester.

"Playing politics" in the appointment of deputies and the general conduct of the department, and failure to realize the gravity of the situation which led to the recent disastrous forest fires in the state were the most pointed charges that had been made by Prof. Roth, but after explanations by Mr. Pierce, the professor expressed himself as satisfied.

FIRST ANNUAL FAIR

Of Boyoe River Grange was a Great Success

Fine Display of Farm Products, Good Dinner and Speeches.

The first annual fair of Boyne River Grange No. 1010 held on October 27, surpassed all expectations of its members. The afternoon was fine, balmy fall weather just right for the occasion. A good attendance and a fine collection of grain, vegetables, fruit and last, but not least, chicken pies and other things good to eat was the consequence.

Owing to a light rain in the evening a great many that intended coming for the evening entertainment and supper did not attend but over one hundred sat down to a genuine old time farmer feast. A good time and success to the grange was the sentiment of all that attended.

The Hon. Leonard E. Knowles gave a speech on the constitutional convention, that was much appreciated by everyone. Mr. Knowles is a good speaker and as he was one of the hardest workers at the convention and a strong advocate of the advantages of the new constitution, to say that his speech was instructing, interesting and to the point, hardly does him the justice he deserves.

COUNTY NORMAL NOTES.

Maude Cross Susie Sheldon and Hazel Holliday spent Sunday at their homes in East Jordan.

Florence Sheldon took charge of Miss Lewis' room Monday morning until the East Jordan boat arrived.

CHARLEVOIX IS WIDE AWAKE

The Dawn of a New Era is in Evideoce

SAW AND HAMMER MAKE SWEET MUSIC

In a City With Unsurpassed Natural Advantages

New Industries New Buildings and a Unanimous Purpose to Pull Together for Charlevoix in the Year to Come.

The practically unanimous vote by which the bonding proposition carried Thursday is but an added evidence of the fact, which is apparent on every hand, that the citizens of Charlevoix have awakened to the fact that they have a part to play in the development of northern Michigan; that the time has arrived when no longer can we set idly by, content to rest upon our laurels as a resort town, with advantages in that line which challenges the competion of any place on earth, but that we wish to hear the busy hum of wheels turning out manufactured products to supply the needs of the world, to see the smoke arising from our factory chimneys, proclaiming to the world that Charlevoix has the industries which mean to the prospective business man, who desires to locate in our midst, a weekly pay roll is in evideace to be distributed among them.

Not only is Thursday's vote an evideace of Charlevoix's awakeoing to her superior advantages, but on every hand we see the erection of new houses and improvemeots of those all ready built. In only one particular are we unable to present these silent witnesses of a city's progress—that is on Bridge street, which alone has only one witness to answer. Here: when its name is called, find that, the new Majestic Theatre.

However, we have information that next season will see the erection at some new business buildings on our principle street. Our merchants are alive to the possibilities which lie before them and no longer will be content to occupy their present quarters, which are behind the spirit of the age. Better buildings means better incomes, both for their owners and their tenants, and a better and a more wide awake community.

In municipal improvements Charlevoix has long been able to say to its neighbors; we are in the advance, and with the new buildings now being erected; with those in prospect; with the mammoth cement factory an assured fact; with the extension of our railroad facilities; with our established summer reputation, we can well be proud and say Here is a city of homes, of factories, of wide awake business men and natural advantage, superior to all. Come and be one of us and your heart will be filled with joy.

Combined with other extremely valuable ingredients, it forms a preparations which is incomparable as a perfect bowel regulator, intestinal invigorator and strengthener. Rexal Orderlies are notable for their agreeableness to the palate and gentleness of action. They do not cause griping or any disagreeable effect or inconvenience, and may be taken at any time, day or night.

We particularly recommend Rexall Orderlies for children, delicate aged persons because they do not contain anything that could possibly injure the most delicate organism. They are just as easy to take as candy, and unlike other preparations for a like purpose they do not create a habit, but instead they overcome the cause of habits acquired through the use of ordinary laxatives, cathartics and harsh physic, and permanently remove the cause of constipation or irregular bowel action.

We want you to try Rexall Orderlies at our risk. We know there is nothing that will do you so much good, and we will refund your money without argument if they do not do as we say they will. They are prepared in tablet form in two sizes of packages; 36 tablets, 25c., and 12 tablets, 10c. The Ivy Drug store, A. B. Fleischer, proprietor.

THE FRUIT CROP.

Some Ideas Worth Putting Into Practice Next Season.

It is a mistake to suppose that fruit bearing plants will do their best if they receive attention only now and then. Irregular care will not amount to much. Moreover, the cultivator should, as soon as the bearing season is over, begin to consider what may be done to induce a better crop next year.

Many old plantations of raspberries and blackberries that are filled with dead canes and weeds can be so renewed and renovated that they will bear an abundance of the fruit. To keep a berry patch in the highest state of productiveness the old canes should be removed after fruiting and the young growth of small canes properly pruned out and thinned in the row. If this is neglected next year you will have a small crop of inferior berries, good neither to eat nor to sell.

Blackberries and the red or sucker varieties of raspberries require similar culture. In May begin to cultivate and to thin plants in the row. Blackberries should be thinned so the plants will stand at an average distance of about one foot apart in the row. Save only the largest and best canes. The width of the rows may be two feet, with a space of four feet between them. Keep the ground clean with cultivator and hoe and the soil stirred about the plants.

berries select a deep clay loam, but make it only moderately rich with stable manure for raspberries, as the canes are less hardy in very rich soil.

The marketing of small fruit may be greatly facilitated by having a number of basket crates. A plan for such container is shown herewith. Its dimensions are so arranged that three of the crates can be made to occupy the space of two when it is desired to store them. The dotted lines indicate how the two crates may be arranged opening to opening so as to contain the third. The dimensions of the crate are shown on the top crate, the same being sixteen and one-eighth inches long, thirteen and one-eighth inches wide and twelve and one-eighth inches high, with two end cleats which makes the capacity equal to a bushel. By turning the paper to the right a better view of the crate may be had.

EVIDENCES are multiplying that the next legislature is to witness a protracted struggle, waged on the one hand by the liquor interests to secure legislation favorable to the saloon, and on the other hand by the anti-saloon forces who propose further restrictions on the trade in intoxicants. Since election the representatives of both elements have been busy canvassing the members-elect of the state legislature, with the result that both sides claim a predominant influence in the law-making body. Evidently it will take some test of strength after the legislature convenes to demonstrate the accuracy of one or the other of these conflicting claims.

If the time has not actually arrived, it is closely impending, when the excise question will become the predominant issue in state affairs of Michigan just as it has in many neighboring states. We do not mean by this that there is any likelihood of Michigan going for prohibition, but we think it extremely probable that a law will soon be written upon the statute books of the state of Michigan designed to to drive out of business the low dive and groggery, and at the same time improve the character of the saloons which may be continued under the law. If the liquor interests of the state are wise, instead of antagonizing such a movement, they will cordially support it as the very best possible way in which to postpone, if not make impossible total prohibition, and at the same time rid themselves of the onus the trade now bears because of the existance of many saloons which because of their character and surroundings are breeding dens of vice and crime.

A law to limit the number of saloons according to population, making saloon licenses automatically revokable upon a second conviction of violation of the liquor laws, and removing the control of saloons from local elective officials and placing it in the hands of a state excise commission, would command the support of a great many of the citizens of the state, many of whom are now opposed to total prohibition but who are weakening in their position on this question because of the present degrading and evil influence of the saloon.

Just how such a plan may be worked out in detail we are not prepared to say, although it is clear in our minds that there is an element of justice in the assertion made by the liquor interests that to summarily put out of business a large number of saloons which have existed for years under full protection of the state law, is unjust and amounts practically to confiscation of private property. This is not, however, in our opinion an insurmountable obstacle and if this met fairly and equitably should remove the last objection of the intelligent liquor men of the state, who sincerely desire to improve the conditions of the trade, to such proposed legislation.—Soo News.

ONE of the results of the recent election is to bring to the front the name of Congressman Townsend of Jackson, prominently to the front as a candidate for United States Senator who would be satisfactory to everybody. Not only would Mr. Townsend be a satisfactory choice but the people of Michigan would know that with Mr. Townsend in the Senate the state would be well represented. During his first term in Congress he, by his own merits, advanced to a leading position and has continued to grow ever since.

While there may, and probably will be other candidates in the field, Mr. Townsend has at this time a strong lead which it will be hard to overcome.

Influence of the Chicago Stock Show

The International Live Stock Exposition, which will this year be held from November 18 to December 10 inclusive, has proved such a triumphal success, has made such phenomenal growth has so widened its education influence and has scored as such a popular attraction to all classes, that the management found it necessary to extend the dates, thus offering exhibitors greater opportunities, giving visitors more comfort and granting those most directly connected with the live stock industry more time for study and research.

The educational influence that radiates from this exposition cannot be overestimated, and as the live stock industry is the very life of agriculture and this great exposition its right arm, no progressive farmer or feeder can afford to ignore it.

The fate of the American farmer is, to a considerable extent, bound up with the success of his keeping live stock. The father owes it to his son to give him such training as will bring the best results, and the lessons taught at the "International" are of such a nature that they will not only create ideals, but also assure ultimate success; consequently, he should not overlook this opportunity, take advantage of the low railroad fares, acquire such lessons at this exposition as will prove beneficial to him in the performance of his daily labors, and also give himself and family a change, and perhaps much needed recreation.

The Wedding Ring.

Many believe that the loss of a wedding ring means that the husband's love will be lost in turn. If the ring is broken, the husband will soon die. In Ireland it is a general belief that to rub a sore with a golden wedding ring will cause it to speedily heal. The wedding ring is supposed never to tarnish, and if it does become dim it is said to be a warning that love also is tarnished and dim.

Money That Was Formerly Sent to the Mail Order Houses Now Spent at Home and Kept In Circulation There. Business Increased Greatly.

There is a hustling and progressive little town in the middle west that is quickly growing into a city, but the story of the beginning of its boom is known to few people. It started one day when a resident of the town was discussing local matters with the station master while waiting for his train.

"I understand," he remarked, "that Jones, the dry goods merchant, is not doing business enough to pay for the oats his horses eat and that Brown, the hardware dealer, is also on the verge of failure."

"Yes, it's a fact," replied the station master. "Too bad, isn't it?"

"Well, in a way it is, of course, but it must be their own fault. Antiquated business methods are probably the cause of it."

"That's where you make a big mistake," promptly returned the station master. "I happen to know Brown and Jones very well, and I tell you they are a couple of mighty up to date business men. Would you care to know the real facts in the case?"

"Well, I'm not particularly interested in these fellows and their affairs," was the reply, "but"—

"That's just it," broke in the station master. "Most of the residents here live along year after year without a thought to our tradesmen, and when one of them fails you lay it to antiquated business methods. As a matter of fact, it is because you fellows fail to give them the support they have a right to expect."

"Why, how do you mean?"

"I mean that instead of sending to the mail order houses or picking up in the city anything you need in the hardware, clothing or dry goods line it is your duty to give the home merchants a chance for that trade. Of course you are not expected to pay a dollar for anything you can get out of town for 50 or 75 cents, but you'll find in the long run that you can do as well if not better right here at home, and just think what it means to the local merchant! Why, thousands of dollars are sent away every year when they could have been spent right here to better advantage."

"I don't know about that," replied the other.

"Well, I'll give you a little proof of it," went on the station master. "I happened to be talking to Brown, the hardware merchant, the other day when your boy came along on a new bicycle, and we stopped him and looked the machine over."

"I got that wheel through a mail order house for $18.50," said the resident proudly.

"Yes, that's what the boy told us, and after he had gone Brown took me into his store and showed me identically the same wheel for $15."

"You don't tell me! Well, why doesn't he advertise that he has such bargains?"

"Simply because you people here, who patronize the mail order houses almost exclusively, don't give him your trade, and consequently he hasn't the money to do it. He knows the value of advertising in the local papers and spends every dollar he can afford to in that direction, but a share of the local trade that is rightly his would give him an opportunity to spread out in that direction. Money spent at home, you know, is going to be put in circulation at home, but when you send a dollar away from here it is gone forever. There is a big howl in this town, too, for improvements, but if we're going to let the merchants run down hill this way the town isn't going to move ahead to any great extent."

"Well, there's a good deal of sound sense in what you say," said the resident after a little thought. "I'll bring this matter up at the club tonight and see what the others think of it."

A few months later the merchants in that town were doing more business than they had in years, and it wasn't long before improvements in other directions were coming thick and fast. A board of trade was eventually organized. The local papers received such support that they could take a hand in the boom, and a woman's improvement society was formed that has done much to improve and beautify the town, thus attracting desirable residents.

TO DEVELOP CIVIC PRIDE.

Value of Forming Block Improvement Societies.

A garden contest in Chicago during the last season brought out much rivalry in all parts of the city. The territory was divided into five sections, with prizes for each one.

In awarding the prizes the judges took into consideration the local environment as well as the artistic excellence of the garden, window box, porch treatment or exhibit judged.

The thing that stood out conspicuous as the principal feature of the contest, says the Chicago Tribune, was the certain contribution which an individual may make to the adornment of the city in which he lives.

The speakers at the meeting at which the prizes were awarded represented different phases of municipal improvement. Each one of them emphasized the individual work as of great local value.

The president of a union of improvement societies scattered throughout the city declared that individual interest in pleasing home surroundings was the source of strength of the neighborhood improvement idea.

The same thought is behind the "block improvement society" movement in Birmingham, Ala. The mayor of that city has called upon the individual to help make it a "city beautiful."

The plan followed is to form an improvement association in each block with a view of developing civic pride as well as interest in keeping the premises of the individual clean and attractive.

The Birmingham plan forms a desirable link between the individual citizen and the village or ward improvement association. By making the field of activity much smaller the chances of energetic accomplishments are increased many times.

A notable gain is made in the enlistment of the interest of the boys and girls in their immediate environment. If they are taught the desirability of things of beauty in the way of lawn, shrubs and flowers in their own home yards they will be much more apt to respect the rights of others.

The value of civic interest of this sort to a community is clearly understood. Clean streets and alleys, nice lawns, well kept gardens, properly trimmed shade trees, all have their worth to every resident.

The accomplishments of the many improvement societies which have been established during the last quarter of a century in parts of the United States have been marvelous.

This Birmingham "block improvement society" idea is so practical that it is likely to be adopted in many other places.

The closer a movement of this sort is brought to the individual the better. The "city or town beautiful" sought in many localities will not have its coming long delayed where individual interest in it is everywhere dominant.

Perverse Women.

Walter Pater, an old man at fifty, bald as a coot and grotesquely plain, regarded every woman much as did Dean Swift, who wrote, "A very little wit is valued in a woman, as we are pleased with few words spoken intelligibly by a parrot." "You don't approve of marriage?" a friend once observed to Pater. "No," he replied, "nor would anybody else if he gave the matter proper consideration. Men and women are always pulling different ways. Women won't pull our way. They are so perverse."

THE PRICE OF PEPPER.

It Helped to Change the History of the Old World.

In the sixteenth century all the pepper consumed in England was bought by the English merchants from the Dutch, who brought it from India. Owing to racial jealousy, the Dutch traders in 1599 raised the cost from 3 shillings to 6 shillings per pound. This petty display of ill feeling caused considerable annoyance to the English merchants and aroused in them that feeling of independence which has always been so characteristic of our race.

They determined to import their pepper direct from India in their own ships and for this purpose formed a company, called the Governor and Company of Merchants of London Trading to the East Indies, which in latter days became eventually known as the East India company.

Their first voyages embroiled them in almost innumerable quarrels with the Dutch and Portuguese, and for a time the venture proved a financial failure. It was not until 1615 that the company became successful and obtained lucrative treaties, owing to their decisively defeating the Portuguese.

From this time on their possessions gradually increased, slowly at first and then very rapidly, until, by the wise and beneficial management of such men as Clive, Warren Hastings and Cornwallis, they exercised sovereignty over the greater portion of India.

In this manner it happened that an increase in the price of pepper momentously affected the history of mankind.—London Standard.

DIVISIONS OF TIME.

The Planet Venus Has Neither Days, Months Nor Years.

Though the fundamental division of time, the day, appears intuitive to most persons, it is well to remember that in the arctic regions the marking of this division is by no means easy. During several successive months the sun is either always below or always above the horizon, and the only method—a very uncertain one—of distinguishing between day and night is to observe the times of high and low tide. Division of time into months comes from the motions of the moon. Malays, Polynesians and Australian aborigines reckon time exclusively by months and days.

That greater unit of time, the year, characterized by the regular succession of the seasons, has presented the greatest difficulties to exact determination, partly because the seasons are not sharply distinguished in some regions, partly because of the universal desire to establish among the year, month and day simple relations which find no support in the facts of astronomy.

Inhabitants of Venus, if there are any, must find it extremely difficult to establish units of time. Venus always turns the same face toward the sun, so the planet has no day, and the lack of a moon deprives it of a month. Finally, it has no year, for its axis of rotation is perpendicular to the plane of its orbit and the latter is almost circular.—Chicago News.

Yeomen's Homes.

The housing problem in Elizabeth's day may have left the laborer in very primitive dwellings, but it gave noble mansions to the great and to farmers and country craftsmen pleasant homes of such durability and such charm that many of them stand today to shame us into a less contemptible mode of building than that which the nineteenth century produced.—Country Life.

At a session of the United States court, Judge Knappen presiding, attorneys for the Stearns Salt & Lumber company of Ludington filed a motion asking permission to withdraw the plea of guilty registered by Justins S. Stearns last June, when the company was fined $20,000 and the costs, under the state commerce act, which charged them with receiving rebates.

The attorneys stated that at the time of the plea of guilty was entered Mr. Stearns was laboring under a misapprehension of the facts, believing he was guilty of all the counts charged in the indictment. He was charged with 28 violations of the interstate commerce act, eight of which were withdrawn. On the remaining 20 counts Judge Knappen fined him $20,000 in a lump sum.

The company's attorneys now claim that as six of the counts were separate offenses, and charged as the same, that the court could not spread a fine in a lump sum. The remaining 14 counts, they claim, he finds after investigation, he is not guilty of.

District Attorney Covell opposed the motion and the case was taken under advisement.

Victor M. Gore of Benton Harbor, represents the Stearns company.

This motion is a similar one to that made before Judge Landis of Chicago, by the Standard Oil company.

Resolutions of Respect.

To the officers and members of White Rose Hive No. 443.

Your committee, to whom was give the sad duty of drafting resolutions of respect to the memory of our fale Sister, Edith Mason Massot, submit the following.

Whereas the Angel of Death has again entered our Hive, and taken from us our beloved Sister: Resolved

That while we submit, to the inevitable, and bow in humble submission to His divine will, we do not the less mourn the untimely death of our worthy Sister. There is no Fraternity so firmly cemented but that its Golden Links may be severed by His holy will. Resolved

That the sincere and heartfelt sympathy of this Hive, be extended to the husband and family in the dark hour of bereavement, and we commend them to the guidance and care of our Heavenly Father, who cureth for all. Resolved

That these resolutions be placed on the Record Book of Our Hive, a copy sent to the sorrowing family, and that they be published in the Charlevoix paper.

DRY ROT IN CORN.

A Disease Which Threatens to Become a Serious Matter.

The name dry rot is derived from the way the ears are affected in the field. "In general the husks tend to turn premnturely yellow to sooty, and the ear becomes partially or wholly shriveled and much decreased in weight. Sometimes the ears remain upright with the husks closely adhering to them. In other cases the shanks are weakened, and the affected ears hang limp from their attachment, or the diseased condition may not be detected until the husk is removed."

There are several kinds of dry rot, due to different causes. The most common and that which has during the past two seasons caused about 90 per cent of the damage in Illinois is due to a fungus known as Diplodia maydis. Ears infected with this fungus "shrivel up more or less, darken in color and become light in weight."

The kernels are also shriveled, very brittle and loosely attached to the cob. The fungus penetrates all portions of the ear, kernels, cob and husks and produces many dark brown two celled spores which serve to propagate the fungus.

In the case of the diplodia disease and quite probably in that of the other forms the fungus perpetuates itself over winter on the old diseased ears and old stalks. It is not usually difficult to find throughout the summer in old cornfields, where the disease has previously prevailed, many pieces of old cornstalks which are infected with the diplodia fungus. Stalks known to be two years old have been found still producing spores. During moist period spores ooze from these stalks in abundance and are blown singly or in masses long distances, as has been frequently demonstrated by experiment.

The fungus does not, according to present knowledge, grow upon any other host and upon developing corn only on the ears. Not so much is known of the other fungi here concerned, but since 90 per cent of the rot is due to diplodia less attention need be given to them. Diseased ears are fruitful sources of subsequent infection and should be removed as promptly as possible. This can be readily done, at the time of husking if not before. Keep them in a separate receptacle and burn them as soon as practicable. In addition to this, in fields where any considerable amount of disease has been found, the stalks should also have attention, whatever crop is to follow. Something may be gained by carefully plowing them under and leaving them well covered, but burning may be required even if this is otherwise bad procedure.

If the first suggestion is always followed and the others are put into practice whenever necessity demands it, these serious losses may be practically prevented.

An Alfalfa Harrow.

The culture of alfalfa has now reached the point in this country where it is creating new lines of industry aside from the growth of the crop. A convention of alfalfa millers was recently held in Kansas. Many people will be astonished to know that the business of grinding alfalfa hay into meal has reached the point where millers organize their business. Baled alfalfa, according to these millers, is going out of the market, while the ground product has reached an enormous sale.

In the culture of the crop also new tools and methods are being devised. In the southwest particularly it has been found desirable to work the alfalfa over with some shallow working tool, which will chop up the ground without cutting off the crop, so as to prevent its sprouting. A recent bulletin from the Arizona station discusses this matter. The proper kind of disk harrow in that country not only quickens up the growth of alfalfa and destroys a large number of weeds, but also helps destroy many insect enemies by turning up their eggs so that they are destroyed. For some time the ordinary disk harrows were used, but a new tool is now being operated. In this tool spikes or teeth like those used on a tooth harrow are fastened to the disk, so that instead of cutting the surface, as a disk harrow does, these teeth chop up and turn over the surface.

Killing Sumac.

For killing out sumac a correspondent recommends a flock of sheep. First mow the sumac, then turn in the sheep. Sumac may be destroyed by persistent cutting after flowering season and before it sets berries, but sheep will do the work at less trouble and expense.

A Forcing Effect.

Fresh manure has a forcing effect and tends to produce stems and leaves at the expense of fruit and grain. It is therefore better for early garden truck, grasses and forage plants than for cereals or fruit.

Why is it impossible for a person who lisps to believe in young ladies? Because he calls every miss a myth.

Why is an old chair with a new bottom in it like a paid up bill? Because it has been reseated (receipted).

SHAKE IT IN BOTTLE

Noted Authority Gives a Simple Prescription

Tells the Readers of this Paper how to Prepare the Mixture at Home and Other Advice

Now is the time when the doctor gets busy, and the patent medicine manufacturers reap the harvest, unless great care is taken to dress warmly and keep the feet dry. This is the advice of an old eminent authority, who says that rheumatism and kidney trouble weather is here, and also tells what to do in case of an attack.

Get from any good prescription pharmacy one-half nunce Fluid Extract Dandelion, one ounce of compound Kargoo, three ounces compound Syrup Sarsaparilla. Mix by shaking well in bottle and take a teaspoonful after each meal and at bedtime.

Just try this simple home-made mixture at the first sign of rheumatism, or if your back aches or you feel that the kidneys are not acting just right. This is said to be a splendid kidney regulator, and almost certain remedy for all forms of rheumatism, which is caused by uric acid in the blood, which the kidneys fail to filter out. Anyone can easily prepare this at home and at small cost.

Druggists in this town and vicinity, when shown the prescription, stated that they can either supply these ingredients, or, if our readers prefer, they will compound the mixture for them.

WANT IMMEDIATE ACTION.

Why Socialism Invaded the Political Arena.

We are asked, Why hurry into politics? We see the benefit of going into politics. If we had not rushed into politics, had not taken Massachusetts by the four corners and shaken her, you never would have written your criticisms. We rush into politics because politics is the safety valve. We could discuss as well as you if you would only give us bread and houses, fair play and leisure and opportunities to travel. We could sit and discuss the question for the next fifty years. It's a very easy thing to discuss for a gentleman in his study, with no anxiety about tomorrow.

Why, the ladies and gentlemen of the reign of Louis XV. and Louis XVI., in France, seated in gilded saloons and on Persian carpets, surrounded with luxury, with the products of India and the curious manufactures of ingenious Lyons and Rheims, discussed the right of man and balanced them in dainty phrases and expressed them in such quaint generalizations that Jefferson borrowed the Declaration of Independence from their hands.

There they sat, balancing and discussing sweetly, making out how theories and daily erecting a splendid architecture of debate till the angry crowd broke open the doors and ended the discussion in blood. They waited too long discussed about half a century too long. You see, discussion is very good when a man has bread to eat and his children all portioned off and his daughters married and his home furnished and paid for and his will made, but discussion is very bad when—

Ye hear the children weeping, O my brothers,
Ere the sorrow comes with years.

Discussion is vital when a class bends under actual oppression. We want immediate action.—Wendell Phillips.

Environment.

Every thief in the land denounces Socialism as confiscation; every embezzler opposes Socialism as being dishonest; everything criminal and bum in the cities votes the old tickets. And yet all these men under right conditions would be upright, honorable men. Men are the creatures of their environment. They are made what they are by the conditions of life under which they are reared. You believe this, though I hear you deny it as you read it. That is because you do not think on the matter long enough to understand it. If you did not believe this, you would as soon your daughters associated with one class of people as another; you would make no effort to have them associate with the best. If association has no influence, why do you care with whom they associate? Oh, if you would only read a single chapter on economic determinism, what an awakening to your own interest and benefit it would produce. Try it.—Appeal to Reason

Waste of Enforced Idleness.

The awful waste incidental to capitalism is sufficient to condemn it. We have 3,000,000 unemployed workers. Every one of these would have produced his own living if he had free access to the means. Under capitalism this is denied them simply because at present there is no opportunity to exploit their labor. These men have been out of work since last October. If their average wages were $1.50 per day each, and, figuring that they have been out of work for six months, then the loss of wealth that would have been produced had they been permitted to work is over $750,000,000.

Internationality of Socialism.

The Socialist party is the only political organization which represents the interests of the working class in all countries as against the interests of the capitalist class now ruling under every form of government, whether republican, as in the United States, or monarchial, as in England and Germany, or despotic, as in Russia.

Good and Bad Schools.

"Environment is the greatest of all schools," says Professor Stanley Hall of Clark university. That is correct. But there are good and bad environments. How about that? And how can society allow part of her people to go to the school of bad environment and then expect them to grow up into useful citizens?

The Best Governed Cities.

The best governed cities on earth, the cleanest, healthiest, most progressive and happiest, are the cities of the German empire. And the reason is this—there is a strong Social-Democratic minority in every city in the empire.

Counsel (at the end of a long speech): "Then, m'lud, comes the question of bags. They might have been full bags or half full bags, or, again, m'lud, they might have been empty bags."

Judge (feeling very bored): Or they might have been wind bags.—London Telegraph.

Not a Good Investment.

The Mount Hermon (California) Temperance Convention committee has published the assertion that "The liquor traffic is crumbling commercially from within," a significant statement, which is elaborated upon thus:

"Commercial decline seems to have begun in the manufacture of liquor; the capital is moving toward other investment. Commercial laws reigns here as elsewhere. The manufacturer of liquor is in the business for financial gain; it is a commercial matter with him. If the profits of the trade fall below the earnings of money in the general marketv, viz.: six per cent net on the capital invested, he will move his capital into other investments. That movement seems to have begun, and the causes for it are apparent: the area for the sale of liquor in the United States has been greatly lessened by local option, prohibition and business necessities; the expense for the defense of the traffic runs far into the millions and is increasing. The invested capital is nervous, it is under the tyranoy of the laws of the trade. The liquor traffic is crumbling commercially."

This statement is encouraging not only to the foes of the traffic, but to those who fear the commercial results of the overthrow of so vast a business. It may very possibly come about, through the gradual withdrawal of capital from the liquor business, that its complete downfall, when that comes, will not involve so great interests as has been supposed, nor create any grave or lasting commercial disturbance.

A second statement from the source already quoted is that "The liquor traffic is under moral condemnation from without" which requires no proof and these two facts are made the basis for the conclusion that "The liquor traffic is going up to a last and final judgment."

Small Boy (noticing the Phi Beta Kappa key hanging from the minister's chain): Did you find it again or is this another? Minister—Why, my little man, what do you mean? I never lost it. Small Boy—Oh, mother said you had lost the charm you had when you were young.—Judge.

The One Sure Way

to have money is to save it. The one sure way to save it is by depositing it in a responsible bank. You will then be exempt from the annoyance of having it burn holes in your pockets, and aside from the fact that your money will be safe from theft, the habit of saving tends to the establishment of thoift, economy, discipline and a general understanding of business principals essential to your success.

Courier Grange Column

THE next session of the State Grange will be held at Saginaw the second week in December. The executive committee have made arrangements for one of the best sessions ever held. Governor Hanly of Indiana, will be present and deliver an address sometime during the session. The fifth and sixth degrees will be conferred in full form and the lecturer's conference will be given the prominence it deserves.

There seems to be a universal opinion that the election of state officers will result in a complete new staff of officers from Master down. For Master the names of A. E. Palmer and N. P. Hull will be presented by their friends. For overseer C. A. VanDeventer of Gratiot and A. T. Green of Montcalm, have announced their candidacies and the names of Jennie Hnell and Mrs. E. J. Creyts are mentioned for lecturer.

Probably the most important business to Charlevoix patrons will be the choice of the next place of meeting, as northern Michigan will ask that it be brought to Traverse City.

Ironton Grange No. 707.

Ironton grange met in regular session November 14. Brother John Knudsen acted as master in the absence of worthy master Peter Knudsen.

Four applications were received for membership.

Lecturer's hour was taken up by readings from most of the members. The lecturer read a communication about some books that the Agricultural college would let us have, but some of the members thought they didn't have the time to read them and some didn't have the money to buy them.

The hunting match took place Thursday, November 12, with the supper the next night. There were nineteen rabbits and twelve partridges which tasted very good.

Next meeting November 21.

Marion Center Grange No. 956.

Marion Center grange met November 11, opening in usual form in the fourth degree. After the usual order of business one candidate was obligated in first and second degrees. Next meeting November 25, there will be initiation in third and fourth degrees followed by harvest feast. All members are especially urged to attend.

Boyne River Grange No. 1010.

Boyne River grange no. 1010 hold regular meetings every 1st and 3rd Saturday evenings of the month.

Meeting of November 7 called to order with Master Marshall Magee in the chair. About twenty officers and members were present and Mr. and Mrs. Will Pearson took third and fourth degrees. Literary program consisted of talks on whether or not our present method of reporting truant scholars to school commissioner's could not be improved in rural schools.

South Arm Grange No. 815.

South Arm grange met November 14, with a smaller attendance than usual. The meeting was the last one of literary contest. Brothers Frank St. John and Ira Burbanks sides won the contest. The two losing sides are to furnish the supper. They will decide at the next meeting what kind of a supper they will have and when it shall be served.

A short discussion on the Christmas tree and program for the same followed, but nothing definite was decided upon and the matter was carried over until the next meeting. The grange has had a Christmas tree every year but one since it was organized.

The grange hunt which was held November 6th, was a good success, nearly everyone of the brothers hunted. Worthy Master made the most points his number being 675. Brother Eugene Miles scored 650 and Lawrence Isaman 625. The score of points, in part, were as follows: rabbit and partridge each 75, red squirrel 25, blue-jay 15, gray squirrel 100, black squirrel 75, deer, 500, etc.

The hunt supper was held Saturday, November 7. The young members of the grange held a shower for sister Cassie Cincush whose marriage to Mr. Eaton of Ellsworth, is announced.

Worthy Master Olney is absent on a hunting trip in the upper peninsula.

Standing The Test.

By W. F. Bryan.

Copyrighted, 1908, by Associated Literary Press.

Excitement was at white heat in the convention town. The ring was in the last ditch, fighting gamely. Robert Woodham, who had led many another forlorn hope and who had grown gray in the service of his party as he had understood that service, shook his head as he went over the columns of figures in the inner office at the temporary headquarters.

Try as he would he could not figure a victory. The two-thirds rule prevailed and he could count barely a majority for the ring candidate. The nomination of Dudley for governor meant the triumph of the reform faction and the utter disruption of the state machine, for Foster stood pledged to investigate to the fullest the graft charges brought against the ring.

On the other hand, Graham Bailey was secretly pledged to forget the same promises he had made. Apparently both men were eager to uncover the graft that was the disgrace of the party, but Foster alone was sincere.

The exposure of the graft scandals would not affect Woodham directly. He had always kept himself clear of the crooked work in the party. Could it be accomplished quietly, he would welcome the feat of ridding the party of those politicians who were responsible for the scandal, but here lay the trouble. The graft was widespread. His uncovering would disrupt the entire party machine. New and inexperienced men would be placed in charge of the party interests, and no members of the old ring could find a place in the councils.

To Robert Woodham politics was as the breath of life to his nostrils. He had played the game from the day that he had organized the Junior Marching club in the little village which had been his boyhood home. It was his sole relaxation. Other strategists played chess. He preferred the political pawn to the bits of carved wood or ivory and his board was an entire state.

Now he saw the end of it all. Unless on an early ballot he could swing the doubtful delegates into the Bailey ranks there would be a stampede to Foster. If he could arrange to stampede some of the Foster delegates to Bailey the uncertain delegates would probably follow the lead of the deserters.

"REVOLT IS IN THE VERY AIR!" CRIED THE OLD MAN

As for the hundredth time his eye ran down the column his hands clinched nervously. His glance rested for a moment on Crosby county with its eleven votes.

Crosby county stood committed to Foster. Could Woodham induce them to change it would mean a difference of twenty-two votes for Bailey, the eleven votes added and the eleven taken away from the Foster adherents. The head of the Crosby delegation was Howard Graves. The others would vote as he voted. And only a few days before Graves had asked consent to marry Marian Woodham!

At the time Woodham had refused because Graves was a young attorney still struggling for recognition at the bar, while Woodham was ambitious for his daughter. Now he drew a sheet of paper toward him and wrote rapidly for a moment. Then he thrust the sheet into an envelope and called a messenger.

An hour later Howard Graves, resting in his room at the hotel for the battle of the morrow, received the missive and read it a dozen times before he placed it in his pocket.

It was diplomatically worded. It did not openly bribe, but suggested that the writer had learned that he was mistaken as to Graves' political affiliations. If it was true, as he now had reason to believe, that Graves and the Crosby delegation were in reality supporters of the Bailey boom, he begged to withdraw his opposition to the match Graves had suggested.

Graves was still uncertain when he went into the convention hall the following morning. From his place in the Skeene county delegation Woodham nodded pleasantly to him and with a glance directed the young attorney's gaze into the galleries.

There ran from the four sides of the hall, and directly above the chairman's desk sat Marian Woodham. She had come down in answer to her father's telegram the night before, and they entered the convention hall before he had explained to her the reason he had sent for her.

"You keep your eye on Graves and he will vote right," had been her father's admonition. "Your wedding present will be that house on Maple street, and you can furnish it as you like. I'll take your husband into the firm too."

It was a heavy bribe. The house alone was worth $10,000, and a partnership with Woodham, Calls & Creagh would save Graves a weary struggle. It was scarcely to be wondered at that her face was white and wan as she leaned over the balcony rail and tried to smile at Graves.

She heard as in a dream the preliminaries. The state chairman placed Bailey's name in nomination, and her father seconded it, asking that the nomination be made unanimous. There was a derisive hoot from the opposition at this, and some one nominated Dudley Foster, and some one else made the seconding speech. There were no other nominations, and the chairman of the convention directed that the balloting begin.

It was the custom in the convention for the spokesman of each delegation to announce the vote when the name of his county was called, and the lifeless voice of the clerk began.

From the first it was apparent that the contest would be close, and as Crosby county was called there was a stir through the hall. All the morning there had been rumors that some of the Foster delegates would go over to the ring candidate, and Crosby county had been one of those mentioned. As Graves rose in his place men moved forward on the edge of their chairs and Marian's face went deadly white.

For a moment Graves stood unsteadily regarding the blur of faces, in which Marian's stood out distinctly. Even at that distance he could see that she was intensely interested, and the thought that she counted on his treachery hurt for a moment, even though he realized that it was natural that she should be interested in her father's success.

To him the time seemed an hour; to others it seemed a full minute, though it was not one-quarter of that time. Then with a steady voice Graves answered:

"Crosby county casts eleven votes for the Hon. Dudley Foster."

For a moment there was the stillness of a house of death. Then the ringing cheers broke out, and a moment later Bannon county, one of the uncertain quantities, followed Graves' lead and the stampede was started, but not at all in accordance with Woodham's plans.

The hall was still ringing with the cheers of the triumphant Foster rooters when a telegraph boy approached Graves with a message that he was wanted outside. Quickly he made his way through the jubilating crowd to the hall to come face to face with Marian.

"Forgive me," he said brokenly. "I tried my best to answer your appeal, but my vote was not my own. It was a trust of the people who sent me here and I could not be false to them."

"My appeal!" Marian clapped her hands softly. "You old darling, I was so afraid that you would vote for Mr. Bailey! Do you suppose I would care for a man who had been false to his trust? I knew only this morning why father sent for me. Poor old dad! It will break his heart! But, all the same, you were in the right and I was so foolishly afraid that you might be tempted."

"I was for a moment," he confessed, "when I saw how anxious you were. Then I realized that if I bought your father's consent it would be with my own self respect, and that I never could look you in the face again."

Robert Woodham came wearily from the hall. In the last hour he had aged ten years. Marian caught his arm.

"Dad, dear," she said gently, "I sent for Mr. Graves to tell him that I would marry him, no matter what you said."

"Revolt is in the very air," cried the old man. "I guess I will have to drop out of politics when even my daughter electioneers against me."

"I didn't work against you. I just left it to Howard," explained Marian. "He stood the test."

Woodham nodded, and with an arm about the shoulders of each he led the way to the committee room. On his right was his daughter and on his left the new found son who had stood the test, and in his heart Woodham was glad that he had.

The Three Pathways.

The owner of three houses, numbered 1, 2 and 3 in the drawing and situated as shown, had a fence erected to inclose them. In the fence he made three exits, numbered 1, 2 and 3. He constructed walks from the houses to the gates, so that the people who lived in house No. 1 used No. 1 gate, those in house No. 2 used No. 2 gate and those who lived in house No. 3 used No. 3 gate. The walks neither crossed one another nor interfered in any way. Here is a drawing showing how the walks were laid from the houses to the gates.—Philadelphia Ledger.

Care of Apple Trees.

Apple trees do best in a fertile clayey loam or "white oak" soil and on a southeastern slope. Varieties should be chosen which are known to be hardy in the locality. Information may be obtained from the state experiment stations in nearly every state.

The trees should not be planted closer than twenty-four feet each way. Dirt should be well packed about their roots and cultivation practiced for several years.

Between the trees crops of potatoes or small fruits may be grown. Clean culture is essential to prevent infection by insects and fungous diseases. The trees should be watched carefully for borers, which eat in the trunk. These can be dug out with a knife or killed by poking a wire into the aperture.

The trees give best satisfaction when headed low, so careful pruning is essential. It is well to see that the trunk is shaded on the southwest by a healthy limb, which will prevent sun scald.

When the tree is coming into bearing spraying with paris green or bordeaux mixture is recommended. This should be done after the blossoms fall and again three weeks later. This treatment kills broods of the codling moth and keeps fungi in check.

"Any mail?" asked the eminent politician. "Here's a letter," answered the secretary, "that begins 'My Dear Senator.' I don't know what the finish is." "Of course not. Nobody knows what the finish of a letter beginning 'My Dear Senator' is going to be."—Washington Star.

AN INDUSTRY ALREADY HERE

Is that of the West Michigan Sugar Company

THE INFLUENCE IS WIDE-SPREAD

This Year's Campaign Best In Its History

Farmers ere Co-operating with the Management—An Industry in Which all Share the Benefits

The first big pay day for the farmers of the Alma sugar plant, the one to which all beet growers look forward to, was Saturday and Monday. The total sum of $172,093.70 was turned out. Some of this went to other towns where the company maintains weigh stations but most of it came directly into Alma. This big influx of money has had a most noticeable effect on local affairs. In addition, the regular semi-monthly pay day for employes came Monday and practically $10,000 in cold cash was turned loose. There are many about Alma who will be benefitted by these pay days but none more than our local merchants, many of whom, doubtless, wish pay days at the sugar factory came every day.

General Manager Allen and Assistant Manager McKinney are making a record for themselves in their first year. The factory is slicing more beets and making more sugar every day than it has ever made before. This year's tonnage is lighter than usual but the sugar contents of the beets is so much larger that this loss of tonnage is practically offset.

The above, from the Alma Record, shows what a sugar factory means to a community once the industry is firmly established. Another thing to take into consideration is the fact that only three miles from Alma is located the St. Louis factory which probably paid out a sum nearly as large to be expended among the local merchants and mechanics, in that locality, for with the coming of sugar factories has come the building up of farm homes, that make the ideal place for a man to spend his life, secure in the knowledge that with the assured income which comes from his crop of beets,—a crop in which a positive failure is never known, as it seems to be able to survive both flood and drought and each year with the added knowledge which comes from experience the cost is lessened with a corresponding increase of profits,

All this is preliminary to a reminder that in our jollifications over the coming of the cement factory we must not forget, that already in our midst, is established an industry which bids fair to grow each year and the money which it pays out has a far reaching effect, a wider distribution than almost any other industry known. While the pay roll of its factory employees may not be as large as some other industries the time will come when every farmer, within shipping distance, of this plant will receive each year payment for his crop of beets to be paid out to the men who do the work of producing the crop and making the improvements on his farm, which will add to its value, and the value of every piece of property in Charlevoix county, so all receive the benefits which are as sure as the setting of the sun.

The factory, this year, has a good report to make. Its campaign will be longer than ever before, and that spirit of co-operation, which exists between the grower and the farmer is growing much closer. Its acreage has shown a decided increase, in our own home territory and every grower whom we have seen has the same story to tell of success in producing this greatest money crop and next year his intention to grow an increased acreage, and explanations of how this years experience has taught him how to lessen the cost of production, has made him a better farmer, because the beet crop requires clean cultivation and the successful grower is the enemy of weeds, and [illegible] enemy of weeds is [illegible]rmer of today.

WILL ASK FOR DAMAGES

Saloon Men will in Counties Which go Dry in Michigan.

To make the state liable for damages sustained by saloon-keepers and brewers whose places of business may be summarily closed by the adoption of county prohibition laws will be the purpose of a bill which it is now pisuned to have introduced at the approaching session of the legislature.

This intelligence casts additional light on the unusual activity displayed by liquor dealers in the recent election.

That the liquor dealers of Michigan have been greatly perturbed by the prohibition wave which is sweeping over Michigan cannot be gainsaid. It is said that they will exert every effort to secure a retaliatory measure at the next legislative session.

Inasmuch as the saloonkeepers backed many of the men who were elected to the house and some of those who were chosen senators it is believed that they are in position to come very near if not quite, to securing the passage of the bill which, it is said, they have tentatively framed.

MICHIGAN STATE GRANGE

Annual Meeting Will be held at Saginaw Next Week

Gov. Healy of Indiana Will Deliver Lecture —Industrial Exposition.

The annual meeting of the Michigan State grange will be held in the new auditorium, Saginaw, beginning Tuesday, December 8. All patrons who possibly can should plan to go. The Auditorium was built this summer at a cost of $1,000,000 and is said to be one of the finest in the northwest. The main hall will seat 4,000 people and if contains a side hall seating 500, besides a number of small rooms, suitable for committee rooms, thus making it the most convenient place the Grange has met in ontside of Lansing. All sessions of the grange will be held in this building including the conferring of degrees.

An industrial exposition will be held in the Auditorium beginning December 1, and lasting until the evening of the seventh. All patrons will be admitted free during Monday.

Tuesday evening will be reception evening when an address of welcome will be delivered by some prominent citizen of Saginaw, and responded to Master Horton. There will also be, on this evening, a lecture by Governor Hanly of Indiana, a lecturer of national reputation whose services have been secured at a cost of $200 by the State Grange. This will give all members a chance to hear one of our great men free of cost. Other features of the evening will be a vocal quartette furnished by Saginaw, said to be the equal to any in the northwest. Saginaw will also furnish an expert player, for that evening only, upon the pipe organ installed in the auditorium at a cost of $25000. No patron who can possibly go should miss this grand entertainment. Remember it is all free to members.

Election of officers will probably occur Thursday, and the fifth and sixth degrees will be conferred Thursday evening.

Will Open New Vaudeville.

W. S. Stoddard, formerly connected with the Lafa-yette and New Majestic Theatres, will open a five cent theatre in the Charlevoix Theatre next Monday evening, giving a moving picture and vaudeville show.

MONEY HAS BEEN RAISED

For the new Building at the Beulah Home

A. B. Kline of Petoskey, gave One Thousand Dollers.

By the gift of $1000 from A. B. Kline of Petoskey, and and an additional $50 from Mrs. Kline for running expenses, the bonus of $1000 offered on condition that Herman L. Swift, Superintendent of the Beulah Home, raise $4000 by Thanksgiving day, was practically assured, and his heart was to overflowing filled with gratitude, as he saw his hopes for a new building at the home being fulfilled.

The Beulah boys paid Petoskey a visit Sunday, of last week, with Mr. Swift, and his heart was a little heavy because out of the $4000 which he was to raise before Thanksgiving in order to secure the gift of a promised $1000 on that condition, he had but $2900 pledged. But when he left Petoskey he was radiant.

Mr. Swift's work is too well known in this city to need much comment, but a word of explanation in regard to the new building will not come amiss. In Mr. Swift's own words, it is to be a new building " to separate the sheep from the goats." It is to provide a home for the children who until the death of one or the other parent leaves them destitute, or where children used to having homes for some cause or other are left homeless, but who are not children of the slums as many of his boys are. It will provide a place where a mother, left helpless with her children to feed and provide for, but because of these children her hands are tied and she cannot go out into the world and earn for them their living can leave them. Here, in this new home which is already assured, mothers and fathers can place their little ones and they will be cared for, the parents paying what they can for their keep, and they will receive the wonderful training for which Mr. Swift is famous without being thrown into contact with the "little goats" who have never known home influences but many of whom have graduated from the vicissitudes of the slums. If Mr. Swift can make noble men of such material, what can he not do with boys who have not been handicapped by life on the streets of the big cities.

Cards containing room for ten dimes were sent out by the Home several months ago, and if everyone of these is returned filled, it will do more good than any ten dimes ever spent.

WEST MICHIGAN HARBORS

Sums Recommended by Report of Chief of Engineers

Charlevoix to Receive Nearly Thirty Thousand Dollars.

The harbors of west Michigan receive many fine boosts in the annual report of the chief of engineers, last week. The report has great significance because it is the confident expectation that congress will pass a river and harbor bill at the coming session.

If the recommendations of the chief of engineers are followed, and they probably will be, these are the amounts which the various projects of the western part of the state may expect to draw:

Grand river, nothing additional; Muskegon, $154,750; Holland, nothing additional; Grand Haven, $100,000; St. Joseph river and harbor, $15,000; South Haven, $80,000; Saugatuck, $10,000; White Lake and Penfwater, $151,000; Ludington, $208,000; Manistee, $187,000; Portage Lake, $18,000; Arcadia, $6,000; Frankfort, $13,000; Charlevoix, $20,750; Petoskey $18,000.

The immediate explanation of the recommendation that nothing further be now appropriated for Grand River is that $65,285 of the old appropriation remains unexpended and that amount is all that can be used. The chief of engineers calls the attention of congress to the fact that the two boats of the Grand Rapids and Lake Michigan Transportation company have been sold and removed from the river. For Holland there is already an available balance of $172,731, an amount ample for continuing the improvement.

A TOUGH PROPOSITION

Is that of the Repeal of the Sugar Duty

According to Secretary Hetheway of the Michigan Sugar Co.

The sugar beet factories of Michigan are up against the toughest trust proposition that any industry ever encountered," says F. R. Hathaway, secretary of the Michigan Sugar Co., in commenting on the hearing in Washington a few days ago before the committee on ways and means, when the proposition to repeal the duty on sugar was under consideration.

"At that hearing it was admitted by Mr. Spreckels, of the Frederal Sugar Refining Co., Mr. Stillman, representing the Arbuckles Bros. Sugar Refining Co., and Mr. Atkins of Boston, representing eastern interests that own a 22000 acre plantation in Cuba, that the removal of the duty would put every Michigan factory out of business.

"These trust representatives were positive in their claims, and they realize that the proposed action would remove all competition in this part of the country. The duty on sugar brings a revenue to the United States of $60,000,000, the largest single item in the list of imports. The duty provided in the tariff is $1.68½ per hundred, but this has been cut down by the concessions to Hawaii, Cuba and Porto Rico until the average duty is now only $1.14½. In other words the schedule has been cut down one-third, and the sugar industry is the only one in the Dingley bill that has been affected a particle. We sugar men claim that we have been given our medicine by the cutting down of this schedule.

"Here is what the proposition means to Michigan, if the duty is cut out: There are 21 factories in the state—16 in operation at the present time—and they represent an investment of $19,000,000. Fully 30,000 farmers are engaged in raising the 100,000 acres of beets used each year by the Michigan factories. The average gross returns to the farmer each year are from $50 to $55 an acre, and for each of the last two years the factories have paid the farmers $5,000,000 for their crops.

"To work up Michigan's crop of beets requires about 180,000 tons of coal, and at least two-thirds of this is purchased from Michigan mines. To clarify the beet juices 50,000 tons of high-grade limestone are required, all of which is quarried in Michigan. The barrels and bags in which the sugar is put up are products of Michigan industry, and these are but a few of the many things that would be affected if the tariff is removed and the Michigan factories put out of business. And if there were no sugar factories in Michigan, the people would be sending out of the state annually $9,000,000 to pay their sugar bills."

BANNER YEAR FOR CROPS

Was 1908 According to the Report of Secretary Wilson.

Secretary of Agriculture Wilson reports 1908 the banner crop year of them all, and estimates that the total value will go way ahead of last years figures—$7,410,000,000. Mr. Wilson further says:

"The greatest crop of America is grass, and then corn. Next after corn is probably cotton; then come wheat and poultry running neck and neck. The product of the hen coop is now nearly as valuable as that of the wheat field."

"The preliminary estimate of the Crop Reporting Board of the department is 2,642,087,000 bushels of corn, as compared with 2,592,320,000 bushels, the final estimate of 1907. The average yield per acre is 26.2 bushels which compares with 25.9, the final estimate for 1907, and 25.8, the average for the past ten years. The quality is better than ever as well as the quantity, and is 86.8, compared with 82.8, in 1907, and 84.3 the average of the past ten years.

Drowning at East Jordan.

The body of Joseph Detloff, a well known young man of East Jordan, was found Sunday morning near South Arm. Mr. Detloff disappeared Friday night and it is supposed that he lost his balance and fell from his boat into the water.

He was married and leaves a wife and two children. The funeral was held at East Jordan Monday.

IMPORTANT TRANSFER

S. M. See & Sons Purchase Lot, Corner Bridge and Antrim Streets.

This week an important sale of real estate was made in this city, whereby S. M. See & Sons become the owners of the Caldwell & Lowden lot, located on the corner of Bridge and Antrim streets.

This means the erection of another fine business block on one of the best locations in the city and is another evidence of the re-awakening of Charlevoix to the many advantages it possesses.

MRS. LEVI BLANCHARD, DEAD

Was a Former Well Known Charlevoix Resident.

Word was received in this city, Tuesday, of the death of Mrs. Levi Blanchard, formerly a well known resident of this city, which took place at the home of her sister, Mrs. Charles Dalrymple of Albion, Michigan, with whom Mrs. Blanchard had made her home since September last. Mrs. Blanchard was the step-mother of Forrest S. Blanchard of this city.

The funeral was held at Albion today.

UNITED STATES SENATOR

Will be Chosen by a Primary September 1910

Four Candidates will Probably go Before the People.

Wayne politicians are beginning to fuss or at least talk about the campaign for 1910, particularly with reference to the election of a United States senator to succeed Julius Caesar Burrows, of Kalamazoo. Many persons may have forgotten that the last legislature amended the law to provide that each political party shall nominate its candidate for Senator at the state primary, the same as its candidate for governor and lieutenant governor, so that unless the law is again changed at the coming session, the electorate of the whole state will have a chance to vote for senator September 1910, and the legislature of 1911 will merely ratify the choice of the people according to the party that happens to be in power at the time.

The politicians take it for granted that there will be at least four men in the race—Burrows for re-election, Gov. Fred M. Warner, with all the power of the state machine that he used to secure his own election for a third term as governor; Charles E. Townsend of Jackson, who was a candidate the last time when William Alden Smith ran away with the plum, and Truman H. Newberry, who in spite of his statements that he wants to see Burrows and Smith kept in the senate as long as they live, is persistently credited in the talk that floats around political circles with being actively at work setting up pins.

In that connection it is stated by men who are in a position to know that Newberry saw a good many influential Republicans during the two or three days that he recently spent in Detroit, when he came home for the purpose of voting on election day. He gave it out then that he was not going to have any appointment under the Taft administration—and that at the close of President Roosevelt's term on March 1 next he would return to Detroit to live.

But still the rumors persist, especially since he has been elevated to a cabinet position, and it is pointed out by the wise ones that the prestige of being secretary of the navy even for only a few months under the Roosevelt regime could be used to immense advantage in winning votes in a popular election.

The business of being elected at a primary is a new stunt for all these candidates except Warner and the latter developed such a woeful lack of popular strength in the recent contest that it is figured that his senatorial ambition has been given a black eye.

BIG LUMBER COMPANY

Formed at Bay City Last Week with $500,000 Capital

The Michigan Lumber company, with a capitalization of $500,000, was organized at a meeting at Bay City and an option for a 110 acre site in Bay City was closed. The incorporators are W. H. White company, Boyne; W. D. Young & Co., F. T. Woodworth, Henry B. Smith, Harry W. Garland, W. E. Jennison, Bay City; John Yuille, Vanderbilt; and James A. White, Buffalo. The company will build a double band and resaw mill, shingle mill, lath mill, stave mill, and salt blocks, the lumber mill having a capacity of 25,000,000 feet per year, and the shingle mill 20,000,000 feet. W. H. White, company transfers to the new organization over 300,000,000 feet of hardwood in Montmorency and Otsego counties, besides large quantities of pine and hemlock. The new plant will employ about 135 men and will be ready in about nine months.

The Michigan Central will lay twenty-five miles of track into the lumber which lies east of Atlanta, which will probably give that town railroad connection, it now being about twenty miles from any railroad. James A. White of Buffalo, will be president of the company and will come to Bay City to reside.

At the same meeting W. D. Young & Co. bought from White Bros. company from 50,000,000 to 75,000,000 feet of maple which will be railroaded to this city for use in the flooring mill. The two deals together involved over $1,000,000.

MOUNT MCSAUBA

Written by Warren W. Lamport of East Jordan.

The tourist has gone with the season,
His cottage stands lone and drear;
The birds and the flowers have vanished
Till the call of the new-born year.

But the hills yet abide in their beauty,
Outstretching away and away,
Enrobed in the hazy purple
Of the fadless summer day.

And the lake is still heaving and tossing,
And moaning its sad unrest,
With the islands asleep on its bosom
Far down in the distant west.

And the winds that have toiled thro the ages
To build up these ridges of land
Today are as busy as ever
A-tugging away at the sand.

Oh, the charm of this sweet, wild northland:
It may change but can never decay.
He sees but half of its beauty
Who flies with the summer day.

Recipe Easily Prepared, and Many Swear by it

Many of our Citizens Speak Well of the Home Prescription Which Helped Them to Health.

Mix the following by shaking well in a bottle, and take in teaspoonful doses after meals and at bedtime.

Fluid Extract Dandelion, one-half ounce; Compound Kargon, one ounce; Compound Syrup Sarsaparilla, three ounces. A local druggist is the authority that these simple, harmless ingredients can be obtained at nominal cost from our home druggist.

The mixture is said to cleanse and strengthen the clogged and inactive kidneys, overcoming backache, bladder weakness and urinary trouble of all kinds, if taken before the stage of Bright's disease.

Those who have tried this say it positively overcomes pain in the back, clears the urine of sediment and regulates urination, especially at night, curing even the worst forms of bladder weakness.

Every man or woman here who feels that the kidneys are not strong or acting in a healthy manner should mix this prescription at home and give it a trial, as it is said to do wonders for many persons.

A NEW POEM BY EDWIN MARKHAM

Probably the Greatest Work of the Author of "The Man With the Hoe."

Edward Markham, who made a world-wide reputation a few years ago with his poem, "The Man with the Hoe," has written for the Christmas Woman's Home Companion a poem that is considered to be even greater than "The man with the Hoe." Many who have read Markham's new poem, "Before the Gospels Were," consider it the greatest verse of recent years. "Before the Gospels Were" tells, with wonderful poetic imagination, the story of the gathering together of the materials for the gospels by Christ's disciples after His ascension. Never before has there been presented so illuminating a picture of what Christ's life meant to his disciples and why it was so accurately reflected in their gospels.

The opening verse of the poem is Long noons and evenings after He was gone.

Mary the Mother, Matthew, Luke and John,
And all those who loved Him to the last,
Went over all the marvel of the past
Went over all the old familiar ways
With tender talk of dear remembered days.
They walked the roads that never gave Him rest
Past Jordan's ford, past Kedron's brook,
Up Olivet, up Hermon's ridge,
To the last road, the one they loved the best.

The climax of the poem is reached in the last verse, which sums up all the thoughts that have been expressed in the preceding lines:

So huddling often by the chimney blaze,
Or going down the old remembered ways
On many a lingering walk,
They held their wonder talk,
Minding each other of some sacred spot,
Minding each other of a word forgot;
So gathering up all all the whispered words
Went to the four winds like a flight of birds.

YOUR BEST FURS.

How to Keep Them Looking New and Fresh.

Keeping white furs clean is like keeping linens looking fresh, for both need much attention and frequent cleansings. Of course, if women can afford to have furriers do this work they need not be so particular about preventing their muffs, collarettes or capes from getting soiled, but when the cleansing must be done at home too much care cannot be taken to keep them clean, for the process of cleaning ermine, conny, Angora or any of the white furs, real or imitation, is a long, tedious one, that takes much strength. To begin with, they must be put out on a line and well sunned and aired for a day or two, then they must be whipped gently yet firmly with a rattan stick until no dust flies when they are pounded, says the Washington Star.

When the loose dirt is out the furs may again be hung on a line in the sunshine, while a bath of white sand and furrier's sawdust, mixed half and half, is heated in an oven. When hot the pieces must be put into this cleanser and the sand and sawdust rubbed well into the fur. The sand when hot looseus the grease and dirt from the fur and the sawdust absorbs it. If after one such rubbing the fur does not look as clean as is desired the process should be repeated. When the dirt is out the garment or muff must again be pounded with a rattan stick to get out the sand and sawdust.

Following this beating the fur should be placed in a pan filled with cornstarch or plaster of paris, which must be rubbed thoroughly into it. After either whitener has been worked well into the pieces the furs must again be put out of doors and whipped with a stick to get out the white dust, for if not shaken or beaten the plaster of paris or cornstarch will rub off on the clothing, which is unpleasant.

With chinchilla little can be done toward cleansing, except a gentle beating with a rattan stick. And this whipping must be lightly done, for the skin is so fine and tears so easily that a woman cannot be too careful in the beating, and the best plan is to have them cleaned by a furrier.

Beaver, mink and many of the furs with heavy skins are cleaned exactly as are the ermine and other white pieces, with the exception of the final rubbing on of cornstarch or plaster of paris. The first beating to get out the dust, the airing and bath of white sand and sawdust must be given these furs to properly cleanse them. Pony coats may be successfully cleaned in the same way.

With the heavy long furs, such as Alaska sable, raccoon and opossum, the airing and pounding with a heavy rattan stick are essential, but the hot sawdust and sand are omitted for the use of a comb with short teeth, known as a "furrier's comb."

Sables, like chinchillas, must be carefully treated, and the safest plan is to send them to an expert when they need cleaning.

How to Make an Excellent Desk Pad.

A desk pad that, with a little care and dexterity, can be made at home successfully was seen among some new things not long ago.

Two pieces of cardboard about 20 by 14 inches in size were pasted together at one of the longer edges, making what looks like a pageless book cover.

This was covered by a piece of flowered cretonne neatly turned at the edges and these raw edges covered by a piece of firm white paper which extended over the entire inside of the pad.

Two or more pieces of blotting paper were inserted and fastened by ribbons passed through both covers and blotting paper and tied on the outside.

A piece of ribbon of the same shade, but wider, was fastened so that it ran diagonally across each cover and, tying, held the leaves in place.

How to Make an Excellent Pudding.

Put in a mixing dish one-half cupful of molasses, one cupful of sweet milk, one cupful of seeded and floured raisins or currants. Mix one level teaspoonful of soda, one teaspoonful of cinnamon, one-half teaspoonful of cloves with two cupfuls of graham flour and sift. Now mix with molasses, milk and fruit and beat well.

Put the mixture in baking powder cans and steam. This amount will fill four half pound cans about two-thirds full. Put on covers and steam one hour.

Two one pound cans may be used if preferred, but pudding must be steamed two hours if larger cans are used.

Any good pudding sauce that is not too rich may be used.

"What kind of soup is this?" asked the professor as the waiter placed the dish before him.

"That is ox tail soup," replied the waiter.

"That's the last part of the ox I'll ever use for soup," said the professor.—Exchange.

IN CUPID'S GUISE.

By JOHN BARTON OXFORD.

Copyright, 1908, by Associated Literary Press.

The afternoon session at the dispensary was over. The last waiting patient in the long line which had filed stolidly by the desk for the past two hours had groaned out a recital of her many ailments, received her portion of advice and a bottle of medicine and departed homeward, calling upon numerous saints to shower their blessings upon the weary, white coated young physician behind the rail.

It was a blistering day. Outside the pavement baked in the pitiless sun and within the little room the air was hot and lifeless.

As the street door closed with a bang Dr. Trainor slammed down the cover of his desk, elevated his feet luxuriously upon it and, pulling out his cigarette case, began to smoke with deep inhalations of content.

"Now, then, Sammy, old boy," he called to his assistant, who was arranging the bottles in the laboratory beyond, "let's wash up and go uptown for dinner. I'm starved. Lord, what a day! Whole blamed neighborhood laid up, it would seem. No, never mind those reports. We'll fix 'em up in the morning. We've done enough for one day. Hustle up now, old chap! We need something for the inner man, both of us, and a bit of music while we feast to cheer us up and take the edge off these walls we've been listening to all day."

In the laboratory the assistant quitted the endless rows of bottles with no reluctance whatever. He threw off his coat, grinning expansively.

"That's me," he agreed heartily. "Us for the feed. Be with you in a minute, Billy."

From the room beyond came the sound of running water and a mighty splashing as the assistant laved his perspiring face. Trainor arose from the desk and began pulling down the shades as a gentle hint to any late comers that business for the day was over.

TIM LED THE WAY DOWN THE SCORCHING SIDEWALKS.

Just as he was drawing the last one the street door burst open, and into the room came a panting, barefooted small boy, his eyes shining, his mop of red hair disheveled with heat and haste, his whole bearing that of a messenger with evil tidings, in which he took a certain pride of importance.

Trainor wheeled upon him, and the expression at that moment in his eyes could hardly have been mistaken for cordial welcome.

"Well?" he questioned shortly. "What are you doing here? Don't you know we close at 5?"

"Say," said the youth, no whit abashed by his reception, "I guess you know me, don't you? Me name's Farrell—Tim Farrell of Blossom court—cured me kid sister of the measles last month—remember that, don't you?"

"What's the row? Has she got 'em again?" Trainor growled.

"Got nothin'," was the scornful reply. "Accident this time. Lady's fell down the stairs an' sprained her ankle"—

"You're in the wrong booth, sonny—see?" said Trainor. "You want to go to 86 Carver street. They'll send down a doctor from there. This is where we give out medicine. Don't take any out cases here. So long. Chase yourself now. We're closing up here for the day."

Young Mr. Farrell showed no signs of complying with these delicate hints. A knowing smile curved the corners of his mouth.

"I guess you'll come, all right, all right," said he. "Maybe you think it's me old woman or me kid sister that's took the drop. Nixy, Bill. It's a swell dame this time; that's what. Miss Mortimer, from the settlement, that's who."

"Huh?" said Trainor with sudden interest. "What's this? What's happened to Miss Mortimer?"

"Fell downstairs," the youth repeated. "Missed her footin' at the second landin', where it was dark, an' went down to the bottom of the flight. Twisted her ankle bad. Grogan, the fat grocer, picks her up an' carries her up to the old woman's joint, an' "—

Trainor had doffed his white coat in a flash and, catching up his street coat from a chair and the little black case from the top of his desk, laid a hand on Tim's arm.

"Come on. I'll go with you," said he. "Ho, Sammy," he called to the assistant, "go up and get your dinner at Gettemy's. I'll join you there later if I can."

Tim led the way down the scorching sidewalks, turned into a narrow side street and from there into a yet narrower court. With Trainor at his heels he entered the door of a tumbledown tenement and pattered up the rickety stairs.

At the top of the third flight they entered a doorway, to be greeted by a portly woman with red face and anxious eyes.

"And is it you, doctor?" she cried in relief. "Sure, she's hurted bad. Come into the front room."

She ushered him into the room beyond, where on an old haircloth sofa a very pretty girl was propped on pillows. Her eyes widened at the sight of the visitor.

"Billy," she said, "how did you get here?"

Dr. Trainor was a man of considerable decision. He turned to the stout woman, and his manner brooked no delay.

"Mrs. Farrell," said he crisply, "some hot water at once, if you please. You, Tim, hustle back to the dispensary before Dr. Martin leaves and tell him to send me some two inch bandages. Understand?"

The two departed on their errands, and Trainor turned to the girl on the sofa.

"It's nothing—really nothing," she said hastily. "I slipped on the landing and"—

"Helen," said Trainor severely, "don't tell me what it is or what it isn't. That ankle is badly sprained. I'm all out of patience with this settlement work of yours. You've got to leave it."

"Oh, indeed?" she challenged.

"You certainly have," said he. "There are plenty of others better fitted physically than you are to carry it on. You're to take a rest now. And also you're to have filled this prescription I shall give you."

He tore a prescription blank from the pad in his case and scribbled away for a moment. Then he passed it to the girl.

"It is to be filled at the chapel of the Ascension," he specified.

She took the bit of paper and read it, while a dull red crept into her cheeks. On it was the single word "Matrimony."

Trainor, watching her, saw the color in her face momentarily heighten. Then she crumpled the paper and tossed it to the floor.

"Absurd!" she said, but her eyes were turned away.

"Not in the least," said he calmly. "I think you'll admit I have been patient with a great patience. Let me do the charity work for us both. I can afford it. I have money enough, and, what is more, I have the strength that you haven't."

"Billy, you're a dear, good boy," said she, "but—but"—

"But what?" said he.

She was silent. Trainor reached over and took one of her hands in his own.

"Helen, dear, don't be foolish," he said gently. "I need you far more than these people here. They can find some one else, but I can't. Will you accept that prescription?"

Again she was silent. At length she lifted a pair of radiant eyes to his. There was mockery in them, but tenderness as well.

"You see—you see," she began haltingly—"oh, well, the point is, you're the doctor, I suppose."

He bent quickly toward her, but at that moment the voice of Tim sounded from the hall.

"Hey, doc, here's the bandages!"

"All right," Trainor laughed. "Bring 'em in, Cupid."

Thought Controls Weather.

I certainly do believe we can govern even "the elements"—the weather—by thought power. I believe weather is a reflection of the moods of the race and that as we and our moods evolve the weather changes to match. And I believe it is quite possible for your mental treatment or mine to stem the world tide and change the weather, just as one man's thought sometimes stems the thought tide of a mob and changes its course.

Why not? This is a fluid world made up of thought in motion. All its currents are set by thought, your thought and mine and every man's. Why, then, cannot air currents and thought currents be stemmed by more thought from you and from me? They can be. Nothing is impossible to him who believes and keeps on trying. This sounds like a creed on weather. It is. I've nothing beyond "coincidences" and faith to prove it by. But "faith is the substance of things not seen," and the not seen things are the really real ones. The man who governs his thoughts speaks peace to the weather waves.—Nautilus.

Bad For the Foreigners.

The case was one of assault, and the magistrate, fearing that it might be the beginning of another outbreak of hooliganism, was inclined to be severe.

"For the second time," he said, addressing the prisoner, "you are charged with assaulting your neighbor. The evidence shows that you deliberately and without any apparent cause struck the complainant with your clinched fist."

"Faith, yer honor," cried Pat, "if I did he struck me back again!"

"But he only did so in self defense," said the judge.

"An' what about me?" asked Pat.

"All about you," answered the magistrate, "is that you are found guilty and must therefore keep the peace toward all his majesty's subjects for twelve months."

"Well, then," roared Pat as he left the court, "heaven help the first furriner Oi meet!"—Tit-Bits.

"Did your husband have any sort of luck at the races yesterday?"

"Splendid! The street car system broke down, and he didn't get there till they were all over."—Judge.

HENS VERSUS INCUBATORS.

Result of Some Recent Experiments In Chicken Raising.

By JAMES DRYDEN.

Artificial incubation in recent years has assumed large proportions. Large numbers of incubators and brooders are purchased in every community, entailing in the aggregate a large investment of capital. It is admitted that there are great losses in the artificial incubation of eggs and brooding of chicks, and many explanations are given as to the cause. The complaint is that the chicks either fail to hatch or, hatching, they fail to live. Why the embryo should live through the incubation period and die before hatching is a problem that bothers the incubator operator more probably than any other. It is a keen disappointment to the incubator user to find after the eggs apparently have progressed satisfactorily up to the time of hatching that 25 per cent of them, more or less, have failed to hatch. This means a large loss to the poultryman, and if there were no other problem involved in incubation than that of the chicks dying in the shell it would warrant extended investigation.

The testimony is very conflicting as to the efficiency of incubators. Hatches as high as 90 to 95 per cent of "fertile" eggs are frequently made and as low as 25 per cent or less. Some claim that the fault is in the stock that laid the eggs. Others claim that the man who runs the incubator is usually to blame in failing to follow instructions, and this is very often the case.

An even more serious problem is to hatch the chicks well. Some claim that it is easy to hatch the chicks, but hard to raise them. Some reports are made to the effect that within four weeks after hatching every chick has died. At certain seasons of the year probably 50 per cent of the incubator chicks die. The cause of this great mortality is usually ascribed to faulty methods of brooding or feeding. The fact that the chick may be hatched with impaired vitality has not been recognized fully. The evidence of vitality should not be merely that the chick survives the brooding period, but that it comes to maturity with vitality equal to that of the parent stock and is capable of transmitting the same vigor and health to the second generation.

A series of carefully conducted investigations at the Oregon Agricultural college has brought out the following facts as to the comparative efficiency of hens and incubators:

From 879 eggs set, incubators hatched 533 chicks, or 60.6 per cent.

From 279 eggs hens hatched 219 chicks, or 78.8 per cent.

Eliminating eggs broken in nests, the hens hatched 88.2 per cent of eggs set.

The incubators hatched 78.5 per cent of "fertile" eggs, and the hens hatched 96.5 per cent.

Eggs incubated artificially tested out 22.7 per cent as infertile, while those incubated by hens tested out 11.8 per cent.

The incubators showed 16.6 per cent of chicks "dead in the shell" and the hens 2.8 per cent.

Chicks hatched under hens weighed heavier than chicks hatched in incubators.

The mortality of hen hatched chicks

COOP FOR SITTING HENS

brooded in brooders was 10.8 per cent in four weeks and of incubator hatched chicks 33.5 per cent.

The mortality in hen hatched chicks brooded under hens was 2.2 per cent and of incubator chicks 49.2 per cent.

In other tests the mortality was 46.5 per cent for incubator chicks brooded by hens and 38.4 brooded in brooders.

Hen hatched chicks made greater gain in weight than incubator chicks, whether brooded by hens or brooders.

A Story of the Zoo.

Strange things happen in the zoo if you only but dears. We only tell you the bear facts. We wouldn't lion any account. Visits to the zoo have tortoise many things, which we put to good porpoise. Why, one day we saw a wolf lion a calf, and then again we have seen the wolves lion their backs with their calves up in the air. But the poor little hippopotamus is suffering terribly. They noticed him growing thin. In fact, he seemed to be tapiring away to nothing. They are going to try to cure him by putting upon his hip a pot o' mustard.

DID it ever occur to you that one of the most tangible and important results of the location of new people in a neighborhood is the new blood thus infused into the life of the community. The new ideas, the new viewpoints, the new methods, bound to appear when strangers take up their abode and enter into the life and interests of a neighborhood exert an influence upon the older residents broadening in its effect, and thus of real benefit. To realize this, just imagine a community into which for a generation or more no stranger enters. Each individual knows each of the other individuals composing this world—knows their faults and virtues, their foibles and idiosyncracies—and, while forbearance maybe a virtue, in some cases the very avoidance of a neighbor's touchy spots breed a sensitiveness which is fruitful of enmity and trouble and ending in everybody being afraid of himself, afraid of inovations, afraid of progress. "If we do this it interferes with A's business;" "if we do that B's notions will be trampled upon;" "if we do the other thing C will oppose it;" or "D will shut up shop and move away;" Net result, stagnation, somnolence inertia. Contrast this with the community into which comes new blood with more or less frequency: Farmer Jones moves into town and sells his farm to the man from North Dakota, who introduces new methods to the benefit of his neighbors, and picks up new ideas to himself; meanwhile farmer J, in town, with more leisure than before is a new man, a greater benefit to the community and an influence for improvement. Grocer Smith has been making a comfortable living for years, not getting rich, but doing fairly well; along comes a new grocer from the city with new methods and sets up a strong competition; Smith must meet it and does, with the effect of giving the town two groceries either of them better then the old one; and, reaching farther out, Smith does a better business then before, to the benefit of the town as well as himself. Mr. Mann who has bought produce for years is confronted by a competitor; he now has to leave minor details, formerly a part of his own work, for an assistant, and get out and hustle, but thereby gets more business than ever before; and his town gets the benefit of about three times the business the one man did. Old man Grouchy who always finds fault and opposes everything finds everybody too busy to pay any attention to his whims and has to turn in and help as the only means of attracting the attention he yearns for. Net result a lively growing town with the same kind of a community back of it. Everybody hustling, prosperous and happy, even the pessimist who revels in denying it.—Central Lake Torch.

RAILROAD'S FINE MOVE.

Pennsylvania's Plan to Beautify Its Right of Way.

An ideal roadbed and right of way, the sight of which will be a pleasure to people riding along the Schuylkill division, is what the Pennsylvania management is working for. To secure this end a movement has been started by the railroad to secure the co-operation of people living along the right of way in keeping it clean and free from rubbish. From Fifty-second street in Philadelphia to Pottsville, the terminus of the division, the company expects to have a railroad beautiful. The scenery is there, its officials declare, and the railroad is to be kept in harmony with it if possible.

For years it has been the practice of some people with property backing on the railroad to throw refuse of all kinds, empty tin cans, garbage and paper over the back fences to the tracks. This has made it impossible to keep the tracks clean. While the railroad has been forced to cart the rubbish away, it has not been able to keep the roadbed sightly, as the strong winds caused by the passing of a train scatter the papers along the tracks for miles. Dumping garbage on or near the tracks is also a practice that endangers the health and mars the comfort of both the residents and train passengers. On this division sixty passenger trains are operated daily, and these carry hundreds of passengers who do not enjoy the sight of tomato cans.

In addition to this very interesting and significant experiment, the Pennsylvania railroad is making every effort to beautify its roadbed and station grounds over the entire system. Its forestry department has this year made large plantings of shrubbery and ornamental trees for use in parking station grounds and available places on the right of way. This is done that these places which are natural centers may furnish as much pleasure as possible to the public. Joseph T. Richards, superintendent of the right of way, is authority for the statement in an address before the American Civic association that it pays a railroad in hard dollars and cents to pursue a policy of civic improvement.

The present policy of this company serves as a shining example of what railroads can do for the pleasures of their passengers and for the upbuilding of the communities through which they pass. In time it expects to make its line from Jersey City to Washington a constant succession of pleasing views.

IMPROVEMENT WORK.

Right Methods to Follow to Make It a Success.

After the organization of an improvement society or club, which every community should have, do not cumber it with too many rules, bylaws, etc. If the proper spirit is present the organization, though complete, may be rather crude and primitive in its government. Do not have too many instructions that the members feel they should follow. Few restrictions make for enthusiasm. Every member should feel himself a committee of one to forward any and all work undertaken.

Clean sidewalks and parkways is a good first venture. See that all sidewalks are swept clean as often as required and if possible see that in the business portion of your town they are swept each day. Next tackle the streets, particularly the gutters. Clean them of all weeds and see that no papers or other refuse is thrown into the street or roadway. If the town does not provide for the collection of garbage it should be made to do so at once, and suitable receptacles for street litter should be provided at prominent corners. While all are laboring for public cleanliness, it may be as well to look over your own premises to see if they come up to the proper standard.

In every community may be found workers in these movements whose home places are in a most slovenly state. There is nothing so strong in improvement argument as example. If you do the best you can with your premises your most untidy neighbor will at least clean up some. When all the foregoing is disposed of plant street trees, a most potent factor in making towns attractive. Vacant lots of both resident and nonresident owners must be cleaned up and kept clear of rubbish, and your last work to make your community fairly attractive will be to look to the care and cleanliness of public buildings and plats of ground.

Small boy David was from the city. While visiting in the country he was one evening driving along the river bank, when an echo was heard, the voices in the valley below which produced it being scarcely distinguishable. After listening some time and being told that the sound he heard was an echo, he turned to his mother and said:

"Mamma, what is an echo?"

His mother tried to explain at some length, though she felt that her explanation was not being followed. Suddenly David broke in.

"Oh, I know all about it!" he exclaimed. "An echo is the shadow of a voice."—Woman's Home Companion.

THE NAMES OF STATES.

Majority of Them Were Handed Down From the Indians.

Do you know why your state was so named? Do you know that the majority of the states of the Union were named after the Indians? It is so. See the list:

Ohio is Indian and means "beautiful;" Massachusetts, "about great hills;" Utah, "mountain home;" Texas, from the Indian word "teaches," which means "friends." Kansas gets its name from the Indians, and the word means "smoky waters." The word Wyoming comes from the Indian and means "broad valleys;" Nebraska, "flat water;" Missouri, "muddy water;" Iowa, "across;" Wisconsin, "rushing waters;" Illinois, from "Illini," which means "tribe of men;" Kentucky, meaning "at head of river;" Oregon, from War-e-gan, "beautiful water," Arizona means "uncertain," because of the desert land where the Indians found game scarce; therefore a journey through that portion of the country was uncertain. New Mexico was named after Mexico proper, and the word comes from "Mexitl" of the ancient Aztecs and signifies "god of war."

The Indians call great lakes "seas," and "sea" in Indian is "Michigan."

Mississippi is named after the river which is so called by the red man because of its greatness in width and length. The word means "father of waters."

The two Dakotas were so named after the Dakota Indians, which at one time embraced an immense tribe, all the branches of the Sioux.

There are states which do not owe their names to the Indians. California is named after an imaginary island of Spanish romance; Nevada means "snowy;" Colorado is so named because of the red granite and sandstone rocks which are everywhere in the mountain regions. Florida means flowers.

FACTS ABOUT FLAGS.

Significance of Various Colors and the Way They Are Used.

To "strike the flag" is to lower the national colors in token of submission.

A "flag of truce" is a white flag displayed to an enemy to indicate a desire for a parley or consultation.

The white flag is also a sign of peace. After a battle parties from both sides often go out to the field to rescue the wounded or bury the dead under the protection of the white flag.

The red flag is a sign of defiance and is often used by revolutionists. In our naval service it is a mark of danger and shows a vessel to be receiving or discharging her powder.

The black flag is a sign of piracy.

The yellow flag shows a vessel to be in quarantine or is the sign of a contagious disease on board.

A flag at half mast means mourning. Fishing and other vessels return with a flag at half mast to announce the loss or death of one or more of the crew.

Dipping the flag is lowering it slightly and then hoisting it again to salute a vessel or fort.

If the president of the United States goes about the American flag is carried in the bow of his barge or hoisted at the main of the vessel on board of which he is.

The president also has a flag—a blue ground with the arms of the United States in the center. This was first used in 1883 by President Arthur.

When a flag is displayed "with the union down"—that is, the flag reversed—it is a signal of distress and a call for assistance.

A Mistake Somewhere.

"A CATalogue at a DOG show!"
Cried Jane. "How very queer!
Bring me a DOGtalogue, if you please.
There's something wrong, I fear!"
—Washington Star.

Alliteration—A Game.

This game can be played by any number of persons, each of whom is required to write a story in which each word shall begin with a given letter of the alphabet. The stories may be required to be of the same length, as agreed upon beforehand, or a stated time may be allowed for writing. When all have finished the stories are read aloud, and he whose story is the best, as decided by a majority of the players, is declared the winner.

MAILING LETTERS.

One Trick That Doesn't Go With the Postal Officials.

There are times when, for one reason or another, you may wish to post a letter to some one, indicating in the postmark on the envelope that it came from some other than your own home town. But accordingly, as you value the scheme which you are trying to work, don't make the mistake of trying to work the postmaster of that particular town into this particular scheme of posting the letter for you. In anything, from a harmless practical joke up to a penitentiary offense which you may be planning, the postal service will recognize it you only a scoundrelly intent to deceive and defraud, and it has schooled every postmaster in the country into that fixed belief upon which he must act.

For example, you have written your letter, which you desire to appear as having been mailed at a particular postoffice somewhere in the United States. You seal it, stamp the envelope and address it to the person. This letter you inclose in a larger envelope to the postmaster of that particular town with the written request, "Please post the inclosed letter at your office."

The postmaster will do this. Oh, yes.

The postmaster, taking up the directed, stamped and sealed envelope, writes across a corner of the envelope a full explanation of the matter, reciting that it was received from Mr. So-and-so at a certain place, asking that the postmaster drop it into the mail as originating at that particular office over which he has jurisdiction.

Nice little situation, isn't it?—Chicago Tribune.

THE DOLLAR MARK.

A Theory as to the Origin of This Monetary Symbol.

The origin of the dollar mark is one of the curios of our financial history.

In the early days of the nation there was utter confusion in the circulating medium. Several of the colonies had authorized coins of different denominations, and, besides these, there were English pence, shillings, crowns and half crowns; French coins brought from Europe and Canada; Spanish coins of half a dozen denominations, especially reals and doubloons; Mexican coins; in Pennsylvania Dutch and German pieces, and along the coast Portuguese and even Italian money was often seen, brought by seamen.

The United States mint was established in 1791, and the United States coinage became, of course, the legal tender. The mixed coinage, however, was not at once displaced, but continued in local use, so that it became necessary for merchants in keeping accounts to designate that a bill was to be paid in United States currency, or, if in miscellaneous coins, these were received at a discount. So before the sum total of the bills the merchant was accustomed to write the letters "U. S.," signifying United States money. In the hurry of writing the "S" was often written over the "U;" then the connecting line at the bottom easily dropped off, and to the present day most people unconsciously commemorate the original practice by making the two down strokes first, then adding the "S."

In framing pictures with passe partout paper binding hold the picture mat and glass in place with a clothespin, and they will not slip.

How to Brighten Old Mahogany.

If your mahogany looks grayish and grimy don't be afraid to give it a good bath. Housewives do not realize the value of soap and water on old mahogany. It cleans the wood as nothing else does. Take a bowl or a bucket of warm water into which has been put a tablespoonful or more of olive oil and a few shavings of castile soap.

Use a soft sponge or a fresh piece of cheesecloth. Wring it out in the water, so that you will not ruin the carpet or the floor. Go into all the crevices of the carvings with the cheesecloth wrapped about a small pointed stick.

Be sure that every piece of the wood is dried with fresh cheesecloth or a bit of soft flannel.

How to Cure Blisters on Feet.

Blisters of the feet, usually at the heel, are due to friction by rough shoes or wrinkled stockings. The fluid should be allowed to escape through a minute hole, made by the point of a sterilized needle, and the skin left in place. To avoid these blisters the shoes should be well fitting and the stockings quite smooth. Before starting out on a long tramp dust the feet with this powder: Burnt alum, 65 grams; salicylic acid, 2½ grams; starch, 15 grams; talcum powder, 50 grams.

How to Stuff a Turkey.

Make a stuffing for turkey of a large cupful of crumbs, seasoning with parsley, sweet marjoram and thyme and moisten with melted butter. Chop twenty small oysters fine and mix with the dressing. If you prefer you may leave the oysters whole. With this stuffing fill the breast of the turkey.

THE THANKSGIVING TABLE.

How to Make a Feast For the Eye as Well as the Palate.

As Thanksgiving is a national custom it becomes us to treat it handsomely and make it not only a feast to the palate, but to the eye. Nothing can do this so well as the adornment of the table with flower and leaf and vine, making its appearance as charming to the view as its aroma is to the appetite, says the Delineator.

If you haven't a brilliant little scarlet poinsettia for the center of the table now is the time and place for the dish of ferns you brought in some time ago from the wet places before the frost had touched them to withered gold and for a wreathlike flat arrangement about it on the snowy cloth of the small leaves of the whortleberry (pressed immediately after plucking), with all its rich tints of orange and carmine yet unfaded. If, however, you are so fortunate as to have an akebia vine anywhere on the premises you can have the preferable living green. This is a Japanese hardy vine, acclimated over here for perhaps a century, whose curious flowers of a reddish purple, male and female in one pendulous cluster, belong to the heats of summer, but whose small leaves are green and delicate even in midwinter.

But if you have gathered none of these things you can purchase a little pot of maidenhair fern and can lay the sprays around the centerpiece and up and down the table just before the guests are seated, as they shrivel so soon. You can hardly have a prettier effect than this in its pure green and white contrast, unless there is added to it a tiny boutonniere at every place, made only of a single bud, together with a leaf of the rose geranium or lemon verbena filched from those provided for the finger bowls. At such a table one dines without feeling as if he were satisfying only the material tastes.

Thomas Jefferson's grave is in a thick growth of woods off an embowered road leading from Charlottesville, Va., up to Monticello.

The man who lives till he is more than a century old and the child who dies in infancy are alike included in the law of averages. They balance each other's chances, as it were.

Of 100,000 people living at the age of ten only 95,614 will live to the age of twenty-one, only 82,284 will be living at forty, only forty-nine will be living at ninety-six and only nine at ninety-seven. At thirty the average man may take it that he has under thirty-five years to live, at forty under twenty-eight years, at fifty under twenty-one years and at sixty under fourteen years.

In each and all of these cases how he lives will determine whether he will have a longer life or a shorter life, but the average will infallibly work out within a space of ninety years.—Cassell's Saturday Journal.

Estimating the length of legislative sessions at six months, the new state constitution will cause an increase in the salaries of the 133 members of nearly $35,000. Other salary increases provided for by the new organic law will amount to upwards of $15,000 more. It is expected, however, that in the future, legislative sessions will be shorter and that other legislative expenses will be reduced by reason of the new salary arrangement.

The Ivy Drug Store Gives Facts Regarding Dyspepsia.

Although Indigestion and Dyspepsia are so prevalent, most people do not understand their cause and cure. There is no reason why anyone should not eat anything they desire if they will only chew it carefully and thoroughly. Many actually starve themselves into sickness through fear of eating every good-looking, good-smelling and good-tasting food, because it does not agree with them.

Dieting cannot cure dyspepsia. If we refuse every article of food that disagrees with us, before long we have nothing left, and find ourselves chronic dyspeptics.

We can cure dyspepsia. We are so confident of this fact that we guarantee a cure, and promise to supply the medicine free of all cost to everyone who will use it, who is not perfectly satisfied with the results which it produces. We exact no promises, and put no one under any obligation whatever. Surely, nothing could be fairer. We are located right here in Charlevoix, and our reputation should be sufficient assurance of the genuineness of our offer.

We want everyone in Charlevoix who is troubled with Indigestion or Dyspepsia in any form to come to our store and get a box of Rexall Dyspepsia Tablets. Take them home and give them a reasonable trial, according to directions. They are very pleasant to take; they sooth the irritable stomach, strengthen and invigorate the digestive organs, promote a healthy and natural bowel action, immediately relieve nausea and all stomach irritation, produce perfect and healthy digestion and assimilation, and promote nutrition.

A 25c package of Rexall Dyspepsia Tablets furnishes 15 days' treatment. In ordinary cases, this is sufficient to produce a cure. In more chronic cases, a longer treatment, of course, is necessary, and depends upon the severity of the trouble. For such cases, we have two larger sizes which sell for 45c and 89c. The Ivy Drug Store, A. B. Fleischer proprietor.

The Shattered Tomb at Tewin.

Concerning the tomb of Lady Anne Grimston in Tewin churchyard, near Welwyn, there is a curious legend.

The local story runs that the Lady Anne who died in 1713 and was the wife of Sir Samuel Grimston of Gorhambury, Herts, doubted the doctrine of the resurrection and is said to have declared: "I should as soon think that seeds would force themselves from the stonework of a tomb as that a dead body should do so or that trees should spring forth out of my grave as I in any form should rise therefrom. Bear witness, my friends, to what I say. If there is any truth in the word of God, may seven trees grow from my grave."

Whether the legend be true or not, it is a fact that from the stonework of the tomb where Lady Anne Grimston is buried seven large trees have grown, which have shattered the stonework and iron railing inclosing it as completely as if a charge of gunpowder had been placed inside it. It should be stated, however, that an almost identical tradition attaches to a tomb in the churchyard at Watford from which a fig tree has grown and flourishes luxuriantly.—London Express.

PROFIT IN "GOLDEN HOOF."

Writing of his experience in raising sheep, H. E. Tweed, a successful Ohio breeder, says: For more than 100 years not a "golden hoof" had trodden this farm. But I concluded to take a few on trial. At the end of the first year we had lost a few ewes by natural death, one by dogs, and a very few lambs had perished. Yet with all this, together with our general lack of experience, the profit was satisfactory. I had demonstrated to my own satisfaction that I could keep sheep profitably and so decided to permanently include them in my live stock operations.

The first lesson I learned was the importance and economy of good rams. To have blooded ewes was not at all practical, but in the sire we could have "half the flock" good at comparatively small expense. Accordingly the old bucks were discarded and new ones of better stock purchased. I have learned, however, that stock is not the only thing to be considered in purchasing rams, but that individuality must have careful consideration. Breeders tell me that buyers are often misled by elegant pedigrees. Better get less pedigree and more individuality or, still better, get both if possible. Many of the fine points of the fancy breeder are not worth consideration by the practical sheep raiser, who is interested alone in producing the greatest number of pounds of wool and mutton at the least expense possible.

To the ordinary sheep raiser it does not matter whether the fore wool of the Shropshire extends entirely down to the muzzle or in the Southdown that the wool extends to the knee, etc. Instead of these fine points it is better to see, no matter what the breed, that the individual is growthy, compact and uniform, of good quality, rugged in general constitution, with a wide, deep chest, good spring of ribs and is well quartered—in short, that the animal is there.

One of my first troubles was with dogs. Of course there were no attacks as long as the sheep were kept indoors at night, but when the weather turned warm and the sheep were on pasture it was thought sufficient to confine them at night in a small lot adjacent to the dooryard. However, we were greatly surprised one morning to find the torn and bleeding form of a strong ewe lying not fifty feet from the house. Now our sheep are invariably confined in a barn or other dog-proof inclosure every night in the year. It is the only safe and humane way of treating this timid and innocent animal.

External parasites were soon present in large numbers, and it was soon apparent that something must be done else disease and death would result. These pests were constantly sapping the very lifeblood of the helpless animals. There was but one way to control them, and that was by dipping. All necessary preparation, including the installation of a large tank, was soon made. Now the persistent parasite that insists on making our flock his place of abode may count on being unceremoniously ushered away by the sulphur or tobacco route, never to return. In addition to its use in a dipping fluid I consider tobacco indispensable for treating internal parasites. It happens that this weed is one of my principal crops, and I never fail to see that the sheep have access at all times to the cured leaf. It is given by reducing to a dust and mixing with salt. Soon the animals acquire a liking for the mixture, and they will even learn to consume the tobacco alone, bitter and nasty as it is.

Slowly have we increased the size of our flock. An additional hundred acres of land was recently purchased and is now being tiled for pasturage. Alfalfa was included among our farm crops, which plant to a great extent dispenses with the necessity of purchasing costly mill feed. The use of corn and clover has by no means been abandoned.

Conducted by the local W. C. T. U.

"The World is Going Dry."

The slogan, "The Nation's Going Dry," that echoed and re-echoed from the National W. C. T. U. Convention held in Nashville, Tenn., last November, was caught up and has been amplified until it reverberates around the world. Nearly all the nations, as well as the leading temperance organizations, sent representatives to the congress now in session at Saratoga Springs, N. Y., and while the gathering is as yet not all that could have been desired, numerically, it certainly makes up in quality what it lacks in quantity. American, Canadian, Englishman and East Indian have in turn occupied the platform of Convention Hall and recounted the achievements of the temperance forces, marshalling an almost bewildering array of facts and figures in support of the statements made. The old campaigner who fought on the skirmish line of this great reform could not fail to find cause for devout gratitude in the present marshalling of the troops, not only fully equipped for the warfare but ready and eager for the fray.

The Congress was conceived and promoted, primarily, to honor the memory of Dr. Billy J. Clark, who in 1808, instigated the first temperance society known to history. While this society did not exact a total abstinence pledge, confining its scope to an effort to induce moderation in the use of intoxicants and has therefore no direct connection with the present prohibition movement, it marked an arrest of thought that has been the basic principle of every temperance organization founded during the hundred years since Dr. Billy Clark declared to his pastor, Rev. Lebbens Armstrong, "Sir, we shall become a community of drunkards, unless something is speedily done to arrest the progress of intemperance."

Chemical Action of Manure.

Manures act chemically on soils by adding new stores of plant food, and by their decomposition in the soil they give off carbonic acid gas, which unites with the soil waters and increases its dissolving action on mineral plant food. It also provides the formation of humates in the soil and thus renders inert mineral plant food more available.

Words to the Wise

By GERTRUDE LEWIS.

Copyrighted, 1906, by Associated Literary Press.

To begin with, Mrs. Mook was not even Ben Melville's mother-in-law. She was his stepmother-in-law, and Letty disliked her as much as her husband did.

They had welcomed the change in Ben's business affairs which required his removal to California, and as they boarded the train that was to take them on the first stage of their journey Letty breathed a little sigh of relief.

"I suppose it's wicked," she said softly, "but I wish we were going to China or Japan."

"What's the use?" asked Ben, with a laugh. "She would follow us out there. The last thing she said was that if you grew homesick to wire a ticket and she would come out at once."

Letty sat up very straight in her seat.

"Ben Melville," she warned impressively, "if you ever dare send such a message I'll never speak to you again."

"I won't," he promised teasingly, "unless you need punishment."

Thereafter impending quarrels were checked when Ben irrelevantly inquired if there was a telegraph blank handy. The threatened trouble always ended in a laugh.

The first six months of California life seemed like a dream, so different was everything from what it had been in the east. A flower garden that bloomed the year round was new to the little New England girl, and Wah Ling, once his oriental makeup was mastered, was like a gift of the gods. After a quick succession of raw immigrants of all nationalities the Chinaman was a revelation.

Silent footed, competent and scrupulously neat, Wah Ling was a great relief to the little housekeeper, and Melville declared his home to be a paradise with a thirty dollar a month angel in charge.

Then the blow fell. Letty met her husband at the door of their little home with an expression on her face that filled him with alarm.

"What's wrong, little woman?" he asked anxiously. "Is is bad, dear?"

"It couldn't be worse," she sobbed as he gathered her into his arms. "Mrs. Mook's coming."

"Wire her not to," he said sharply. "I know that she's your stepmother, darling, but that doesn't entitle her to come out here and make life miserable. I should not think that she would want to. You don't even call her mother."

"She doesn't mind a little thing like that," sobbed Letty. "She writes that the doctor says that her lungs are weak and that six months in the mild California air is just what she needs. She's coming to stay with us because dad can't afford to send her out here and pay her board too."

"Wire her not to come," repeated Ben sternly. But Letty shook her head.

"We can't," she wailed. "She started the day after she mailed this, and she'll be here tomorrow."

"Then we'll have to make the best of it," said Ben, with the peculiar tightening of the lips that marked his displeasure. "Perhaps we may find some way of housing her elsewhere. Let's have dinner. The situation will look better after we have had something to eat."

But even Wah Ling's perfect cooking did not bring the customary sense of contentment, though he had done his best, because he had seen that his mistress was worried.

He moved about the dining room in his spotless white cashmere like some accomplished ghost and took a dislike to the new guest before he had seen her because she had made the mistress cry.

But his dislike became personal when he entered the dining room the following afternoon. Mrs. Mook had arrived only a half hour before, and she had not been apprised of the employment of a Chinese "boy."

"The person's in his night clothes!" she cried, eying Wah Ling's snowy garments with disfavor. "My dear Letty, your father wears those things to sleep in."

"It is the native costume," explained Letty. "It is very cool and comfortable."

"It's indecent," commented Mrs. Mook, and Wah Ling scowled.

A melancholy trio sat on the piazza that evening in the soft dusk, heavy with the scent of flowers. Mrs. Mook found fault with everything and announced that on the morrow she would readjust the household affairs.

Letty sought to make reply, but a warning pressure on her arm caused her to remain silent, and not until Mrs. Mook announced herself ready for bed was the riddle explained.

Immediately after breakfast Mrs. Mook announced that the process of reform would start in the kitchen. Mrs. Melville drew back.

"You mustn't go in there!" she cried. "Tell Wah Ling what you want done, and he will do it perfectly, but the Chinese boys will not stand for any supervision."

"That's all nonsense," declared Mrs. Mook militantly. "He can ride rough shod over you, but he'll find he has some one else to deal with now."

With majestic mien she strode into the immaculate kitchen. Wah Ling looked up inquiringly from the chicken. Mrs. Mook gave a cry of disapproval.

"You mustn't do it that way," she commanded.

"What's wrong?" asked Wah.

"Get a knife," commanded Mrs. Mook. "That is the proper way."

"Velly good way," commented Wah serenely as he severed a wing from the body.

"Do as I tell you, you impertinent heathen!" cried the exasperated Mrs. Mook. "I am going to take charge of this kitchen, and things must be done as a Christian does them. Mrs. Melville has been too easy with you. You will find that I am not so easily imposed upon. Get a knife and cut the chicken with that."

Wah dropped the chicken, and with a docility that brought a smile of triumph to Mrs. Mook's face he trotted over to the cupboard and procured a knife with an eighteen inch blade.

"You get out here," he commanded as he brandished knife and hatchet. "You velly bad. You buttin."

With a whoop he started for her, and Mrs. Mook fled to the front porch, where Letty waited developments.

"Get a policeman! Call for help!" she panted. "That Chinaman has gone crazy."

"It's just his way," said Letty placidly. "All Chinamen are like that. They make splendid servants, but they will not stand interference in their work. You can tell them what you want done and how you wish it done, and you can count on its being done, but when you interfere— Wah nearly scared me to death the only time he chased me out of the kitchen. He had a knife and the fire shovel."

"He must be dismissed," said Mrs. Mook firmly.

"What's the use?" said Letty. "If he goes he will leave his mark somewhere. Then we never can get a boy at any price. Mrs. Morgan tried that. She let her boy go, and they had eleven in two days. They all knew where to look for the sign, and when they saw it they went."

"Either that heathen goes or I shall," said Mrs. Mook sternly.

"We can't let Wah Ling go," declared Letty with equal firmness. "I simply will not be without a servant."

Mrs. Mook paused to give her stepdaughter a chance to reconsider. As she stood there she caught sight of Wah Ling's face contorted with rage peering through the dining room door. He still held the carving knife, and, with a scornful sniff, Mrs. Mook turned and marched upstairs to pack her trunk.

Wah Ling departed cheerfully for the livery to order the carriage to take her to the resort down the road, and her last glimpse of the little redwood cottage showed Wah Ling performing a solemn dance on the porch, with a knife in one hand and a club in the other.

The best dinner Wah had ever cooked was spread on the table that evening when Ben came home from his work, and from the kitchen came the shrill notes of what Wah Ling was pleased to consider a song. Ben laughed as he took his place at the head of the table.

"I always said that Wah Ling was a jewel," he declared. "He is a pearl without price."

"I am a little afraid myself," confessed Letty. "He never was so violent when we had our trouble."

"No be fraid," counseled Wah, who had noiselessly entered. "Hear chinchin yess'day. 'Word to wise man plenty 'nough.' Savvy?"

"And you did it on purpose?" cried Letty reproachfully.

"You no like?" asked Wah in stunned surprise.

"It was very wrong," declared Ben as he drew a bill from his pocket and passed it to Wah. "But if she comes again we will speak more words for the wise."

"Me savvy," agreed Wah as he pocketed the bill.

To Polish Mahogany.

"If others are troubled as I have been," says a writer in Harper's Bazar, "with a blue gray appearance on the surface of any of their highly polished furniture they may feel perfectly safe in using the following:

"To about a quart of clear water add a tablespoonful of good strong vinegar. In the solution saturate a soft cheesecloth and wring out as dry as possible. With this rub lightly the surface to be cleaned and dry—always rubbing lightly—with a dry piece of cheesecloth.

"If afraid of this at first, you might experiment on a section of the furniture that does not show. The inside of the top lid of the piano might do if that is the article to be cleaned. In case of the first application not entirely removing the cloudy look repeat the operation in about a week and you will have the satisfaction of seeing your furniture look as fine as it did the day it left the factory."

A Phillips Brooks Story.

The spirit of love and kindliness to all which pervaded every word and deed of Bishop Phillips Brooks did not hinder his keen appreciation of others' failings and shortcomings or his own.

"Why in the world doesn't Brown write his autobiography and have it published?" said one of the bishop's friends, referring to an incessant talker and most egotistical man who had been wasting an hour of the bishop's most precious time by a rehearsal of some unimportant happenings.

"Why, he'd rather tell it, of course," said the bishop, and then like a flash came regret for the quickly spoken truth, and he turned on his friend with a half humorous, half distressed face. "What do you mean by asking me such a question as that when I'd off my guard?" he demanded reproachfully.

A Riddle.

What does man love more than life,
Hate more than death or mortal strife,
That which contented men desire,
The poor possess, the rich require,
The miser spends, the spendthrift saves
And all men carry to their graves?
Answer.—Nothing.

Farm and Garden

GOOD SEED CORN.

Selecting It a Matter of Care and Intelligence.

In order to secure the largest possible yields of corn, including grain and fodder, the grower must carefully and intelligently select, cure, test and grade his seed corn. It is true that many farmers obtain their seed corn from the crib in the spring and secure what appear to be good stands and reasonably good crops. This does not imply, however, that the stand might not have been made better and the crop larger had these same farmers given more care to the selection, storing and treatment of their seed corn.

A STUDY OF KERNELS.

[The upper three kernels are well proportioned and occupy completely the space between the circumference of the ear and the circumference of the cob. The upper right hand two kernels are poorly shaped and leave a lot of unoccupied space. The lower right hand two kernels show how the white rice popcorn kernels occupy the space. The lower two kernels are of the shoe peg type. The left two kernels show the relative shape and position of flint kernels as compared with the upper three dent kernels.]

The condition of corn in the spring of 1908 that had stood during the winter in shock or crib emphasizes in a striking way the risks that are run in using seed that has not been properly saved. Of a large number of ears tested at the Michigan Agricultural college for vitality those selected from the shock invariably produced an exceedingly low number of germinations. More than 50 per cent of the ears produced no germination whatever, and of those that did show vitality it was rare that 100 per cent of the kernels germinated. The conditions under which corn passed the winter were exceedingly bad, but even with the best conditions there are influences, such as freezing, molding and the like, which of necessity tend to reduce the vitality of the corn.

The ear should be selected while it still remains on the standing stalk. The stalk should be of good size, with considerable foliage. The position of the ear should be considered. If too low it is apt to mature late. It is the opinion of the college experimenters that increased yields are secured by the judicious selection of seed from stalks bearing two ears. The ideal ear should be cylindrical, not tapering. Experience teaches that rough top kernels are best.

The selected ears should be placed where they will dry in the shortest reasonable time, and various methods have been employed for this purpose. There is no better method from the standpoint of efficiency than the old one of braiding the ears together by the husks left upon them or tying them in bes by strings and hanging in the summer kitchen or in the attic above near the stovepipe. This, however, requires considerable room and is not altogether satisfactory to the workers in the kitchen. A furnace room is a good place, provided it is well ventilated and an occasional fire is built. Frequently the corn is left in crates, and, while this is usually a successful method, there is more or less danger from molding. Corn so stored should be watched carefully until it is known to be thoroughly dry.

The cheap rack shown herewith is used at the college for storing and drying seed corn. It is twelve feet long and ten feet in height, with a capacity for thirty bushels of ears. The posts are 2 by 4 inch hemlock and stand four feet apart. They are set in pairs four inches apart, each pair carrying a tier of corn. Sixpenny nails should be used in nailing on the strips.

How to Garnish a Turkey.

For this you must select fine large oysters. Take them from the liquor carefully and dry on a soft cloth. Dip each oyster in powdered crackers, rolling it over and over until well coated. Fry them in enough hot butter to cover them when you put them in the frying pan. Take out the moment they are done and lay around the edge of the hot dish in which the turkey is established.

CARE OF A DOG.

How He Should Be Treated to Keep Him In Good Condition.

A dog's digestion is almost identical with a man's, except that it requires twice as much time. Scraps from the table will usually form a properly balanced ration. Let the dog foods alone. Give the puppy three meals a day until he is eight months old. Then two meals only. Don't let him have all he will eat, says the St. Paul Pioneer Press.

A house dog should have his heavy meal in the morning and the light one at night. An outdoor dog needs the heavy meal at night to keep him warm through the night.

If a dog is costive stir his sluggish liver by a dose of one-half teaspoonful each of buckthorn and castor oil. A spoonful of raw black molasses will act as a mild laxative. This is especially good for puppies, for in this they get in soluble form the salt they require. Table salt they are slow to assimilate.

Many people overdo the washing of dogs. This is a process rarely needed, because dogs do not perspire through the skins as we do, but from the tongue. Soap and water robs the hair of necessary oil.

The proper way to clean the hair is by brushing with a coarse handbrush. White dogs are cleaned by rubbing in, then brushing out, powdered magnesia.

Fleas do not breed in the hair of dogs, but in sandy soil. They get on the dog, but he suffers more discomfort than pain from their bites.

Cedar excelsior as bedding in the kennel is a tried and tested flea exterminator. If your nearest upholsterer cannot let you have a pound of it try rubbing your dog's pelt with a magnesia brick which you have saturated with 10 cents' worth of spirits of camphor.

How to Wash Velveteen.

To wash velveteen, make a lukewarm lather with a good brand of soap and wash thoroughly just as you would flannel. The water should be removed by pressure, as twisting is likely to produce a shaded appearance. After the water is removed the velveteen should be well shaken and hung in front of the fire with the right side toward the heat, which will raise the pile as the moisture evaporates. When it is dry place over a thick blanket and iron on the wrong side.

How to Care For Ostrich Plumes.

A woman who believes it a good investment to buy handsome ostrich plumes gives her secret of keeping them free from moths when the feathers are not in use. She puts them in glass jars, securely fastened. If white tips she first sprinkles them with magnesia and wraps the jars in blue paper. This prevents their changing color at all.

A Bad Spell or Two.

Here is a paragraph in which many of the words have been spelled incorrectly. Can you find the words in which errors occur and respell them correctly?

The mind of man naturally hates everything that looks like a restraint upon it and is apt to fansy itself under a sort of confinement when the sight is pent up in a narrow compas and shortened on every side by the nay-bourhood of walls and mountens. On the contrary, a spacious horizon is an image of liberty, where the eye has room to raluge abroad, to expaishiate at large on the immensity of its views and to loose itself amidst the variety of objects that offer themselves to its observation. Such wide and undetermined prospects are as pleasing to the fansy as the speculation of eternity or infinitude is to the understanding.—New York Mail.

Deer Lake Grange No. 1269.

Deer Lake grange met in regular session Noromber 21, and was called order by worihy master H. C. Barber and opened with song.

Two applications for membership were received. Bills pertaining to sheda were taken up and after discussion paased.

Lecturer's hour was taken up with a discussion on "What kind of farmming is the most profitable?" It was the firm opinion of most of the members that general farming was the most profituble, as when one crop fails the farmer always has aoother crop to fall back upon. He also has his work so divided that he is not rushed at one time, and nothing to do the rest of the time but general farming keeps him bnsy all the time.

Attendance twenty-five. There will be a maaquerade at the hall December 4.

Norwood Grange No. 1291

On the evening of December 1, Norwood grange will hold a festival. Each member is requested to tring one or more friends who are not members of the order. There will be a good program. Don't forget to bring something to eat and a couple of your friends.

At the last meeting the third and fourth degrees were conferred on Robert Supernaw. Norwood grange is very sorry to lose Brother and Sister O'Brien who have moved to Charlevoix, but hope they will be with us as often as possible.

Wilson Grange No. 719

Wilson grange no. 719 met Saturday, November 14, with small attendance. In the business session the grange voted to buy new seats for hall and a committee of one was appointed to investigate prices and quality and report at the next meeting. Grange also voted to plaster and wainscote the hall before the Pomona meeting. A committee of three was appointed to attend to same. The finance committee reported a balance on hand of $30. "Woman's Work" committee agree to help financially on the hall improvements.

A very good program consisting of recitations, readings, instrumental, music, recipes (given by the ladies) and a discussion on the effect of frost, in winter, on early and late sown rye, was given.

Lecturer announced a debate for next meeting, subject, Resolved, The financial advantages should not be used to induce people to join the grange. Leaders, I. S. Bills affirmative, H. Batterbee negative. Grange closed in form.

HE WAS MISTAKEN.

The Young Army Officer Was Not a Coward After All.

At the battle of Santiago a surgeon going to the front came upon a young officer sitting beside the road trembling like a leaf and whiter than the dead men around him. At sight of the surgeon he began to talk.

"I'm a coward. I'm a coward. I'm a coward," he said. "I knew I'd run, and I did. O Lord, I wish you'd kill me! I'm disgraced forever. I just got scared. I knew I would. I was going along all right, not thinking of anything but getting at the dashed Spaniards, yelling at my men to come on and running ahead as fast as I could, when all of a sudden I stubbed my toe or something, and then I can't remember being scared, but I must have been, for I came galloping back here sick as a dog. Oh, I feel so awfully gone! I'm a blanked coward, and I wish I was dead. O Lord, why doesn't somebody shoot me? I've got such an awful goneness right here." And he put his hand to his stomach. The surgeon gave him a quick look and caught him as he plunged forward in a faint. Where the awful goneness was a Mauser bullet had found its billet. They carried the wounded man to the field hospital, and he chuckled all the way.

"Oh, my! Oh, my!" he said over and over. "I wasn't scared! I wasn't scared!" And then he would laugh delightedly. "I wasn't scared! I was hit! I was just hit! I ain't a coward after all!"—Washington Post.

The Age of Sheep.

The age of sheep is very easily shown by an examination of the teeth. A lamb has the first pair of permanent front teeth when about ten months old; the second pair appears at about eighteen months; the third pair at twenty-eight months, and the fourth at about thirty-three to forty months. When the whole of the permanent front teeth have appeared the sheep is in its fourth year. The Merino matures its teeth later than the other breeds; the Cotswold and Southdowns and other highly improved mutton sheep are some months ahead of a Merino, but at four years every sheep has its full mouth of teeth. Later the age is known by the appearance of the teeth, which gradually lose their sharp edges and become worn down smooth. A healthy sheep will keep its teeth good until ten or twelve years old, if the pasture is not unusually bare and the soil sandy, so as to wear the teeth excessively.

Antiquity of "A Regular Shindy."

The antiquity of many familiar terms is surprising when it is known. Many people are not aware that "What the dickens!" occurs in Shakespeare, but fewer still will be prepared to hear that the phrase "a regular shindy" is found in an author's note to a poem called "The Popish Kingdom," published in 1570. A writer quotes this note, which refers to the celebration of Maundy Thursday, "Midnight services are held in church, the lights are put out, and a regular shindy follows, men being beaten and wounded."—London Globe.

A COFFEE HOUSE COURTSHIP.

By PHILIP KEAN.

Copyright, 1908, by Associated Literary Press.

Ruth Bradford came out from the elevated station into the street that led to the settlement. Fresh from her summer outing, her whole being rebelled against the squalor of the city street, the clamor of shrill voices, the wailing of babies in the fetid tenements.

Life was too short, she reflected pathetically, to spend one's days trying to uplift one's fellow men. She decided that she would give it up, go back to the fields and to the woods all aflame with red and gold and breathe God's sunshine in freedom and content.

"I THOUGHT YOU KNEW IT," HE SAID.

And just then she met Roger Boove.

"My, but it's good to see you back again!" he said. "Are you on your way to the settlement?"

"Yes," Ruth stated, "for the last time."

He looked at her in surprise. "For the last time! Why?"

"Oh, it's such an eternal grind trying to drag people up who want to stay down and trying to keep children clean who want to be dirty, trying to push back waves of the sea with a broom."

"Why, Ruth"—his tone showed his intense astonishment—"when you left us in the spring you were an optimist, and now you have come back a pessimist! I believe you are joking."

"No, I'm not," Ruth declared. "I'm in dead earnest. This summer I've been living up among the hills, and I want to go back—I want to go back and forget the city and these hideous streets. After all, why am I responsible? Why should not I live a life of ease as well as other people?"

He shook his head.

"Don't expect me to answer," he said, "but something has change you awfully. And you might as well tell me what it is, because I'm going to find out if you don't."

"Well, if you must know," said Ruth slowly, "I've had a proposal."

He glanced at her quickly, and his face took on graver lines.

"Then you're in love?" he asked quietly.

"I'm not sure," Ruth reflected, "whether I'm in love, but—oh, we can't talk about it here, Roger!"

"No; it is pretty public," he admitted, "but I haven't any classes for an hour or two, so why can't we have lunch together in the settlement coffee house?"

The coffee house, quaint and comfortable, with its Russian coppers glowing red against the dark wood, its smooth brick tiles, its somber tables and chairs, brought forth an exclamation from Ruth.

"It's so good to be at home again!" she said as Roger drew out a chair for her by the window and took a seat opposite.

"So you think of it as home?" he asked, his dark eyes reading her sparkling face.

"Oh"—her eyes grew startled—"I believe I do! A minute ago I was so depressed, and now—I think it is the spirit of the place that rests one, Roger—to feel that these poor foreigners can come here and find something familiar in a strange land of strange customs."

Roger smiled thoughtfully as he consulted the menu. "But about that proposal," he reminded her.

"Oh, yes!" Ruth slipped off her gloves and folded her hands before her on the bare table. "The—the man is rich, Roger. He has two automobiles and a country place and a house in town, and—and he sent me a box of candy nearly every day, and flowers and books, and drove me through the country in his big car, and—oh, I had the time of my life, Roger!"

The man eyed her a little wistfully. "I'm glad you had such a good time," he said, "but—but we shall hate to lose you from here."

"But you can't blame me," she said feverishly. "Surely you can't blame me, Roger. I'm young, and I've given the five years since I left college to work among the poor people of this neighborhood, and my heart has been in it, and I've been glad to do it, but now—oh, I want something of ease and beauty and brightness!"

He tried to speak lightly.

"You have earned it," he said, "and of course the man is—Prince Charming."

Ruth shook her head. "No; that's the trouble," she faltered. "He's not very young and not very handsome, and he's very dictatorial, Roger."

"But you love him."

"Oh"—Ruth hesitated as the waitress brought them their omelet and bread and butter. Then when they were alone again she said, "I—I don't believe I love him, but I love the things he can give me."

Roger flung back his head, his dark eyes flashing.

"And you think you can be happy with a motor car and a house in town and a complacent husband? Oh, Ruth, Ruth, where are your dreams?"

She stared at him with a pale face. "My dreams?" she faltered.

"Yes; the things that we planned at college. We were to give our lives to others, separately at first, because each of us must be very sure that we wanted to live for humanity, and then, if love continued, we were to be married and have our home in an apartment near the settlement and carry on our work together."

They were alone in the dim corner, and suddenly Ruth reached out her hand across the table.

"Oh, Roger, Roger," she cried, "why didn't you say that before I went away? Why didn't you, Roger?"

"I thought you knew it," he said, with his big hand over hers. "Have you ever doubted it, Ruth?"

"Yes," she confessed. "In the spring when I went away I was so tired—so tired of bearing the burdens of the unhappy, with no happiness for myself—and it seemed that—that if you had cared, Roger, you would have said 'Let's bear it together, Ruth!'"

"And I"—his voice was deep with emotion—"I was so afraid that you were tired of me that I didn't dare speak. Oh, you see what a misunderstanding it was, Ruth! And now, and now, you have strayed into greener fields and have promised"—

"But I haven't promised!" she cried. His face was illumined.

"I—I told him I must think about it. But, oh, Roger, it was because I could not separate my future from yours!"

"Dearest dear," he murmured softly as the waitress came with their salad and cheese and black coffee, and after that they made a pretense of eating.

But presently Ruth said:

"We'll live in that little apartment that overlooks the settlement courtyard, and I'll take a mother's class in cooking, and you shall talk with the men, and everything will be worth while, Roger."

And Roger, his glance coming back from the open window, through which he could see the crowded street, where Greek and Italian and Slav mingled, to the face of his beloved, bent forward impetuously.

"Everything is worth while," he said, with a wonderful smile lighting his fine countenance—"everything is worth while when love is the inspiration!"

The Unwise Shoplifter.

"It is strange," said a store detective, "why women shoplifters want to take the whole family along when they go out on a thieving expedition. It is a fact that many of them are accompanied by children when caught stealing. That seems a short sighted policy. A woman hampered by a child stands twice the chance of being detected that she does when operating minus such an incumbrance. Of course it can be argued that she fares better in the long run, inasmuch as she is more likely to be dismissed with only a reprimand on account of the child. This is no doubt true, for unless the offense is very serious it takes a hard hearted man to press a charge against a woman accompanied by children. But that very line of reasoning makes the act more reprehensible.

"My own theory is that most shoplifters do not go shopping with the fixed intention of stealing. The mania for taking something overcomes them after they get in the store, and they snatch the goods on impulse, no matter whether or not they have children in charge."—New York Globe.

The English Milkman.

In English towns, a Canadian visitor declares in the London Queen, the forenoon runs out to the pavement just to see that glorious chariot called a milk float go by—that gay bit of a two wheeled thing, white and yellow, white and blue, or red, white and blue, with the shining brass churn erect at the side, the reins coming over the shining brass rail in front, the little square seat inserted at the rear and the charioteer standing at the back like Ben-Hur.

Then comes the English milkman on foot, with a modern yoke on his shoulders and swinging at each side a brass bound tin pail in which is a queer little measuring dipper. Who could wish to have milk delivered in glass bottles, with a paper sealed top, when he can have it measured out at his door into his own jug in this quaintly curious fashion? What do microbes amount to compared with the joy of the mediaeval?

He Called For Trumps.

The major was laying down the law on whist. He always did, and woe to the man who ventured to differ from him!

"I tell you," he said, glaring defiantly round, as if daring any one to contradict him, "I once, and once only, had all thirteen trumps dealt to me!"

"You, I suppose, were—er—the dealer?" a meek looking young man put in.

The major turned purple.

"No, sir," he roared, "no, sir! Confound your impudence, I was not the dealer!"

"Then may I ask," the meek young man asked calmly, "what happened to be the trump card the dealer turned up?"

By the time the major had recovered from an apoplectic fit the meek young man had left the room.

DREADED HOOF AND MOUTH DISEASE

Hundreds of Cattle in Vicinity of Detroit Affected.

WHOLE HEROS OF OAIRY COWS KILLED

Over 186 Cattle Killed in One Township.

Prompt Measures Were Taken by the Inspectors to Bring the Epidemic Under Control

Last week the entire state of Michigan was placed under quarantine insofar as concerned the interstate and foreign shipment of cattle, sheep and other ruminants and swine, because of the prevalence of foot-and mouth disease. Three or four eastern states were also quarantined under identical restrictions.

A strict quarantine was also placed on four counties adjacent to Wayne county, the main object to keep the stock in the counties from from entering other sections.

In Livonia township, near Romro a herd of 73 dairy cows owned by one man were shot by orders of the Michigan livestock sanitary commission, and buried in deep trenches. Other herds in the same county are under quarantine. Altogether over 186 cows have so far been killed in this township. The owners were allowed from $50 to $80 for the condemned animals.

The outbreak of the disease in that section has been traced to the Michigan Central stock yards in Detroit as has also the out break in the Buffalo stock yards, and the present problem is to locate the point from which the infection went to the stock yards in Detroit.

Desfecting crews are working hard to prevent the spread of the disease, but it will take several weeks to finish cleaning up in a way that will make sure there will be no repetition of the outbreak.

After each place is thoroughly disinfected, a test of the efficiency of the work will be made by placing one cow in each of the barns or sheds now affected by the contagion. If no symptons of the disease manifests itself in these cows after they have been allowed to remain on the premises a reasonable length of time, perhaps a week, the inspectors will feel assured no lurking germs of the foot and mouth disease are left.

It may be three months or so however, before the farmers in the infected sections will be in shape to resume operations as dairymen. Meantime, in addition to the difference in the price at which they valued the cattle now dead and the price received for them, the farmers will be cut off from the income they derived from their dairy herds, which in some instances is one of the important sources of revenue.

The necessity for the heartiest cooperation with the authorities in their effort to eradicate the disease ought to be apparent to every dealer and farmer. The presence of so infectious a disease in even the most limited area endangers the cattle of the whole state and calls for the most radical action. It will be better to sacrifice some cattle unnecessarily than to give the disease a chance to spread. Fortunately the federal law gives authority to compensate the cattle owners for the loss caused by the slaughtering of their animals.

While the farmers seem satisfied with the valuation placed on their stock they point out that it is much easier to destroy a good dairy herd than it is to acquire one, the latter process being one involving time and the elimination of poor milk producers.

Persistent inquiry on the part of the COURIER among Charlevoix dairymen and farmers, fails to reveal any indications of presence of the much dreaded disease in this section, but it may be well to watch your stock closely.

Although highly contagious, the hoof and mouth disease, according to the observation of government experts, is not one which is always attended by a high fatality.

However, in consequence of the high fever attending the disease and the soreness of the mouth, the stock affected eats little and rapidly loses weight, while the secretion of milk nearly ceases, so that even in case of recovery the owner loses all revenue from the herd for a period of from four to six weeks.

After the disease disappears much of the stock affected is found to be irreparably damaged. Some lose the horny covering of the hoof; some are left with ulcers on the feet that cause chronic lameness; some with ulcers in the udder that make them useless as milk producers, while others become emaciated and of slight value.

OIED SUDDENLY

Capt. H. Berdan Called to Detroit by Death of His Sister.

Captain Harrison Berdan was called to Detroit, Saturday, November 21, by the death of his youngest sister, Mrs. A. W. Hammer. Mrs. Hammer was stricken with apoplexy and only lived a short time after the attack. The funeral services were held Monday, November 23, and the remains taken to Ypsilanti for burial. She was 66 years old age at the time of her death, and the youngest member of a family of seven, four of whom are now living, the oldest living member being 81 and the youngest 69 years of age.

Captain Berdan returned to his home in this city Saturday evening.

PRIMARY SCHOOL MONEY RECEIVED

Charlevoix County's Apportionment Amounts to $9,558.60.

VARIOUS AMOUNTS SENT TOWNSHIPS

City of Charlevoix Gets $1,358.14 As Her Portion.

Check From State Treasurer Reaches Here Saturday and Distribution Was Made Same Day.

Despite the reports made in many of the daily papers that the state was bankrupt and the treasury empty, County Treasurer Payton received a check Saturday for $9,558.60 from the state treasurer, this being the full amount of Charlevoix county's semi-annual primary school fund.

The primary fund for the whole state amounted to $1,330,000 and up to date, about $810,337 has been paid out to county treasurers.

The check for the county primary money reached County Treasurer Paytons's office Saturday forenoon and during the afternoon every township treasurer in the county was mailed their apportionment.

Below is given the amounts received by each township:

Bay	$ 200.00
Boyne Valley	605.20
Chandler	238.52
City of Charlevoix	1,358.14
Evangeline	2,337.14
Eveline	498.40
Hayes	423.04
Hudson	288.36

Norwood	281.24
Peaine	183.12
St. James	327.52
South Arm	1,500.00
Wilson	441.44

For the quarter ending September 30, 1908, the county paid to the Northern Michigan Asylum $230.62.

To the School for Deaf for the same period $68.74.

BONDS MUST BE PAID

So Says Supreme Court in Old Manitou County Case.

Monday the supreme court held good the claim of William Curtis and James R. Wylie against the board of supervisors of Charlevoix county.

The suit, which has been in the courts for several years, arose out of the disorganization of Manitou county, and attaching the territory to Charlevoix county. The complainants hold bonds to the amount of $8000 of Manitou county and sought to have them paid out of funds turned over by Manitou county. The amount due will be raised by taxing the townships on Beaver Island. There is about $300 now accumulated and in the hands of the county treasurer which will be applied on the indebtedness, the balance to be raised by taxation.

FAILED TO CARRY

Charlevoix Township Votes Down Bonding Proposition

Vote Stood Twenty-Three For and Nineteen Against—60 Per Cent Required.

Some very good citizens, often hold mistaken ideas of what is best for them, and for the rest of their fellows.

We believe that there are about nineteen such, residing in the township of Charlevoix. The proposition placed before the voters of the township at the special election on Monday last, failed to carry, the vote being twenty-three for and nineteen against, and as it required sixty per cent to carry the proposition, it was lost.

We presume the "immortal nineteen" believed they were doing right in voting no but we cannot for the life of us, see how they ran so figure it out. The township would benefit through the carrying of the proposition, far more than the city. It would in the long run not cost the taxpayers a single penny, and this was plainly demonstrated. It would have meant the immediate and continued impetus which the people of the township, as well as the city, have long waited for. We believe the voters have made a very grave mistake. We believe that they were misled by a few disgruntled fellows, who are no benefit to themselves, or to this or any other community in which they might happen to live. It is impossible to say at this writing what the final outcome will be. Some other method of raising the funds must be provided, if the plans of the Board of Commerce are to be carried to a successful outcome. Just now, we seem to be "up against it" as one member of the board expressed it.

But, it will not do to lie down now, and allow a few men to block the wheels of progress, even if some of us have to get behind the cart and push it right over the men who are standing in their own way, and in the way of five hundred of their fellow citizens of this city and township.

Let every live resident stand ready to help the Board of Commerce, in whatever plan they may adopt, to carry out the project which means so much to the community.

WEDDED THANKSGIVING

Pretty Ceremony at Home of Mr. and Mrs. Wm. Sutton.

A pretty wedding was solemnized Thanksgiving day at 1 o'clock at the home of Mr. and and Mrs. Wm. Sutton of Marion township, the participants being their daughter, Ella May and Fred Trimble, the son of Mr. and Mrs. Robert Trimble.

There were about thirty guests assembled in the parlor where the ceremony took place, Rev. R. A. Wright of Charlevoix, performed the ceremony. The gifts to the young couple were numerous and beautiful, consisting of many articles much appreciated by young housekeepers.

After the ceremony a bountiful wedding supper was served and the happy couple were showered with congratulations and best wishes by the assembled guests.

Mr. and Mrs. Trimble will make their future home on the Tony Clark farm in Marion township.

WILL HOLD ANNUAL MEETING

THANKSGIVING WEDDING

Pretty Ceremony at the Home of Mr. and Mrs. Wm. Eastcott

Groom a Prominent Business Man of Palmyra, Wis.—Bride well known at Ellsworth.

Wednesday evening, November 25, at 7 o'clock, at the home of Mr. and Mrs. Wm. Eastcott, of Ellsworth, occurred a very pretty wedding, when their daughter, Lucy G. became the bride of Mr. George L. Peardon of Palmyra, Wisconsin. The ceremony was performed by Rev. W. Wormser, pastor of the Presbyterian church, in the presence of a large number of relatives and friends.

The bride was beautifully dressed in white silk net, wearing the bridal wreath of smylax and carrying a bouquet of white roses. The archway and room were decorated with green and white. The bride was attended by her sister, Miss Willema Eastcott, the groom by Russell Crerar of Palmyra, Wisconsin. The wedding march was played by Miss Hazel Deline of Ellsworth After the ceremony a bountiful wedding supper was served and the balance of the evening was spent in vocal and instrumental music.

Mr. and Mrs. Peardon visited until Monday, when they took the train to visit relatives in Saginaw, Detroit, Lapeer, Flint and Lansing. They will return to Palmyra the last of the week, where they will make their future home. Mr. Peardon being engaged in the general merchandise business at that place.

Many lovely presents were received by the happy young couple, also the best wishes of their many friends and relatives.

LAST TRIP THIS SEASON

Steamer Missouri Will Close Successful Season This Week.

The Steamer Missouri left Chicago Monday night on her last trip this season. She will make port here either Wednesday night or Thursday morning on her way north, the return trip being her last for 1908.

Owing to the late season, navigation has not been as disagreeable this fall as it has been in previous years, there having been but few snow storms to combat with. However, the smoke and fogs of the early fall handicapped the sea farers almost if not quite as much as the snow storms of other years.

Interesting Letter From Sid Henry, Former Charlevoix Boy

Snow Eight Feet Deep in the Hills Living Expenses are High.

In a recent letter received by Mrs. Lydia Henry from her son Sidney, who is near Pierce, Idaho, he states that in that section of the country there is snow to the depth of eight feet, also gives other interesting facts concerning some of our former citizens, who are located at that place. Mr. Henry writes that he is located about eight miles from Pierce in a gold mining camp which was thoroughly furnished and ready for occupancy. Speaking of the hills, Mr. Henry writes that the camp where he is located is at the base of Bitter Root mountains and there is practically no level stretches of country near him. According to his letter, Mr. Henry is located near Captain Guard, and they are having some success in trapping, although the season is early. They intend to do some prospecting in connection with trapping.

In his letter he states that living expenses are "as high as the hills." Oil 50c a gallon, sugar 10c a pound and other necessities correspondingly high. They use candles, mostly, and have a lantern which is made of a lard pail with a candle through the bottom of the side and a bail on the top side. This they call a "Palouser."

Mr. Henry ate Thanksgiving dinner at the home of Ed Guard, and makes his headquarters at their home while in town.

GLOSSINGTON-GENIET

Two Charlevoix Young People Married Wednesday Evening.

Thanksgiving eve at the M. E. parsonage, Mr. Harry Glossington and Miss Alvina Geniet were united in marriage by Rev. R. A. Wright. The ceremony occurred at 7 o'clock, the contracting parties being attended by Mr. Charles Novak and Miss Mabel Poole.

Mr. Glossington is an employe of Charles Novak's cigar factory, and the bride is a daughter of Captain Geniet and well known. They will make their future home in this city. The COURIER and their many friends extend them congratulations and best wishes.

MASQUERADE PARTY

Pleasant Time Was Enjoyed at Bank Hall Thanksgiving Eve

The masquerade ball given by Dan Durance at Bank hall Thanksgiving eve was attended by about forty couple and all had a very pleasant time. Miss Jane O'Neil and Will Steinburg were the ones who held the lucky numbers on the turkeys. Durance's orchestra furnished the music for the affair.

SPLENDID HIGHWAYS ARE MAINTAINED

Credit Given America For Interest Given to Good Roads

INFORMATION ON ROAD QUESTION

To Be Distributed Throughout The Entire Country

Interesting Facts as Given by Director of Officer of United States Department of Agriculture.

Logan Waller Page, Director of the Office of Public Roads of the United States Department of Agriculture, who was named by President Roosevelt as head of the American Commission to the recent International Roads Congress at Paris, returned to Washington a few days since, firm in the belief that in some of the more scientific branches of highway construction the United States has nothing to learn from the older nations, though he was willing to concede that those countries surpass this to an amazing degree in the percentage of improved road mileage and in the jealous care with which their splendid highways are maintained.

Among the many things which especially impressed Mr. Page during this European trip were the methods for regulating automobile traffic in France and England; the belief of a majority of the delegates to the roads congress that the automobile running at average speed is not detrimental to highways; the splendor of French hospitality; the discovery that many miles of very satisfactory highways in England have been constructed by mixing limestone and granite after the methods set forth in publications issued through the United States Office of Public Roads, and the pending discussion now being carried on by English automobilists against horse traffic in city streets and upon suburban highways.

It is his belief that from the congress itself at least one big result will flow and credit for that must go to America. On a suggestion by Mr. Page, it was determined to create an International Bureau of Roads, similar in some respects to the International Bureau of Navigation. This body will consist of two or more delegates from each of the 20 governments represented at the Congress. Its purpose will be the collecting of all possible inform-

CIRCUIT COURT NOW IN SESSION

Judge Mayne Deals Out Heavy Fine to Law Breakers

TWO HUNORED DOLLARS OR 90 DAYS

Two Ill-matted Couple Were Granted Divorces

Fine Gavel Presented Judge Mayne by a Charlevoix Young Man Other Court News.

An interesting event occurred at the opening of the present term of circuit court, when a gavel was presented to Judge Mayne as a gift from Forrest H. Kane, of this city, who is now a student in the Michigan Agricultural college. Attorney L. E. Knowles of Boyne City, made the presentation and in his concluding remarks stated that the gavel was one made from Michigan wood, by a Michigan boy, at a Michigan college, for (perhaps) the best Michigan judge now living.

In a short statement accepting the gift, Judge Mayne took occasion to express his appreciation of the many favors and courtesies he had received while on the bench from members of the bar and other friends, all of which went a long way toward lightening and making more pleasant the many exacting and difficult duties which a circuit judge is called upon to perform.

After addressing a few brief remarks to the members of the bar, court opened, and up to Wednesday noon the following cases had been disposed of:

The People vs George Whitbeck and Albert Anderson, violation of the liquor law, which has been on the calendar for three years or more, was discharged.

The People vs Michael Nowland, violation of the liquor law was nolle prossed.

In the People vs William J. Garland, violation of the liquor law, Garland plead guilty and was fined $200 with one hour to produce the money or ninety days in the Detroit House of Correction. The fine was paid within the time limit.

The People vs William J. Garland and Minnie Garland, violation of liquor law, plea of guilty entered and sentence suspended.

The People vs Frank Chalompka, violation of the liquor law, plea of not guilty entered and case left over until next term of court.

The People vs Ben Williams, uttering and publishing forged paper, plead guilty, but sentence not passed upon.

The People vs Walter Bannister, larceny, plea of not guilty entered, case left over until next term of court.

The case of Weed vs Edwards, assumpsit appeal, was taken from the jury by the Judge. Sentence not passed upon.

Hattie Rogers was granted a divorce from William L. Rogers, but the judge says she must not marry again within a period of six months. William was given a year before he can again marry.

Elsa Lawder was granted a divorce from Isaac Lawder, but was given six months and Isaac one year before they can again take up the responsibilities of married life.

In the annulment of marriage case between Maggie Nikola and Mike Abdallah, the judge decided it was best for them to be separated as Maggie was only sixteen when the marriage occurred, and since have lived separate.

Jay Willcoxen and Misses Rosa and Mina Stradling of Petoskey, spent Thanksgiving at Mr. and Mrs. Roland Howe's.

Mrs. D. P. Wightman of Hillcrest Cottage, Miss Bessie Kay of Walloon Lake, H. S. Cook of Charlevoix, spent Sunday and over Thanksgiving with Mr. and Mrs. Roland Howe.

COUNTY NORMAL NOTES.

Mildred Drescher, Maude Cross, Susie and Florence Sheldon, Alma and Edith Brodie, Jessie Metz and Hazel Halliday spent Thanksgiving vacation at their respective homes.

Misses Annie Metcalf and Lola Cross called on Miss Himes last week. The girls were former members of the normal class. Miss Metcalf is teaching near East Jordan and Miss Cross in Antrim county.

The training room children gave a surprise party on the Normal girls last Wednesday. Some of the children dressed to represent Puritan characters. A short program was rendered, after which light refreshments were served. The normal girls think the children royal entertainers.

The children of the training room sent several boxes containing fruit, vegetables and clothing to the Beulah Home, Thanksgiving. The following letter was received by Miss Reed from Mr. Swift.

Boyne City, Mich.,
Nov. 21, 1908.

Miss Alice E. Reed,
Charlevoix, Mich.

Dear Miss Reed,—We want you to express our gratitude to all the pupils of your school who have so kindly assisted in sending the box of canned fruit, the box of vegetables and the two boxes of clothing.

It will prove a great blessing and help to Beulah boys and there are now over eighty of them, so their wants are many.

Every year the Charlevoix school children have been pleased to remember us in great kindness and we are glad we were not forgotten this year. By another winter our new building will be completed and then our numbers will be largely increased. May Beulah Farm for Boys always have your true interest and sympathy.

Yours sincerely and gratefully,
Herman L. Swift, Manager.

How to Prepare a Mixture to Cure Rheumatism

This Town Has Its Share of Dread Disease Which is Said to Yield to Simple Home Recipe

To relieve the worst forms of rheumatism, take a teaspoonful of the following mixture after each meal and at bedtime:

Fluid extract dandelion, one-half ounce; compound kargon, one ounce; compound syrup sarsaparilla, three ounces.

These harmless ingredients can be obtained from our home druggists, and are easily mixed by shaking them well in a bottle. Relief is generally felt from the first few doses.

This prescription forces the clogged-up, inactive kidneys to filter and strain from the blood the poisonous waste matter and uric acid, which causes rheumatism.

As rheumatism is not only the most painful and torturous disease, but dangerous to life, this simple recipe will no doubt be greatly valued by many sufferers here at home, who should at once prepare the mixture to get this relief.

It is said that a person who would take this prescription regularly, a dose or two daily, or even a few times a week, would never have serious kidney or urinary disorders or rheumatism.

Cut this out and preserve it. Good rheumatism prescriptions which really relieve are scarce, indeed, and when you need it, you want it badly.

Preserving Fine Old Oaks.

The Carvanza (Cal.) Improvement society has undertaken to preserve four grand old live oaks that stand in the streets and are dying for lack of air and water. These trees are now in streets with oiled surfaces, and the board of public works has approved plans for building cement curbs about them, so that the trees will each stand in an oval shaped space nine feet wide by thirty feet long. Inside of these curbs the oiled soil and other deleterious matter will be removed, the soil stirred and enriched and the space periodically filled with water until the trees have had a sufficiency. Some of these trees are also hollow, and these will be cleaned of decaying wood, sprayed with a fungicide and filled with cement. The exposed cement will be colored to match as nearly as may be the surface of the bark and will also be roughened on the surface with the same end in view. All dead wood will then be pruned out of the tops and a renewed life and vigor given each tree. Such work should extend to every fine tree standing in any public street or highway in any town as well as to those on private property.

Be Up and Doing.

What are you doing for your town or community, not to make it better for the visitor, but to make it better for yourself and for all the people who live in it? In these days there is so much that each can do, and one person can do so much. It is so easy, so simple, so inexpensive, to begin to improve that there is no excuse for doing nothing in that direction. An improvement association with one member is better than none. The first one ever organized had but one member for several years, and that one a woman. If you have a live improvement society of any sort, it is well. If there is a society which is not alive or if there is none, it is up to you to see that something is done, and done right away, to get life into the existing society or get a new one going.

FICTION AND FACT.

Dreams of Authors That Have Been Turned Into Realities.

The delver among old books often finds, says the Berlin Umschau, prophecies made by writers which in their day were nothing but romance. This can be so easily observed by reading the works of Jules Verne, and there are also books in which airships, the telephone, photography and the motor wagon have been spoken of generations before these were accomplished facts. A novel entitled "Der Kluge Mann," published by Voss & Co., Leipsic, 1795, by an author named Cramer shows a Roentgen picture. The story tells of the Countess Abillinia, who gave her heart to the knight Gibello. The knightly lover was thoughtless enough, however, to kill his ladylove's father, and her affection turned to hatred, and she vowed to kill him. In a dream she saw the man who had fascinated her, and she stood ready to kill him, when suddenly his form changed, and before her stood a grinning skeleton, saying, "I have already been punished." This scene is illustrated in the old book, and the picture is not unlike a Roentgen photograph, but when it was published no one probably would have believed that science within a comparatively short time would make it possible to produce this picture, which the author's imagination invented.

Kaffirs' Love Letters.

The Basutos prove an interesting study. Not that they have any depths of character, but theirs is a very happy go lucky nation. These South Africans are romantic and sentimental, but it's all on the surface. Here are a few amusing paragraphs from Kaffirs' love letters:

"My sweet flowers, the ink and the paper are very glad, because they will see your dear, beautiful face, but the the pen and me are truly sad, for we are staying behind!"

"My love for you is burning like a paraffin stove."

"Oh, you are so beautiful! You look like a peacock sitting under a willow tree!"

"My love for you is as true as a clock that keeps the time."

A Little Case of Telepathy.

"There is nothing strange to me in the operation of one mind upon another," the telepathic woman said. "Once when my sister I am very fond of was operated on I went with her and sat in the anteroom a long way off from the operating room—that is, I walked up and down there, worried to death nearly about her, when all at once I threw myself into a big armchair and went sound asleep. They had just given her the ether then, so her mind was at rest and rested mine. I slept until she came out from under the influence."

Old Barnacle Ben sat on a tar barrel down on South street and rolled his tobacco in his blistered palm.

"Yes, mates," he related to a small crowd gathered around him, "when I was on that Asiatic cruise I certainly saw some wonderful big fish. Why, off from the Island of Borneo I caught a fish that measured ten feet from tip to tip."

"Come, come, Ben!" protested one of his listeners. "Fish are not measured from tip to tip. You must be speaking about birds."

Barnacle Ben frowned.

"Now, look here, mates," he growled. "I reckon I know what I am talking about. These here were flying fish and had wings." New York Journal.

Why They Were Generous

By M. MONROE JAMES.

Copyright, 1908, by American Press Association.

In 19— I was invited to make a Memorial day address in my native town of Eastport. When the exercises were over I wandered among the tombs, watching the friends who were bestowing fragrant tokens of remembrance over the ashes of their dead.

I was standing beside a grave which was literally covered with choice flowers when my friend C. Johnst me.

"Those people are generous," I said, pointing to the flower strewn grave and indicating a gentleman and lady who had just left it.

"They have reason to be," he answered.

That evening he told me the story:

For a time it was difficult to guess which of the rivals for the hand of Cora Dixon would carry off the prize, for she seemed equally gracious to Fred Nevius and Geoffrey Burns.

There was one intensely interested spectator, who, had the question been left for her decision, would have settled it easily. To Cora's mother money was the key to all things desirable, and as Burns had an abundance of the commodity, while Nevius was but indifferently provided, she wondered at her daughter's indecision.

But Cora was unlike her mother, and when the supreme test came to her she did not let the superior financial advantages of one lover outweigh the fact that her heart had gone into the keeping of the other.

Scarcely had the story of Fred's good fortune become known when the town was startled by strange news. The lover had forged his employer's name and had fled.

While the matter was being discussed elsewhere Cora was reading with tear wet eyes and agony of soul a letter from her accused lover:

Dear Cora—When you get this I shall be far away, where I do not know. Fate is against me; but, as there is a God in heaven, I did not do the thing they charge against me. I shall love you always, but of course you are free from any promise to me. Unless I can clear my name I shall never return. I trust you will believe me, though I suspect the world will not. God bless you. Goodby! Your unhappy FRED.

The story was this: A check presumably drawn by Samuel Blake, his uncle and employer, was presented by the young man at the bank and cashed. Mr. Blake declared the check a forgery. Fred said it was received in a letter which stated it was a gift. Unfortunately the letter could not be produced. With an indignant denial he paid back the money and demanded to know if his uncle intended to prosecute. Receiving a negative reply, he left the store and, packing his belongings, left town without notifying any one of his destination.

As Cora faced the situation she saw that, as he had said, his explanation would not be accepted. She was worldly wise enough to know that, notwithstanding the maxim of the law to the contrary, public opinion is apt to adjudge an accused man guilty unless he can show his innocence. Her cheeks tingled as she thought of the covert sneers about that gift. Oh, if he had only kept that letter!

But what did it all matter? She knew he was innocent. Whatever the world might say, that was her verdict.

This verdict she announced with quiet emphasis whenever the matter came to her attention, but she sadly saw that few stood with her; hence it did her a world of good to receive a note from Geoffrey Burns announcing his faith in her friend.

As time wore on Cora, bearing the double burden of her own desolation and her lover's shame, saw, with an added pang, how quickly the world forgets. Fred Nevius had been the idol of the social circle in which they had moved. Now he was as one who had never been.

So went a year. Then came an event which broke somewhat the dreary tenor of her life. David Nelson, a fellow employee, on his dying bed made a statement which wiped the blot from Fred's name. He said he sent the letter and check as an April fool jest, expecting to tell Fred of it before he could present it at the bank. When he saw it was likely to get him into trouble he became alarmed and held his peace.

Shortly after this disclosure Burns called on Cora and congratulated her on the clearing of her lover's name.

"I cannot thank you enough for your loyalty to Fred," she said gratefully.

"He was my friend, too," he answered.

Then he told her of having sent Nelson's confession to the papers of the large cities with the hope that the innocent man might see it.

Somehow after this it seemed the most natural thing for Burns to call now and then. So went another year.

Meanwhile a report came to Eastport that Nevius was dead. When Burns next called Cora questioned him about it.

"Yes, I have heard it," he answered evasively.

"Do you know what foundation it has?"

"There does not seem to be much that can be called foundation."

"Then you don't think it is true?"

He hesitated, dreading to give her the direct answer, which must come now.

"You don't think it is true?" she asked again.

"I fear it is," he said at last. Then he told her of a railroad wreck in a western state in which a young man answering Fred's description had been killed. On his linen they found the word Nevius. He told her also that he and Mr. Blake had put personals in the city papers all over the country, making inquiry for the missing man, but months had gone by and they had heard nothing.

"My heart says no," she replied only when he had finished.

Love cannot remain hidden. When Cora chose Fred Nevius, Burns had put his love away. But now, believing his rival dead, it had come back in greater volume. And so, though she ever put him aside, he sued persistently for her hand.

One day she told him if he would put like inquiries for Nevius in the papers again and in six months no tidings came she would give him an answer.

When the time was past and he falteringly reminded her of it she said: "Mr. Burns, you have been a true friend to me when such were very few. I respect you, honor you, but the love which you deserve is not mine to give. Living or dead, Fred Nevius still has my heart."

"I will be content if you will but say yes," he urged.

And thus the compact was made.

Now that it was settled Burns begged for an early marriage, and, being abetted by Mrs. Dixon, Cora consented. Listlessly she did it as if it mattered not to her, as indeed it did not.

So in the days after Burns noted the same apathetic agreement with every suggestion from her mother or herself. It cut him to the heart, for, though counting it earth's choicest blessing to have her by his side on any terms, he could not escape the conviction that he was requiring too great a sacrifice of her.

One day when she was more than usually distrait he offered to release her. She told him that, while she could not give him what his truth and devotion deserved, she would be true to him if such was his desire.

"It is my heart's dearest wish," he answered fervently. "And love like mine must have its reward by and by. I will be patient."

Deeply touched, even more by his tone than the words, she answered gently, "Geoffrey, I wish I might do more, but all that I can give shall be yours."

After this for his sake she strove to bring back some of her old time cheerfulness. And when she succeeded, as in part she sometimes did, his happy face paid her for the struggle. But when alone in her room, where she could be herself, her sore heart cried out against the fate which forced this hollow life upon her.

On the evening of the day before that set for her wedding she was sitting in a rustic chair on the lawn. Wrapped in the contemplation of her strange position, she did not know that a man was approaching her until he had called her name. As she turned the face of Fred Nevius, full of a hungry longing, met hers.

With a little cry of gladness she sprang up, and the next moment his arms were about her. How long they remained thus they could not have told; when they saw the grave eyes of Geoffrey Burns, not in anger, but full of unutterable sadness, resting on them.

Tearing herself from Nevius' clasp, Cora went to Burns and put her hand upon his arm.

"Forgive me, Geoffrey," she said humbly. "Forgive me, I forgot." Then, turning to Fred, she added, "Tomorrow night I am to be his wife."

Nevius recoiled as if she had struck him and, like one dazed, stood, with a dumb misery on his ashen face, looking from one to the other. At last he broke the painful silence.

"Great God," he cried passionately, "did ever a man have such bitter fate? On a scrap of paper a few days ago I saw an account of the cruel jest which ruined my life. I hurried home, hoping to find what evil fortune had snatched from me. I thought I had, but, oh, my God!"— His words ended with a wail of despair, and, turning, he staggered away like one who had lost all hope.

Burns, watching them, saw that while Cora still kept her hand upon his arm her eyes followed the retreating form, and all her heart went with them.

* * * * * * * *

Impatiently the guests, sitting in Mrs. Dixon's parlor, waited the coming of the bridal party. The groom had been with Cora fully half an hour, and the clock had announced the hour for the ceremony more than that long ago.

Presently it was whispered they were coming. The organist made ready, touching the bridal chords. The clergyman took his place. All eyes turned on the door saw Geoffrey Burns come in alone.

The astonishment of the assembled company found expression in one smothered murmur. Then all grew silent as the chamber of death as they saw Burns was about to speak.

With a mighty effort to be calm, he began: "Friends, there will be no wedding tonight. I had thought that this hour would crown my life with the fulfillment of its fondest hope, but God wills otherwise. My love for Cora Dixon has not altered one jot, and she stands ready to make good her promise to be my wife. But he whom God hath joined to her is now returned, and, though it leaves my life a barren waste, I have released her from her vow."

Shortly after Fred and Cora were quietly married. And the first news they had of the noble man whose sacrifice had made their union possible was that he had been killed in Cuba, and in his will he had left his property to Cora.

SIDE BONES IN DRAFTERS.

Cartilage Above the Heel Counts Against Heavy Horses.

Look out for side bones on the draft horse, says George McKerrow, a Wisconsin breeder. Foreign buyers have been more particular than Americans on the question of side bones, and it is only a few years since some of our best judges in America have been looking out for side bones at all.

It is said that only a few years ago a judge who has considerable reputation as a horseman in this country was judging at a western state fair. An exhibitor whose horse had been turned down to second place objected that the judge had put the first prize upon a horse with side bones, and it is said that the judge went over to the first prize horse and began to feel along his ribs, and he said, "This horse has no side bones." I saw another judge who was called down in the same way by placing the first prize on a horse that had side bones, and he went to feeling for the splints just below the knee on the inside of the leg, and he found one.

The side bone is just above the heel of the horse. It is a mere cartilage. It is put into the heel, we believe, to give springiness, to save inflammation there when the horse works and travels. Now, on low heels and especially on heavy horses, they put a good deal of weight on the heels; they get feverish there and inflammation sets in. These cartilages harden and become bone in the effort of nature to mend up the little strain or make good the work of inflammation there, and when they are bony and hard you have a horse that to some extent will get sore as he works. You can see it in the gait, and you can find it when you take hold of those cartilages and try to move them.

Do not confound this side bone with a ringbone or a partial ringbone. Ringbone is supposed to go clear around, though not always. I have seen people confound a side bone with a ringbone.

Another thing I should have mentioned in relation to this is the hock joint. It is the joint that throws out three-quarters of the troubles on the limbs of our horses. If it is loosely made, the chances are there is a sprain, and nature in mending that sprain produces what is called a bone spavin. Sometimes we get a blood spavin or it may be an enlargement of those sacs that hold the oil to lubricate the joint, and we usually call it a wind puff, but if comes from a loose joint, as a rule, and a sprain upon the loose joint, and gives us thoroughpin and bog spavin.

ATTRACTIVE CATTLE.

Some Facts About the Value of Dutch Belted Animals.

Not very many pure bred herds of Dutch belted cattle are found anywhere in America, and their appearance at the cattle shows always attracts attention because of the unusual color markings. Each animal possesses the broad white belt about the body presenting the appearance of a blanket. The breed was brought to this country about eighty years ago, and for many years was so rare that herds were exhibited as a circus attraction. All importations were made many years ago, no new herds having been imported during the last half century.

The Dutch belted cattle have the general qualities of the Holsteins and are inclined to large milk yield. As the herds actually exist, they are probably not equal to several other breeds in average milk yield, but the comparison is hardly fair because there are ten herds of Holsteins, Jerseys or Guernseys to one of the belted, and it is easier to select competitive herds of more popular breeds. Five of the Dutch belted cows were exhibited in the Pan-American dairy test and ranked eighth or ninth in general dairy qualities.

DUKE OF BATONTA.

One of the best practical uses of the pure bred stock is in crossing with other dairy cattle, says the American Cultivator. The grade heifer of part Dutch belted ancestry is pretty sure to be a good animal for dairy purposes. She will possess the characteristic white belt, although ends of body may be red or roan instead of black. She will be a large milk yielder, the quality being good, although not particularly rich in butter fat. She is also likely to be a long lived producer and perhaps a little more hardy than most pure bred stock. The Dutch belted reproduce their qualities with remarkable exactness when crossed with other stock.

The Path of Peace.

A church, no matter where, prints on the back of its program of services these words:

"I will not worry.

"I will not be afraid.

"I will not give way to anger.

"I will not yield to envy, jealousy or hatred.

"I will be kind to every man, woman and child with whom I come in contact.

"I will be cheerful and hopeful.

"I will trust in God and bravely face the future."

Read them again. They are worth while. Cut them out and paste or pin them up where you will see them often. About all there is in life worth striving for is suggested in these few lines.

Houses, lands, bonds, automobiles are fine possessions. But far more precious still to any man, in any station, are the treasures of the mind and soul—composure, courage, cheerfulness, tolerance, kindness, hope and faith in something higher than what the eye see and the hands hold.

ABOUT next week, we'll begin to talk about early Christmas buying. Did you ever reflect that when you did your Christmas shopping just a few days before the great day, that you are actually inflicting suffering about fellow-creatures? No? Well, you are. The clerks in the stores are human, they have to stand on their feet all day, answer hundreds of questions, do much work and withal keep smiling and cheerful and all this is a strain on their nerves. When we begin to urge the matter next week, we will begin to talk about it to a fuller extent and see if we can't induce that hoped for condition when Christmas buying will be spread over several weeks instead of that many days.

Resolutions of Respect.

To the officers and members of White Rose Hive 443:

Your committee to whom was given the sad duty of drafting resolutions of respect to the memory of our late sister, Elota E. Stacks, submit the following.

Whereas, The angel of death has again entered our Hive and taken from us our beloved sister:

Resolved, That while we submit to the inevitable and bow in humble submission to His divine will, we do not the less mourn the untimely death of our worthy sister. There is no fraternity so firmly cemented but that its golden links may be severed by His holy will.

Resolved, That the sincere and heartfelt sympathy of this Hive be extended to the husband and family in the dark hour of bereavement and commend them to the guidance and care of our Heavenly Father who careth for all.

Resolved, That these resolutions be placed on the record book of our Hive, a copy sent to the sorrowing family and that they be published in the Charlevoix papers.

NEW K. OF P. CLUB

First Steps Towards its Organization Taken

Committees Have Been Named and Rooms Will be Engaged.

The K. of P. lodge of this city was never in better condition, than it is at the present time. New members are constantly swelling its already large membership and a united effort is being made by its members to make Pine Lake lodge one of the largest and best in the state. Its new rooms are nicely fitted up and make ideal lodge rooms.

The members of Pine Lake lodge owe many thanks to G. W. Priest, our local photographer, for the interest he has shown in assembling together the photographs of seventy-five members of the order. The photographs are enclosed in a large oak frame and is a gift that the members of the lodge are proud to exhibit.

The members of the lodge will conduct dancing parties at frequent intervals during the winter. The next one being on the evening of December 8.

THEATRICAL

Save a date for the play which is to be given for the Athletic association.

The Charlevoix Athletic Association will give an entertainment at the Charlevoix Theatre, on Wednesday evening, December 16, 1908, which will consist practically two plays. The first will be "A box of Monkeys," which will have two scenes. The second play will be "A Christmas Chime", of one scene. Remember the date, and also that the proceeds will go to the Athletic Association. Come and see a "box of monkeys" mixed with a "Christmas Chime." Remember the date Charlevoix Opera House, Wednesday evening, December 16.

BOUNDARY LINE

Dispute Between Michigan and Wisconsin Again Brought up

New Constitution Says the Matter Will Probably go to Court.

The adoption of the new constitution for the state carries with it an interesting implication as to the boundary line of the northern peninsula, separating it from Wisconsin. In the first section of article one practically the only change made was the insertion of the word Island Lake "to make certain," it was stated in the explanation to the voters, "what is meant by the head waters of the waters of the Montreal river."

As a matter of fact, the insertion of the name Island Lake will probably operate to protect the interests of the state in the disputed section lying near the border line which Michigan claims has been illegally held by Wisconsin for many years.

The Michigan claim is that the government surveyor, in 1841, made a mistake in laying the boundary lines. The line was supposed to run from the "headwaters of the Montreal river." But the river has two branches and the claim is made that Captain Crain, the government surveyor, went to the wrong branch.

The insertion of the name Island Lake, in the Michigan constitution, defining the boundries of the state, fixes, for this state, the headwaters of the Montreal and if it is supported by the courts will settle the boundry question finally.

This would give Michigan a tract of about seventy square miles, which has been held by and considered a part of Wisconsin since the government surveys. It includes some valuable iron properties and the town of Hurley, Wis.

Whether the Michigan claims can be supported or not remains to be seen. The legislature of 1907 directed the attorney-general to have a survey of the boundary line made and this has been carried out by Prof. J. B. Davis of the University of Michigan. Just what it shows has not been divulged, but will be announced to the legislature in January.

Wisconsin will undoubtedly dispute Michigan's claims and the matter will probably reach the United States supreme court before it is finally settled.

Has Michigan actually been deprived of a portion of valuable territory all this time? And if so, will the supreme court interfere now and disturb the long established and accepted boundary line between the two sovereign states? These are questions that the situation excites and that are aroused by the two words inserted in the new constitution."

C. H. S. NOTES.

Arrangements have been made for a spelling contest between Boyne City high school and Charlevoix high school, beginning next week. Monday morning a list of twenty-five words will be mailed from Boyne City to be used on Wednesday at the same time by both schools. This list will be made from the words misspelled in best and English papers during this week. Next week Charlevoix will prepare a list from words misspelled and mail it to Boyne City and this list will be used by both schools. The papers each week will be carefully graded and marked and at the end of each month the the average will be announced. Here's to Charlevoix! May she win.

Harbor Springs high school and Charlevoix will debate the question; resolved "That the railroads of the United States should be owned and operated by the Federal Government." The date has not been fixed yet.

Superintendent Woodley received a letter this week from the U. of M. announcing that the high school was continued on the list of accredited schools.

BUY THOROUGHBRED STALLION

Messrs. White and Walker Believed Better Horse are Needed.

Fred White and Richard Walker who live southeast of Charlevoix, recently bought Highland Dick, a thoroughbred Englishshire stallion of Joseph Mino of West Branch. The stallion was on exhibition at East Jordan during the fair and the need of thoroughbred stock in this section prompted Messrs. White and Walker in making the purchase. Highland Dick is a fine thoroughbred animal and will be kept at the farm of Mr. White.

Edward Clancy, an employe in the store of the Julius Campbell Co. of Traverse City, was badly injured around the head last Saturday and barely escaped having his head crushed to a pulp through an accident on a freight elevator. The young man was going to the third floor of the establishment, when he discovered he had forgotten a brush which he used in sweeping. He looked up to see what floor he was near, and being on the edge of the platform, his head was caught between two beams. By a mighty push with his arms he pulled his head out from where it was caught. He had a great deal of hair scraped from the top of his head and his jaw and neck badly bruised.

Orrin Harris, who escaped from the county jail at Bellaire October 7, has been arrested in Kalamazoo and brought back to Bellaire by Sheriff Kittle to serve the nineteen days of his unexpired sentence. Harris was arrested and pleaded guilty to stealing a diamond pin in Mancelona and drew a thirty-day sentence to be expiated at the county jail. After being in eleven days he had an opportunity to get away and availed himself of it. After he serves the balance of this sentence he will be arrested for breaking jail, and, if convicted, will receive an indeterminate sentence of one to five years.

A twenty pound trout was speared in the river at Bellaire recently. The person who did the spearing claimed that he had no idea the fish was a trout until after it was taken from the water.

Peter Peterson, a young fellow sowing his wild oats, stole $200 from a meat market at Big Rapids and started out to see the world. He went to Mancelona and made himself a "jolly good fellow" with a bunch who are always looking for a soft mark and spent his money like a "drunken sailor." Deputy Sheriff Sherman received a telegram to arrest Peterson, which was done and Sheriff Brower of Big Rapids came up and took his prisoner home. Peterson had just 10c when arrested.

The jury had been locked up for hours. At last the officer of the court was instructed to order refreshments. "Shall I order twelve dinners?" he asked of the foreman. "Make it eleven dinners and a bale of hay," replied the weary foreman. "We have an ass here."—Exchange.

The largest of the barns at the Antrim County Home, known as the new barn, burned last Thursday afternoon. The structure was in flames when first noticed, but Keeper S. W. Westbrook by quick work was able to get out one team. It was not safe to re-enter, however, and a horse and a yearling heifer were lost. There were 300 bushels of potatoes, 400 bushels of rye, oats wheat and corn and seven tons of hay in the barn. The building was insured for $1,500, which has been paid.

Real Story of the Russian Empress

Kellogg Durland, who has spent many months in Russia, is writing for Woman's Home Companion the life story of the Russian Empress. In the December number of that magazine he writes:

"When a certain Count Tolstoy was minister of Public Instruction he once appealed to the Empress to aid him in extending the educational advantages of the empire to the girls and young women of the country. (I have Count Tolstoy's own permission to relate this incident.)

"The Tsaritsa listened to the minister attentively as he set forth the needs of Russia in this direction, and when he had concluded, she replied that she thought all young girls should be taught to sew, to care for their homes, in short to become helpful wives and good mothers, but as for granting them the privileges of so-called 'higher education,' knowledge of history, philosophy and the sciences—to this she was entirely opposed, 'because these studies, when offered to women, only resulted in such terrible times as Russia is now passing through.'

"This, surely, is a remarkable tribute to the women of Russia—the Tsaritsa holding them responsible for the great movement toward liberty as a result of their education and culture!"

HIGHWAYS ARE MAINTAINED

ation on road work, the passing on it by a committee of experts, and its distribution throughout the world.

The ultimate benefits of so far-reaching a move cannot now be estimated, but the world will some day carry a heavy debt of gratitude to the government whose highway representatives conceived the thought of such a bureau, and brought to its support the delegates of every civilized country on the globe.

No better macadam roads are built in France than can be and are built in this country; but the maintaining of these roads is attended to with the utmost care, and for that reason the highways are invariably in such splendid condition that they excite the envy of American visitors.

When the motor car began to come into use, the teaming interests of the world was strong. They berated the automobile in unmeasured terms; said that it was a menace to the public and to the horse; that it endangered life and limb; in fact advanced every argument against it that from time immemorial has been advanced against the advent of every great invention or civilizing influence.

In the early days of the American Republic, the pack-saddle men fought bitterly against the advent of the wagon. They declared it would make possible the carrying of heavier loads and the consequent ruining of the pack-saddle industry; the wagon men fought the stage coach on the theory that it would facilitate traffic, and throw wagon men out of work; the stage coach men battled against the railroads on the theory that the running of steam cars would drive out the stage coach driver; and each in turn was forced to make way.

The fight of the horse-car men against the trolly car is remembered by all. The claim was then made that 2,000,000 horses would be thrown out of work, and that horse breeders would starve. The trolley is well-nigh universal, and yet more horses are raised each year than the year before and they bring better prices.

The horse interests have ever fought the automobile. There have been thousands of columns of argument published against it, and short sighted men have advocated such heavy taxation against it, that a great and ever growing industry would have been sadly hampered, had half the unwise legislation planned been put into execution.

Now highway experts aided by the motor car interests and by a powerful association of London and it suburbs have turned like the trodden worm and started an attack on the horse.

It was a source of great gratification to the American chairman to be frankly told in both France and England that this nation has stepped ahead of both those nations in the testing of materials for building macadam roads. Various experiments conducted by the Office of Public Roads have developed the fact that it is possible in road building to obtain a better bonded surface by mixing rocks, such as limestone, with silicious rocks, such as granite or sandstone.

Mr. Page was especially impressed by the laws regulating automobile traffic in practically all portions of France and England. Unlike the laws prevailing in nearly every section of this country, the motor car restrictions of those countries are framed for the purpose of stopping reckless driving and the officers responsible for their enforcement are not restricted as are American officials. No speed limit provisions are incorporated in the laws of France or England. If in the judgment of an officer, a motor car driver is reckless even if proceeding at less than eight miles an hour, he is subject to arrest. If on the other hand he is proceeding at express speed on a broad thoroughfare, free from other traffic, and is not endangering the lives or the property of others, he is well with in his rights and may not be interfered with.

CURES CATARRH

The Ivy Drug Store Will Furnish the Medicine Free in Every Case Where They Fail to Cure Catarrh

Neglect or pessimism we believe is the greatest enemy the public have to contend with when applied to the loss or recovery of health. Practically every case of consumption might have been cured if hope had been maintained and proper treatment had been restored to at the first symptom of the disease. Until the advanced stage is reached, consumption is curable. Catarrh is responsible, we believe, for every case of consumption. If is about catarrh we want to talk to you today, incidentally consumption, since the two are so closely allied.

We have a medicine made from the prescription of one of the most successful catarrh specialists known. This medicine has a record of 98 per cent of cures, and we believe it is positively without an equal. We are so satisfied that we are right, that we will supply the medicine, free in every instance where it is used according to directions for a reasonable length of time and fails to cure and give satisfaction in every particular. We want everyone in Charlevoix to try this medicine at our risk. There are no conditions or formality attached to our offer. We put the user under no obligation to us whatever.

The medicine we want you to try is Rexall Mucu-Tone. It is a catarrh remedy that goes direct to the seat of trouble. It is carried by the blood to every part of the system. It seeks out and destroys the germs or parasites which cause catarrh. It purifies and enriches the blood, tones up the mucous cells, soothes and heals the tissues that were ravaged by the catarrhal parasite, and brings about a condition of health and strength that prevents the germs of consumption from ever getting a start. Besides this, Rexall Mucu-Tone is a wonderful appetizer, digestive aid and flesh builder. Its good effects are felt from the very first dose. It is one of the largest and most satisfactory selling medicines that we have ever had anything to do with. We know so much of the great good that it has done that we personally back it up with our reputation and money, which fact should be ample guarantee to satisfy anybody.

Rexall Mucu-Tone comes in two sizes, 50c and $1.00. We urge you to try it. The Ivy Drug Store, A. 43. Fleischer.

A band of workers for public improvement will find no surer way of intrenching themselves with the public than interesting the local press and getting its support. Not only will this give an added strength to the work, but will force upon the indifferent the fact that something is being done that will redound to his benefit and, further, that he should be adding the work by active support. Improvements societies have occasionally issued a small pamphlet at regular or irregular intervals in which progress is recorded, policies outlined and argument made for the support and perpetuation of the work. The expense of these modest publications is fully met by inserting advertisements from the leading business houses. With the local press or a separate publication behind the work there is stability established that will go far toward gaining the confidence of the public.

How to Care For Oriental Rugs.

Oriental rugs require little care, but that little must be intelligent.

The pile of a rug slants from the web, just like the hair of a fur.

Brushing the wrong way is most harmful, irritating, ruffling and untwisting the yarn and forcing dust and dirt into the texture.

Servants should be made to pass the hand back and forth over a rug until the slant of the nap is understood. They should be instructed under pain of dismissal always to sweep with the nap.

Occasionally moisture is necessary to remove fine dust that dims the luster. This is best applied in the form of snow or of damp sawdust that the broom or carpet sweeper removes.

Furniture and shoes are the arch enemies of rugs in the American home. Their sharp edges and corners quickly destroy domestic rugs and try the temper of even fine orientals.

They are most injurious in combination with sand and gravel. Let a sharp flint pebble be ground in by a nail studded heel, and damage is inevitable. Injuries should be carefully repaired. A stitch in time saves the rug.

How to Roast a Duck.

For a small Thanksgiving dinner ducklings may be substituted for a turkey. Select those whose bills and legs are smooth and yellow. For easy plucking put the ducks in a wash boiler in which there is boiling water. Place them on a couple of blocks of wood which have been put in the boiler for that purpose. Let them steam for a few minutes, when their feathers can be plucked as easily as those of a chicken.

Draw and singe the ducks, wipe them inside and out with a damp cloth, rub well with pepper and salt and fill them with the following dressing:

Two cupfuls of bread crumbs, a minced onion that has been fried in butter, a tablespoonful of butter and half a cupful of thick stewed tomatoes. Baste every few minutes and bake a rich brown. Serve with giblet sauce colored with tomato juice.

Town Improvement Factor.

Environment is coming more and more to be considered a pronounced factor of education—the education that makes for character. If towns, villages and individual homes have an unkempt, shiftless, down-at-the-heel air, the passerby is justified in setting down the inhabitants as shiftless, and the generation that grows up amid such surroundings is more than likely to bear their characteristic imprint. Then, too, there is a material side to the question. The value of real estate increases in direct proportion to its possibilities for homemaking. And every local business and calling thrives as the ratio of desirable population increases.

A PAIR OF PUMPS.

By LITTELL M'CLUNG.

Copyright, 1908, by Associated Literary Press.

Dick Preston settled back comfortably, opened a magazine and proceeded to forget the downpour that was drenching Boston. But he had read scarcely half a dozen paragraphs when his gaze was off the printed page and leveled at a mass of auburn hair, daintily coiffured, that showed above the second seat in front.

"Jove!" he murmured. "I'd know that hair in Africa! There's only one head of it this side the pearly gates!"

In another moment the girl moved slightly, displaying against the window a clear, delicate profile. Then she turned itself around, and Dick's gaze was diverted from the incomparable hair to an incomparable pair of brown eyes that opened wide in wonderment at sight of him.

He smiled, the eyes sparkled invitingly and with a bound he was out of his section and two sections closer both auburn hair and brown eyes.

"Hello, Christine!" he exclaimed. "This is a surprise. May I ask—where are you going?"

She extended her hand in friendly greeting.

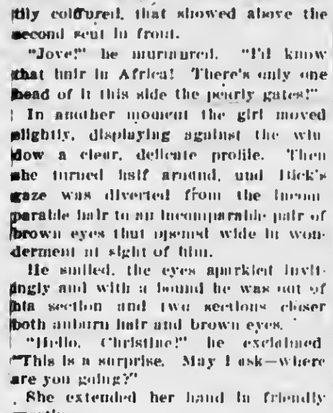
"Dick, dear old chap," she cooed, "it's just as much of a surprise for me seeing you. Where am I going? All the way to Washington to visit an old school chum. How far will I have the pleasure of your society?"

"All the way, if you don't mind," he answered. "I'm going to Washington, too—on business, of course—and I'll be at your service till you arrive in sight of the capitol!"

"To Washington," she repeated. "Well, I'm certainly overjoyed at seeing you."

The young man recoiled instinctively from the coquettish flash of her eyes.

"I'm not so sure about that," he ventured. "It was just a week ago today,



"DICK, MY PUMPS ARE GONE!"

wasn't it, that you turned me down with a chilly shrug?"

Her brows knitted in a puzzled frown, and she tried to look serious.

"Come to think of it, I believe it was," she assented. "But you never can tell," she continued, brightening, "what changes may come over the heart of a maid in a week. If you proposed again, who knows, I might accept you!"

His expression was one of disappointment, not unfinged with resentment.

"Now, Christine, please don't lure me into being foolish again," he pleaded. "You may rest assured that I'm not going to propose to you any more. The agony of once being rejected is sufficient experience for me."

"Don't talk like that, Dick," she coaxed sweetly. "I know perfectly well that you will propose again!"

His eyes opened wide in surprise at this confidence in her own charms.

"Do you?"

"Yes."

"Sure?"

"Dead sure. I'll wager my boots you will!"

They were tremendously smart boots—if paper weight pumps may be called boots—he thought as he glanced at them.

"Then I'm afraid you'll go into Washington stocking footed!" he laughed.

She laughed, too, as she switched the subject. Then he invited her into the diner, and they had dinner together. When the porter came to make up her berth Dick was able to assist in storing away grips, parasol and other accessories.

"Good night, Dick," she called cheerily as her head disappeared between the curtains. "I'll be out early in the morning."

"All right. See that you are, and we'll take breakfast together," he called back.

Next morning he was awakened by a vagrant beam of sunlight that broke through a crack in the curtain and across his pillow. He threw up the shade and looked out. The train was gliding out of the southern suburbs of Baltimore at a lively clip.

"Well, I've got plenty of time," he thought, "for it's an hour yet to Washington."

He donned his clothes leisurely, wondering if she were up. Then he made his way to the dressing room and after shaving started back to his section. Just as he passed her berth he heard his name called in anxious tones.

"Dick, oh, Dick!"

He stopped.

"Dick," urged the voice, "come closer, I've got something dreadful to tell you!"

His heart thumped as he sidled up to the curtains. Her lips must have touch his ear almost, for he felt her breath on his cheek.

"Dick, my pumps are gone!"

Though her tone was tragic, he could hardly restrain a laugh.

"Nonsense," he replied through the slight aperture in the curtains, "I guess they're under the berth where the porter put them after polishing them."

"No, they're not," she declared. "The porter gave them to me a moment ago and I was just admiring them when they both slid out of the window! Oh, what shall I do?"

Try as he might, Dick couldn't keep back a chuckle.

"Well, I've certainly won that bet, Christine!" he said with conviction.

"That bet?" she repeated incredulously. "What on earth are you talking about?"

"You know well enough," he rejoined. "I said you'd go stocking footed into Washington before I proposed again!"

An impatient rustle behind the curtains followed this sally.

"This is no occasion for clever remarks, Dick," she observed coldly. "Maybe you don't realize it, but I'm in a very embarrassing predicament. I can't get out of the berth without any shoes!"

There was silence for a second. Then her tone was softer.

"Oh, Dick, what shall I do? Can't you help me?"

"Sure! I might lend you a pair of mine," he suggested, the smile still lurking on his lips. "They're not so abnormally large."

"Don't be absurd," she protested. "Think of something practical—if you can. There's no time to lose—we're going into Washington now!"

"Don't get nervous, Christine," he cautioned, serious now. "It is early yet, and you can remain in the berth for an hour or so. When we get into the station, I'll go out and buy you another pair of shoes."

"Will you?"

"Certainly."

"Oh, Dick, I could kiss you for it!"

"Don't get flirtatious again," he said sharply. "Just tell me the size of your slippers."

"Three," she answered.

"The last?"

"Double A."

"All right," he commented, jotting down the numbers, "if you'll keep calm for half an hour I'll return with something or other in the line of boots!"

Then he hurried out, for already the train was in the station. In less than ten minutes he was talking to a clerk in a ladies' shoe shop on Pennsylvania avenue.

"I want the neatest, daintiest pair of pumps you've got in the house," he declared. "Size three, last double A."

"What color?" asked the salesman.

For a second Dick was stumped. Then he remembered that the lost pumps he had been fortunate enough to get a glimpse of were brown, a light, delicate brown.

"Brown," he said, "prettiest shade of brown you've got. I'll leave it to you."

The salesman smiled. "All right," he replied. "I've got something that will suit you, I'm sure."

"Don't reckon he's been married more than a week," the man thought as he pulled a box off the shelves and opened it.

Dick surveyed the pumps. Neat, stylish and pretty they surely were, if he was any judge.

"I'll take them," he said."

In another ten minutes he thrust a bundle between the curtains of the berth—that he hoped—still contained Christine.

"Here they are," he volunteered.

He heard her tear open the package and toss the paper aside.

"Oh, Dick, they are simply beauties!" she cried. "My, but you are a dear!"

A few minutes later they left the Pullman together.

"Dick," she asked sweetly as he helped her down from the platform, "what can I ever do to repay you?"

The chance, he thought, was now, and he seized it.

"By letting me buy your shoes always, little girl," he pleaded quietly.

"All right, I will, Dick!" she whispered. "For I don't know anybody who knows how better!"

Wanted to Warn Him.

Sir Algernon West tells this story in his "Recollections:" One day the late Sir George Campbell, who had a very strident, loud, rasping voice, called on Sir Algernon, who was then secretary to Mr. Gladstone, to talk over the land question.

After he had been in conversation about three minutes the office keeper appeared, bearing the card of an M. P. who, he said, was very anxious to see Sir Algernon. The latter said he was sorry to be engaged. In another minute he appeared with the card of a well known peer who was most desirous to have a word with him. Again the latter said he was too busy to see him just then. In another minute the man again came in with a huge card saying the lord mayor and sheriffs of London wanted to speak to Sir Algernon West very urgently in the next room.

Sir Algernon apologized to Sir George and went out to such great dignitaries. When he got out of the room the office keeper startled him by saying, "There ain't nobody here, sir, but I was afraid a madman had been shown in to you by mistake, and I wanted to warn you, sir."

The human lungs exhale each day an amount of carbon which if solidified, would equal a lump of coal weighing half a ton.

SWINE ON ALFALFA.

Methods of Various Western Breeders In Feeding This Crop.

Our Colorado people years ago came to the understanding that there is no better forage crop for hogs than alfalfa, says Denver Field and Farm. One man estimates that it takes from one-half to one-third less corn on alfalfa pasture than on a straight grain ration to make a hog ready for market. Many farmers let the hogs run on alfalfa until they are six months old, by which time they reach a weight of seventy five to 125 pounds, feeding just a little grain. Then they feed heavily for about two months and sell the hogs at eight months old weighing 200 to 225 pounds. One farmer who raises about a thousand hogs annually and who in one year sold $11,238 worth of hogs makes a practice of raising his swine on alfalfa pasture until about eight months old, feeding one ear of corn a head daily. He then feeds corn heavily for a month or two and sells at an average weight of 200 to 225 pounds.

Another man feeds all the corn and slop the pigs will clean up, all the while running them on alfalfa pasture, and sells at six to eight months old at weights of 250 to 300 pounds. Another, who raises about a thousand head a year, feeds all the corn the pigs will eat, beginning shortly after weaning and continuing until the pigs are sold at ten to eleven months old, averaging 275 pounds. Still another farmer, from weaning time—two months old—until eight months old feeds the pigs nothing but dry corn on alfalfa pasture, averaging about 3½ pounds a day for each head. At the end of eight months he sells at an average weight of 250 pounds. The quantity of corn fed is about eleven bushels for each head.

While alfalfa pasture has been found very valuable for hogs, the hay as a part ration for winter is scarcely less important. Throughout this whole western region the farmers make a practice of feeding hay to hogs throughout the winter. The hay has been found especially valuable for brood sows before farrowing. When fed during winter only a small ration of grain is necessary to keep the sows in good flesh and in healthy condition. Sows thus fed also farrow good litters of strong, healthy pigs. Many feed the hay by throwing it on the ground in forkfuls or others have made hay racks, in which the hay is placed, from which the hogs can feed like cattle or sheep.

The hay is usually fed dry. The leaves are more readily eaten by the hogs than the stems, and they contain more of the nutritive value of the plant. For these reasons some farmers save the last cutting of hay for the hogs because it is more relished.

Ringing the Hog.

The proper method of ringing hogs' noses is my subject, and with my long years of study and observation I am compelled to say that there is no good, but actual harm in the practice. He is a natural born rooter, and when you take from him this privilege you deprive him of one of his inalienable rights, and he will resent this usurpation of authority by refusing to do well for you. The hog roots for something. As the chalks, marls, bugs, worms, roots, herbs, etc., are appetizers to him, his system calls for these; it is his nature.

Now, I'll tell you how I raise hogs. Have a field of alfalfa for them to run on in the summer and fall and an oat patch for them to graze on during the winter and spring. During wet weather which brings the worms to the surface of the ground, turn into a pen most of the time to keep them from rooting up your alfalfa or oats. I put my hogs in a floored pen sixty days before butchering time and feed them soaked corn. I wash the pens out twice a week and sprinkle with wood ashes. This acts as a disinfectant.—F. J. R. Davenport, before Swine Breeders at Texas Farmers' Congress.

Five Horses Abreast.

Country Gentleman says of the plan shown in the illustration for driving five horses abreast:

"This is the simplest possible solution of the problem. An ordinary single pair of lines is used, attached as you see to the outer two horses, jockey straps being used to control the other horses. In this case two horses are required to lead the other three as you turn toward the right or left. The single pair of lines could be attached in two of the inner horses, standing as a single pair, driving them in the ordinary way, using jockey sticks instead of jockey straps."

Sow something whenever the ground is cleared. Nature abhors bare grounds. Crimson clover is excellent for sowing among all garden crops at the last cultivation. This will live through the winter and may be turned under in spring, thus adding humus and nitrogen to the soil. Rye may be sown for a cover crop, used for spring feed or be turned under as green manure. Rape or turnips may be sown for fall growth and are beneficial to the soil.

"Grandpa, what was Adam's great sin?"

"Adam's great sin, Tommy? Why, parting with his rib, to be sure."

THE LORDLY TURKEY.

How to Prepare the Thanksgiving Bird In Various Ways.

Prepare the turkey by cleansing, washing and trussing. Make a dressing of one quart of Spanish chestnuts, two tablespoonfuls of butter, one teaspoonful of salt and pepper to taste.

Roast or boil the chestnuts. If you roast them do not let them burn. Peel, mash and chop them. Work in the butter and seasoning and stuff the turkey as you would with bread dressing.

Of course you could substitute native chestnuts for the Spanish, boiling and peeling them, but the time required to get out enough meat to fill a turkey would seem to put the substitute out of the question, says the Chicago Tribune.

Boned Turkey.—With a narrow, keen knife take the bones out of a raw turkey. Follow one bone until you have loosened it along its length, keeping the blade close to it. Cut the nearest joint and pull it out, with the tendons attached to it. Then go on to the next.

Patience and dexterity will accomplish the task more easily than you imagine. Now fill the spaces left by the bones with a good forcemeat seasoned to taste. Sausage and mushrooms may be worked to advantage into this forcemeat with bread crumbs and mashed boiled chestnuts. Sew it up in mosquito netting when it is stuffed, retaining some resemblance to the original bird, and braise it upon a bed of minced vegetables, basting with good stock and keeping it covered the rest of the time.

Put under a light weight while warm and do not undo the cloth until the next day. Practice on a chicken before undertaking a turkey.

Boning knives can be procured, which make the tedious process easier.

Turkey and Sausage Scallop.—Butter a pudding dish and fill with alternate layers of cold minced turkey and cooked minced and cold sausage meat, seasoning slightly as you go. The sausage will supply nearly all the seasoning you wish.

Pour in as much gravy or weak stock as the dish will hold. Let it soak in for a few minutes and cover with a mush of bread crumbs, peppered, salted and soaked in cream or milk, then beaten smooth with an egg and a tablespoonful of butter melted. It should be half an inch thick.

Cover and bake for half an hour, then uncover and brown. Serve at once, as the crust soon falls.

Hashed Turkey.—Heat in a saucepan the carcass and stuffing with water enough to cover it two inches deep. Cook slowly for two hours, strain and season with onion juice, chopped parsley, pepper and salt. Cut the meat into small dice and half a can of mushrooms into quarters and stir into the sauce. Heat to scalding, add the juice of half a lemon and serve.

A Bad Spell or Two.

Here is a paragraph in which many of the words have been spelled incorrectly. Can you find the words in which errors occur and respell them correctly?

The mind of man naturally hates everything that looks like a restraint upon it and is apt to fancy itself under a sort of confinement when the sight is pent up in a narrow compass and shortened on every side by the near bourhood of walls and mountens. On the contrary, a spacious horizon is an image of liberty, where the eye has room to rainge abroad, to expashiate at large on the immensity of its views and to loose itself amidst the variety of objects that offer themselves to its observation. Such wide and undetermined prospects are as pleasing to the fancy as the speculation of eternity or infinitude is to the understanding.—New York Mail.

Courier Grange Column

Wilson Grange No. 719

Wilson grange met in regular session, Saturday evening, November 28. Opened in due form.

In the business session it was decided to grade and gravel a turn around in front of the hall.

No further business of importance was transacted and recess was declared. The lecturer's program was as follows:

Recitation, "We've always been provided for," Anna Warden

Instrumental music, George Barley

Debate: Resolved, That financial advantages should not be used to induce people to join the grange. Decision in favor of the negative. Discussion, "To what extent and how are we benefitted by the grange?" led by Brother Korthase of Deer Lake grange.

Song, "When my Golden Hair has Turned to Silver Gray," Brother Korthase.

Reading, "The man sociable," Brother Korthase.

Grange was closed in form. It was decided to hold an election the first meeting in December, if there is a good attendance, and at the last one if we do not. In this way we have two chances for a large attendance on election night.

The next meeting will be held December 12. Visitors always welcome of course.

South Arm Grange No. 815.

South Arm Grange met November 28, in regular meeting. The meeting was called to order by the worthy overseer, the worthy master not having arrived on time. Bro. Robert Carson and Arthur Blair were initiated in the third and fourth degrees.

The lecturer's hour consisted of songs and questions for discussion, which called forth numerous short speeches from the members.

In the question, "What has been your best money making crop this year?" The worthy master's reply was the most remarkable, and led all the others in the amount of money made. His best crop was ginseng. From a piece of ground 21 feet square, he sold $223.00 worth of roots dried and ready for market, $15.00 worth of young plants and $65.00 worth of seed. The worthy master has been a successful ginseng grower for several years. The contest supper will be served at the next meeting.

The grange voted to re-organize the degree team. Willard Robinson, Anna Murphy and Ralph Rauney were appointed as a committee to re-organize the team and report next meeting. The lecturer read the program for the next meeting.

CHICAGO STOCK SHOW

Is Educational in its Nature, Aims, Methods and Results.

It should be understood that the purpose of the International Live Stock Exposition, which will be in session from November 28 to December 10, is the improvement of the live stock of the nation. It is educational in its nature, aims, methods and results. It brings together annually from 6500 to 10,000 of the world's choicest animals, to be judged in upwards of 400 classes in competition for over 2,000 cash premiums aggregating more than $75,000, besides other numerous valuable prizes, trophies, medals of honor, etc., and holds constant business sessions during the week composed of the foremost live stock representatives of the world, also a series of brilliant evening horse fairs and displays of premium live stock in the arena, with music and special features, all for the purpose of instructing the eye and the mind of the producer of live stock to the importance and necessity of better methods and the greater profits to be derived from raising the better kinds of farm animals, thus expanding and improving the industry throughout the nation, and increasing greatly its agricultureal prosperity. In short, it is a vast object lesson, intended for the improvement of the live stock of the United States, the upbuilding of public confidence in the health and excellence of American animals and meats, and the creation of a better demand for them at home and abroad.

ROOT KNOT AND WILT.

Rotation of Crops For Controlling Them In Cotton Growing.

By W. A. ORTON, Bureau of Plant Industry, Washington.

A rotation of crops must be worked out in detail for each farm to fit its particular needs. The essential principles to be observed are as follows:

First.—To use crops immune to root knot in order to starve out the pest.

ROOT KNOT ON COTTON PLANT.

Second. To build up the fertility of the soil and especially to increase the amount of organic matter or humus.

Third.—To secure an adequate income during each year of the rotation.

Fourth.—To keep the land free from weeds that are liable to root knot.

A list of the crops not liable to root knot which can be used in such rotations follows: Corn, winter oats, rye, wheat, crab grass, Iron cowpea, velvet bean, peanut, beggarweed.

Some of the crops susceptible to nematodes and therefore to be avoided in rotations for root knot are cowpeas (except Iron), alfalfa, vetch, soy beans, clover, sugar cane, tomatoes, okra, cucumbers, cantaloupes, watermelons, celery, beans, sweet potatoes, tobacco, potatoes, peaches, figs, mulberries. The Iron cowpea is occasionally slightly affected in Florida, but is practically immune in the cotton belt. Seed of the Iron cowpea containing admixtures of other kinds is dangerous and should be avoided.

Bermuda grass, chufas and summer oats are slightly susceptible, but probably can be used in rotation when root knot is only slightly prevalent. Many weeds are also to be avoided because subject to root knot. The commoner of these are maypop, Indian pointo, saw brier, red root or pigweed (amaranthus) and purslane.

The following treatment is suggested for fields infected with both wilt and root knot:

Beginning in the fall, sow winter oats. These may be cut for hay in May or allowed to ripen. Follow the oats with Iron cowpeas, sown broadcast or, better, in drills, where they can be cultivated once or twice. Cut these peas for hay and plow the land at once for another crop of winter grain.

YOUNG COTTON PLANT DYING FROM WILT.

This may be succeeded by corn, with Iron cowpeas or peanuts between the rows. The third year a wilt resistant variety of cotton may be planted.

Wheat or rye may be substituted for oats and the velvet bean for the Iron cowpea, especially in the more southern districts.

Considerable relief is often obtained by a single year's rotation with oats followed by crab grass or winter oats or rye followed by Iron cowpeas, but not all the nematodes are destroyed. However, it is much more profitable in the long run to practice a three year rotation like that previously described.

Bovine Tuberculosis.

My experience and observations during the past seven years convince me that bovine tuberculosis is a stable disease, that it is very rarely, if ever, communicated from one animal to another while cows are in the pasture unless it be to a suckling calf, and that it is safe to assert that disease will never be permanently removed from dairy herds until more sanitary conditions are introduced into a great majority of the stables where the dairy cow is housed.—Dr. Leonard Pearson, State Veterinarian.

Ban on Objectionable Billboards.

In connection with the crusade for a spotless town waged by officials of Washington for the past few months Major Richard Sylvester, superintendent of police, is going to war on billboards and posters. For several years he has been endeavoring to eliminate certain features of this form of advertising, but has never been successful. He has announced that he will renew his efforts, and it is his hope and belief that the results will be more satisfactory this time. In his annual report to the commissioners he will recommend legislation prohibiting altogether unsightly forms of display advertising or stringent restriction. He believes the law should regulate the sensational, misleading and exciting object lessons portraying the performance of some "blood and thunder" show that deface billboards and add to substantial patronage to the houses that employ them. He also contends that portraits should not be included in the category with lotteries, killings, train wrecks and the attempted portrayal of sensational and emotional beauty shows.

An Unsavory Charity.

In all the cafes and beer halls of Germany a large canister is placed on a table in the center of each establishment. Every time one of the guests lights a fresh cigar he gets up and deposits in the canister the end of the one he has just been smoking. This receptacle is a sort of alms box with a funnel shaped lid, secured by means of a padlock. A charitable association supplies all places of public resort with these boxes for the purpose of collecting odds and ends of tobacco, cigarettes and cigars. The produce of the sale is devoted to the purchase of clothing, which is distributed among poor children at Christmas. The charity is believed to be the most meritorious and insanitary on record.

Common Council Pass Resolutions Looking to this End

FULL TEXT OF THE RESOLUTION

Action Taken at Suggestion of Board of Commerce

Portion to be Taken all That of Township Lying South and West of the City

At the common council meeting last week, a resolution was passed, looking to the enlargement of the city boundaries, by taking into the corporation, all of that portion of the township lying south and west of the city.

This action was taken, at the suggestion and recommendation of the Board of Commerce, who after thoroughly canvassing the situation, decided to ask the council to pass the resolution.

The Board of Supervisors will be asked to add the territory described, to the city, at their January meeting. It may be that at that time, it will be found desirable to take only a portion of the outlaying district into the city, and if so, the supervisors will be asked to act upon only such portion, as they have the right to take in any part of the territory covered in the petition, but cannot add to the territory any lands not covered in the council resolution.

Below we give the resolution, which was passed by a unanimous vote of the aldermen present;

Resolved, By the Common Council of the city of Charlevoix, that the boundaries of the city of Charlevoix, be altered by taking in and including in such city, the following described territory and lands now adjoining said city: Commencing at a point on the shore of Lake Michigan at the intersection of the waters of said lake with the north and south quarter line of section 27, in township 31 north and range 8 west; thence extending southwesterly along the waters of Lake Michigan to the intersection thereof with the south line of township 34 north range 8 west; thence east along said last mentioned line to the north and south quarter line of section 2, township 33 north of range 8 west; thence south along said quarter line to the east and west quarter line of said section 2; thence east along said east and west quarter line of section 2 to the section line between sections one and two of township 33 north of range 8 west; thence north along said last mentioned line to the waters of Pine Lake; thence in a north westerly direction along the waters of Pine Lake to the south corporation line of the city of Charlevoix; thence along said corporation line in a westerly and northerly direction to the place of beginning. The same being all that portion of the present township of Charlevoix lying south and west of the City of Charlevoix, together with all of the northeast quarter of section two, township 33 north of range 8 west.

Resolved, further, That the City of Charlevoix petition the Board of Supervisors of the county of Charlevoix to make such alteration in the boundaries of the city of Charlevoix in accordance with this resolution and pursuant to the provisions of section 2074 of the compiled laws of Michigan.

Resolved, further, That the Mayor of the City of Charlevoix be authorized and empowered and such officer is hereby authorized and empowered for and in behalf of the common council, to make such petition and present same to the Board of Supervisors of the county of Charlevoix at its next session according to the provisions of said section above referred to.

Resolved, further, That the City Clerk of the City of Charlevoix be directed and authorized to certify under the official seal of the city the petition so made, and that the city clerk cause notice of the time and place when the said petition will be presented to said Board of Supervisors for consideration, by publishing the said petition in the Charlevoix Sentinel for at least three weeks immediately preceding the time of the presentation thereof.

WARNER'S MAJORITY

Unofficial Figures Show Show That it was 9,530

According to unofficial figures the complete returns from Michigan show that Fred M. Warner was elected over Lawton T. Hemans of Mason, by a plurality of 9,530, this being 249,430 less than the plurality of William H. Taft.

The figures show Lieutenant Governor Kelley's plurality to have been 133,820. The plurality of the republican presidential electors was 158,690. The new constintion carried by a majority of 113,022.

Reed will continue the interesting talk she has given on her experiences while in Europe. Mrs. R. A. Wright will have charge of the program.

NOVEMBER TERM OF COURT CLOSED

Majority of Cases on Calendar Were Disposed of

NEGRO ASSAULTER SENT TO IONIA

Detroit & Charlevoix Ry. Co. Loose Big Damage Suit

Warren Myers Gets $5,000 Verdict for Injuries Received While Acting as Brakeman Other Court News.

Nearly all the cases on the calendar of the November term of court have been disposed of and Thursday night Judge Mayne discharged the jury. A few chancery cases will be tried at intervals.

The heaviest jail sentence passed out by the judge this term of court was in the case of the People vs Zern Letts, a negro, up for statutory rape. The crime was committed near Thumb Lake. Lett was working on a farm for H. A. Webster and while Mr. and Mrs. Webster were in town on business, their young daughter, who is thirteen years of age, was attacked by Lett and the offense committed, for which he will serve time. The court sentenced him to the state reformatory at Ionia for not less then one year nor more than ten with recommendation that he serve five years.

Monday and Tuesday the court's tention was occupied by the case of Warren Myers vs The Detroit & Charlevoix Ry. company. On the 22 day of May last, Myers, who was a brakeman on this road, was caught by a wire while on the front end of a moving box car, and dragged rapidly backwards until he came in contact with the brake staff on the rear of the car, when the wire was broken, Myers being crushed between the wire and the brake staff, until he was unable to rise. Three of his ribs were broken and one sustained a double fracture. The accident occurred at Alba. Mr. Myers was represented by Clink & Fitch of East Jordan and recovered a verdict of $5000.

Guy McCain was continued on parole with orders to report to Sheriff McWain monthly, as was also Leo Polinski who is charged with statutory rape.

Ben Williams, up for passing forged papers, was put under probation with Hon. L. F. Knowles as probation officer.

In the case of Emily J. Whiteford vs the Village of East Jordan, a verdict was given the plaintiff for $500. On the second day of November, 1907, the plaintiff fell on a defective side walk in East Jordan and brought suit for damage with the above result.

Divorces were granted in the following cases. Barnett vs Barnett, Danforth vs Danforth, Andrews vs Andrews, Densmore vs Densmore and Boak vs Boak.

MILLIONS FOR BARRELS

Industry in Which Northern Michigan is Third

Figures Disclose an Interesting Movement in the Industry

The farmer with his potatoes and his apples, the miller with his flour and meal, the hardware man with his nails, the cement manufacturer, and the many users of the faithful slack barrels, that combination of staves, hoops and heading, which is not intended to hold water or something stronger in fluid form, used forest products last year having the enormous value of $15,800,234.

The average man would little suspect the humble barrels take so important a part in the expense accounts of the American farmer and manufacturer, yet figures compiled by the census in co-operation with the United States forest service developed this interesting truth. Moreover, statistics taken directly from reports from 950 cooperage mills in all parts of the United States show an increase of $1,560,688, or 11 per cent, in the value of last year's product over that of the previous year.

In distinct contrast to tight cooperage stock, which in the main requires oak timber for its raw material, slack cooperage stock, particularly staves and heading, utilized in greater or less degree most of the commercially important trees in the country, and for this reason its manufacture was far more widely distributed than in the case with tight cooperage stock. Twenty-one species of wood were contributed to the total slack stave production last year. Nearly two-thirds of the output, however, was manufactured from the four species, red gum, pine, elm and beech, in the order named.

The figures disclose an interesting movement in the industry in the substitution of less expensive woods for those which for many years were drawn upon most heavily for slack stave material, but which, owing to growing scarcity and advancing cost, are rapidly being displaced. In 1906 elm staves were manufactured in larger quantities than those from any other wood, and constituted nearly one-fourth of the total production for that year, with pine and red gum occupying second and third places, respectively. Last year gum jumped to first place, pine to second, while elm, with a falling off of 36 per cent in production, dropped to third place. Beech, maple, spruce, chestnut and ash followed in the order named.

While slack stave and heading production was reported last year from partically all the states engaged in the manufacture of lumber, a considerable percentage of the stock, in fact, being turned out as a by-product of lumber, the industry was to an extent localized. The five states of Pennsylvania, Missouri, Michigan, Arkansas and Virginia, in the order named, contributed 56.8 per cent of the total production. The distribution of the industry of hoop manufacture is more limited than that of staves and heading, and is due primarily to the fact that this commodity is made chiefly from elm timber. Ohio led in the hoops manufactured, closely followed by Indiana, the output of these two states forming 67.3 per cent of the total production.

AFTER SERGEANT AT ARMS

Representative A. J. Stroud Will Probably Land the Job.

A Lansing dispatch says:

"Alonzo J. Stroud of Horton Bay, representative in the legislature in 1905 and 1907 from the Charlevoix district, will probably be a candidate for the office of sergeant-at-arms of the next house."

Mr. Stroud is a civil war veteran. He has been sheriff and judge of probate of this county and was an efficient, popular member of the legislature. For these reasons it is said that his candidacy has been greeted with approval by many members and it is likely he will defeat W. H. Quilliams, who held the position last session, especially as Mr. Stroud will have the advantage of the act requiring that veterans be given the preference in dealing out state jobs.

UNDER CIVIL SERVICE

All Fourth-class Postmasters Included in Change

Present Appointees to Hold Their Offices During Term.

All fourth class postmasters in the states east of the Mississippi river and north of the Ohio river were Tuesday placed in the classified service by an executive order of the president. Hereafter all appointees to fourth class postmasterships in those states must undergo civil service examination. Postmasters now holding office will not need to take the examinations. This applies to Maine, New Hampshire, Vermont, Massachusetts, Rhode Island, Connecticut, New York, New Jersey, Pennsylvania, Ohio, Indiana, Illinois, Wisconsin and Michigan.

The order, though promulgated Tuesday, was signed Monday. Over 15,000 fourth-class postmasters are affected by the order, distributed by states as follows: Maine, 893; New Hampshire, 414; Vermont, 395; Massachusetts, 550; Rhode Island, 100; Connecticut, 487; New York, 2,301; New Jersey, 636; Pennsylvania, 3,388; Ohio, 1,603; Indiana, 1,084; Illinois, 1,505; Wisconsin, 1,008; and Michigan, 1,234.

A fourth class postoffice is one where the annual receipts do not exceed $1,000 and the postmaster is recompensed by a fixed percentage on all stamps cancelled in his office. In the United States there are 51,312 fourth-class postoffices, and the total of all classes is 61,158.

The total number of postoffices in Charlevoix county is twelve. Charlevoix and Boyne City officers are in the second class. East Jordan office is in the third class. The fourth-class offices are Hoyne Falls, Walloon Lake, Clarion, St. James, Norwood, Bay Shore, Thumb Lake and Springvale. There are fifteen rural free delivery routes in the county, five at East Jordan, four at Boyne City, one at Bay Shore, one at Hoyne Falls and four at Charlevoix.

Of the postmasters in the county, the only ones not affected by the new ruling are D. F. Meech of Charlevoix, R. E. Newville of Boyne City, and F. A. Kenyon of East Jordan.

Previous to this new order, the term of the fourth-class postmaster was supposed to be four years, but it often depended on the political whim.

MUST OBEY THE LAW

Such is the Order Given Out to Liquor Dealers.

Lid to be Clapped Down Tight Throughout Entire County.

At the last term of court orders were given the sheriff to notify all saloon keepers in Charlevoix county that the law regulating the sale of intoxicating liquors must be strictly lived up to in the future.

In some towns in this county the law has not been enforced, and liquor has been sold on Sundays, holidays and before and after hours set for the opening and closing of the booze dispensaries. This order also stops the usual practice of "cleaning out" on Sunday mornings. Hereafter any saloon keeper who allows his refreshment parlors to be opened for any cause other than the protection of his property will be prosecuted.

All people interested in good government will watch the result of the strict enforcement of the law.

HOG CHOLERA NOW PREVALENT

Swine in Southern Counties are Badly Affected

VIGOROUS MEASURES ARE ADOPTED

To Check the Spread of the Disease in State

Outbreak of Plague will Cause Five Times Loss Occasioned by Cattle Infection.

Hog cholera will cause five times the damage to the live stock interests of the state of Michigan this year, than the epidemic of foot and mouth disease among cattle will. The disease is now more prevalent among swine than in many years, and the state live stock sanitary board has found it in more than half the counties in the lower portion of the state.

It is still spreading, in spite of the local quarantine regulations, but the near approach of winter is expected to check the plague and the state commission is adopting the most vigorous measures to disinfect farms where the disease has occurred.

A member of the state live stock commission says: "We are finding hog cholera all through the southern part of the state and in some places from half to three-fourths of the swine have been killed, while the general average for the state would be about fifteen per cent."

The direct loss on account of the foot and mouth disease will amount to about $30,000, the damage to the hog-raisers of the state figures up to $150,000. The government now has specialists at work quietly in several portions of the state, assisting the local live stock officials in trying to stamp out the disease.

In several parts of the Thumb district hog cholera has been discovered, one man loosing 200.

The state commission is experimenting with a vaccine against hog cholera and getting good results.

The last of the cattle suspected of having the foot and mouth disease or of having been in contact with the infected animals have been killed.

When it is recalled how rapidly the disease spread in New York and Pennsylvania after being communicated there from Michigan, it would seem marvelous if no further outbreaks of the epidemic are discovered in this state.

For this reason the government inspectors are still inspecting herds as rapidly as they can in all districts to which cattle were shipped from the Detroit stock yards.

The direct loss occasioned by the foot and mouth disease in the vicinity of Detroit consists of almost $10,000 in the valuation of the cattle killed, an equal amount for disinfection and renovation of the stock yards here, and somewhat more than $10,000 in the pay and expenses of government inspectors. The indirect loss to farmers and dealers in live-stock, hay, hides and feed has been several times as great.

WILL ASK CHANGE IN FISHING LAWS

Lake Michigan Association Proposes New Provisions

ASSOCIATION FAVORS DAILY PERMIT

Officers Elected for the Coming Year

Will be Represented in Legislature by Able Men Next Convention to be Held Here.

The fourth annual convention of the Lake Michigan Fishermen's association, with delegates representing their industry from every port in Michigan, as well as many representatives from Illinois and Wisconsin, was held at St. Joseph last week and closed Thursday night with a grand banquet.

The executive committee, with the indorsement of the convention for the purpose of making new laws governing the fish industry, will be represented at the coming session of the state legislature by the following committee: G. Deiken, H. J. Dornbus, Grand Haven, Mich.; G. Mollhagen, St. Joseph, Mich. The following provision for the new proposed state fish law was indorsed by the convention:

"Closed season for fishing: Trout and white fish, Lake Michigan, November 14 to December 15."

The association favors issuing a daily permit from state game warden's department for catching trout and white fish when eggs are taken, the same to be sent to hatcheries, providing they are returned in due time to the lakes; that a man be employed on each craft to take charge of fish eggs required for hatcheries; that there be not more than three gang nets in use at any one time representing the original firm, and that a period of three months prior to November 1 be set aside for non-residents to fish in Lake Michigan.

H. J. Dornbus said, "The fishermen have made many concessions including the closed season, changing the sizes of nets which represented a loss to the owners of thousands of dollars, for the purpose of going to the legislature with the spirit of fairness and at the same time to protect their own interests." He concluded by remarking, "Under our proposed new law, it will not be necessary for us to violate any law to carry on our industry."

The following officers were elected for the ensuing year; president, Herman Balow, St. Joseph; vice president, Peter Jenson, Escanaba; John J. Bolt, Grand Haven, secretary and treasurer.

The next convention will be held in Charlevoix, December 8 and 9, 1909.

FEW HERE KNOW THIS

Says Home-made Treatment Cures All Rheumatism

Shake the Ingredients Well in the Bottle and Take a Teaspoonful Dose After Meals

Few people here know that you can cure that dread American disease, Rheumatism, with just common, everyday drugs found in any drug store. The prescription is so simple that anyone can prepare it at home at small cost. It is made up as follows: Get from any good prescription pharmacy Fluid Extract Dandelion, one-half ounce; Compound Kargon, one ounce; Compound Syrup Sarsaparilla, three ounces. Mix by shaking in a bottle and take in teaspoonful doses after each meal and at bedtime. These are all simple ingredients, making an absolutely harmless home remedy at little cost.

Rheumatism, as everyone knows, is a symptom of deranged kidneys. It is a condition produced by the failure of the kidneys to properly filter or strain from the blood the uric acid and other matter, which, if not eradicated, either in the urine or through the skin pores, remains in the blood, decomposes and forms about the joints and muscles, causing the untold suffering and deformity of rheumatism.

This prescription is said to be a splendid healing, cleansing and invigorating tonic to the kidneys, and gives almost immediate relief in all forms of bladder and urinary troubles and backache.

How to Make a Room Look Larger.

To increase the apparent size of a room there is nothing better than the judicious use of mirrors.

Suppose that you have a glass about five feet high and two wide, in a wooden frame, you may employ it most decoratively in a sitting room.

Mount it about a couple of feet from the floor and arrange in front of it a row of ferns, palms or other foliage plants, concealing the pots with a handsome box filled at the top with fresh moss.

The mirror should be placed either where it will reflect the view from the window or else opposite the entrance of the room, so that when the door is opened one may see the hall or passage beyond reflected in it. Of course the room will not be any larger really, but the fact that it will appear so is a great point, for, as a friend of my own says, "If we cannot have a pleasant reality at least let us have a pleasant illusion."

I know one house where the dining room is long and dark, and the only window gives a very insufficient light. Here an immense improvement was effected by placing a good mirror over the sideboard at the end of the room opposite the window.

This reflected the light and the landscape seen from the window, with the result that one was almost deluded into the belief that the room had two windows, and one certainly was not conscious of the want of an outlet.

How to Make Boiled Apple Pudding.

Half a loaf of breadcrumbs, to which add a little salt. Pare, core and cut into thin slices two greening apples, four ounces of chopped suet, half a cupful of boiling water sufficient to moisten the mixture. Rub a little salt on the inside of the mold to make it smooth. Pack the mixture firmly as tightly as possible into the mold. Fasten the lid down securely and place in a boiler with only sufficient water in the bottom to make a steam. Let it boil this way for one hour, turn out and eat with the following sauce:

One cup of granulated sugar, quarter of a cup of water. Put together on the fire and allow to melt quickly, to which add the rind of half a lemon chopped fine, not grated. One minute after the syrup begins to boil (keep any longer it turns to candy) remove it and add the juice of half a lemon. Serve hot.

How to Make Curative Salves.

Bitter Sweet Salve.—Scrape the bark from about a gallon of bitter sweet roots, cover well with water and boil down until a pint remains. Strain and add one pound each of lard, rosin and beeswax. Melt together and to this mixture add two pounds of mutton tallow. Boil all until thick, then pour into tin boxes and keep in a cool place. This salve is good for milk scald, scald head or eruptions of any kind that should be healed.

For Chapped Lips.—Take some marrow out of fresh beef bones, add a piece of white wax the size of a hickory nut, melt together, remove from the fire and add a piece of gum camphor the size of the wax and an ounce of glycerin. Stir until the camphor is dissolved. Add a few drops of oil of roses.

A Salve For Burns.—Stew together a pound each of lard, rosin and beeswax. When thick add two bottles of juniper tar.

How to Make Frozen Pudding.

For frozen pudding take one pint of milk, two cupfuls of granulated sugar, a scant half cupful of flour, two eggs, two tablespoonfuls of gelatin, one quart of cream, one pound of candied fruit, four tablespoonfuls of wine. Let the milk come to a boil, beat the flour, one cupful of sugar and the eggs together and stir into the boiling milk. Cook twenty minutes and add the gelatin, which has been soaking one or two hours in water enough to cover it. Set away to cool. When cool add the wine, sugar and cream. Freeze ten minutes, then add the candied fruits and finish freezing. Take out the beater, pack in a melon mold in salt and ice for an hour. Serve with whipped cream.

How to Mark Your Linen.

The most satisfactory method of marking clothes that go to the laundry is with a rubber stamp bearing your name. Each separate article may thus be stamped with the least possible trouble, and the result will be a legible marking. The name need not be put in a conspicuous place. In fact, it might be tucked away in some odd corner where it will not show, yet is sure proof of ownership. The stamp is inexpensive, and one may buy a pad and indelible ink at small cost. It is a very recommended idea.

How to Clean a Sewing Machine.

To keep a sewing machine in good condition it needs an occasional cleaning with kerosene. Saturate the machine with kerosene and then run the machine briskly for several minutes without thread, of course. This will loosen all old oil and dust, which should be wiped away with a soft cloth until the machine is perfectly clean. Then oil it with machine oil.

How to Make Pumpkin Pie.

Boil and press through a sieve a quart of pumpkin. Add two quarts of rich milk. Sweeten it to taste, adding spice and a little nutmeg. A piece of butter the size of an egg may be added while the pumpkin is still hot. Last, add six eggs well beaten and pour the mixture into the prepared crust and bake rather slowly. This will make two large pies.

INEXPENSIVE HOG COT.

Easy to Build and Fulfills All the Requirements.

This convenient hog cot is constructed by nailing inch boards on six joists 2 by 4 inches by 8 feet long for the floor. Beneath the joists are nailed three stringers 2 by 6 inches by 8 feet long, which serve as runners for moving the house. Next is spiked a piece 2 by 8 inches 9 feet 4 inches long at the ends of the joists, having the bottom of the 2 by 8 even with the bottom of the joist, which will allow it to project above the floor three inches. It will also extend out seven inches at each end. This 2 by 8 forms a plate to which the rafters and roof boards are nailed. The seven inch extension of the plate at the ends supports the lower corners of the roof, which otherwise would be easily split off. These 2 by 8's, besides strengthening the house, raise the rafters and roof boards nailed to them at least three inches off the floor and thereby materially increase the floor space and the capacity of the house.

If the house is to be used in extremely cold weather an easily manipulated door is necessary. The cut shows a door two feet wide and two feet six inches high, made to slide up and down and held in place by cleats. It is suspended by a rope which passes through a pulley at the top and is fastened to a cleat at the side near the roof. The cut also shows two iron eyes, bolted into the front joist of the building, to which the hitch is made when the building is moved.

A rear door, identical in size with the front door, is held in place by cleats nailed across it on the inside and by buttons fastened on the outside. This door is not opened regularly, but provides ventilation in summer and aids in handling sows at farrowing time. Above the rear door is a small sliding door 8 by 12 inches to admit light and air. There is a ventilator on top made by sawing off ends of two roof boards and covering the hole with a cap so arranged as to leave openings 3 by 12 inches on each side of the roof.

Lumber required: Nine pieces 1 by 12, sixteen feet long, and eleven battens sixteen feet long for roof; five pieces 1 by 12, fourteen feet long, for ends; one piece 2 by 4, ten feet long, for ridge; two pieces 2 by 8, ten feet long, for plates; seven pieces 2 by 4, sixteen feet long, for rafters and braces in frame; three pieces 2 by 6, eight feet long, for stringers, and four pieces 1 by 12, sixteen feet long, for flooring.

SILAGE FOR MILK COWS.

Most Profitable Way to Feed This Valuable Ration.

By M. A. GOODRICH.

Perhaps there is more benefit derived from silage by feeding it to milk cows than by feeding it to any other kind of stock. At any rate, it is used more and thought more of by dairymen than by any other class of farmers.

Cows should never be fed exclusively on silage. They need some dry forage to go with it; they need a variety. Besides this, corn silage is a carbonaceous food and needs some more nitrogenous food to go with it to make a well balanced ration. About thirty or at most forty pounds a day of silage is as much as should be fed to each cow. It should be fed from the top of the silo, taking off about two inches in depth from the entire surface each day, for if it is long exposed to the air it will be damaged. If the feeding commences immediately after filling the silo—and this is a good way to do it—there will be no damaged silage at all. Care should be taken at each time of feeding to leave the surface smooth and even and not pick and stir it up with the fork, for that will let in the air and cause damage.

My way is to feed the silage ration in two feeds, both night and morning, and it is better to feed after milking, because the peculiar odor of the silage might affect the flavor of the milk.

Cows as well as other stock have a wonderful liking for silage, and I believe much of the success in feeding it can be attributed to its palatability. They even prefer it to a certain extent at least, to fresh cut forage or good grass in the pasture. I have seen cows in June when on good pasture which had been fed silage every day come to the gate at 4 o'clock in the afternoon and bellow and ask to come to the barn and get silage, which they would eat greedily and, apparently with great relish. I have seen the experiment tried of offering the cows at the same time corn cut fresh from the fields and silage that was put up the year before. Every cow chose the silage and ate that first. It is true these cows had been fed silage every day all summer, and it may be the habit of eating silage had something to do with their preferring it, but they surely would not have done it if silage had not been pretty good feed.

There is no better and cheaper feed to supplement short pastures, which we are almost sure to have every summer on account of drought or other causes, than good silage. I know some of the most successful dairymen in the country who feed silage every day in the year, winter as well as summer.

REFRIGERATOR DRAIN.

The Operation of Emptying It Cannot Be Attended by Disaster.

The blessings which come to us through the advancement of knowledge and science are never unmixed with their penalties. Take the refrigerator, for instance. It is a comfort and a convenience which has taken such a deep rooted hold on us that it is now a necessity, and, no matter how humble it may be, there is no home without a refrigerator. But a nuisance attending it is the matter of emptying the drip pan, which must be done at regular intervals, and because of the necessarily flat shape of this receptacle so that it may slide readily under the ice chest the task of disposing of the accumulation of water is more often than not attended by some spilling. No matter what amount of care is exercised, it seems almost impossible to pull the pan from under the chest without accident.

In some of the most up to date hardware and house furnishing stores there is now being shown an article of this character which greatly facilitates the removal of the pan. The latter may be filled almost to the point of overflowing, yet it can be pulled out without giving the matter the least care and carried anywhere without the least danger of disaster. It is almost impossible to upset its contents. Care in handling is not at all essential. Clad in her finest dress, a woman can dispose of the refrigerator overflow without danger.

The new refrigerator pan looks like a kettledrum more than anything else. It is a low, flat cylinder. Unlike the usual pan for this purpose, it has a covered top. Being more or less familiar with the approximate location of the drip pipe, the new pan is thrust carelessly under the refrigerator. The drops falling anywhere on its top, the water is conducted into the interior of the receptacle by means of a series of channels which carry the drippings to an inlet at one edge. At this point on the circular side walls of the can there is also a handle by which it is pulled from its resting place and carried to the point of emptying. Under the handle there are also other openings to facilitate the precipitating of the contents, but in order that it may not overflow at this point they are covered with a hood of the same metal of which the pan is made. In transporting this receptacle from point to point, as is necessary, it is carried by the handle in precisely the same manner as a gripsack. This enables the pan to be made larger than those of the type in use at present because of its greater convenience, it being possible to carry a greater burden in this way. Any woman will recognize the convenience of this innovation and will wonder that the idea was never worked out before.

A Plate Heater.

For use in the butler's pantry to keep dishes and food hot a very convenient little heater has been designed on the order of those seen in hotel restaurants. The only difference is in the size, the family heater being considerably smaller, just large enough to hold a couple of plates or a small platter. The heater is made to attach to either the gas jet or an electric wire, and it can be regulated to any temperature desired. For breakfast this will be found a great help in serving crisp, hot toast or in maintaining the high temperature of coffee and water. No well equipped dining room or serving pantry is complete without at least one of these heaters, and in large houses several are installed to facilitate the serving of large dinners and luncheons.

Brushing a Dress.

In brushing a garment that holds lint and dust place it upon the ironing board and sweep it with the whisk broom, always in the direction of the weave, which should be from the hand to the hem. Even this process will not always insure a perfectly clean skirt, for the broom and brush scatter dust particles, but you will meet with good results by going lightly over the goods with a dry sponge. This sponge will take up all places of lint. It can be used to brush the collar and cuffs of a coat and is very convenient for dusting dandruff from a man's coat collar.

The Land of Lie-a-Bed.

The lazy land of Lie-a-Bed
Has two fat pillows at the head,
A downy comfort spread all neat
And restful from the head to feet.
A drowsy, dreamy place to stay
And yawn, "I'll not get up today."
And many children like to go
To wonder-wander here, you know.

It is a pleasant land, and yet
If I were you I would forget
The pathway there and follow back
The shining merry morning track
The dream-world lies too far away
From honest work and happy play.
And you must heed what you have read
And shun the land of Lie-a-Bed.

Effects and Causes.

Mldn's Criterion (liquor journal) is rejoiced that methods for the treatment of inebriety are becoming more "rational and scientific," that "that the world is gradually coming to the conclusion that it is a disease to be treated intelligently by experienced specialists as any other disease of the human system." "It has been established" this aulority announces, "that drunken ness caused by the excessive use of alcoholic liquors is an effect from some previous degeneracy in the subject as its cause.

When experienced specialists find two causes for a disease, one immediate, another more remote, what is the first step in the rational and scientific method of treatment? What are state and medical authorities doing in their present day crusade against the "white plague" and yellow fever? They are aiming to remove direct causes so far as those causes can be discovered. Alcholic liquor being the direct and immediate (if not the primary) cause of drunkenness, as is admitted by the Criterion, the wise specialist will begin treatment by removing that cause! He will make "excessive use" impossible through prohibition of the whole dangerous traffic. Then he will go to work on the "previous degeneracy" and will find that this condition also is in effect of some still more previous cause—possibly of drunkenness. Thus there is action and reaction, as all physicians know.

Granting that inebriety is a disease and that it is as unjust to fine a man for being drunk—for being what the legalized saloon made him—as it would be to punish him for having tuberculosis, what, it may be asked, would be thought of a state which expended millions for the care and attempted cure of consumptives and nothing at all for preventive measurers; nay more, which gave legal protection to those whose business it was to produce and spread the disease? Mida's alludes in commendatory terms to the recent decision of the supreme court of Minnesota, which upholds the law levying a tax of two per cent on all liquor revenues of the state toward the support of a state inebriate asylum and farm, and one physician that we know of, speaking of the justice of the law, asks "What better use a state could make of its liquor revenue than to pay it back to heart broken wives and worse than fatherless children by giving them a well husband and a sane father?" If part of the saloon revenue goes back to the drunkard and the drunkard's family, how much has the state gained? What it loses in the process of making a drunkard and then trying to make him over into a sober man, who can compute? The term of commitment to a state inebriate asylum is all too short in which to eradicate the disease of alcoholism. This is admitted by hospital authorities themselves. Indeed a lifetime would be too short to effect a cure if the patient must go out to face the open saloon.

But despite the inconsistency of state hospitals for inebriates, the movement is a hopeful one. The attempt of the state to undo its own work is an acknowledgment of the disastrous consequences of that work. When it begins to inquire, "What shall we do with our drunkards" an important point is gained in the direction of intelligent treatment for these abnormal types of humanity.

CLEANING GRAY HAIR.

Much Care Necessary to Keep It In Good Condition.

The woman who has gray hair may be very proud of it because of its artistic beauty and the fact that it is the height of fashion.

Her problem in these days is how to keep it clean. For the first time she envies the woman who has the kind of hair that can be washed in anything and remain clear and keep its color.

Every speck of dust and soil streaks white hair with gray and yellow. The latter is a sign that the hair needs cleansing. It is not always easy to do this away from home, and it is not always successful when done by any one else. It is said by an expert that one of the best ways to clean it during the summer months, when perspiration takes away all the polish from it, is to wash it once every three or four weeks with the raw white of an egg mixed with castile soap.

The use of bicarbonate of soda is not good for any one with gray hair. Borax and ammonia should also be avoided.

One woman whose hair is inclined to be harsh under frequent washings always keeps it clean and sweet smelling by dusting it two or three times a week with finely powdered orris root and good talcum.

She rubs this in the hair, lets it remain for a day, then shakes it out and brushes it in small divisions so the bristles can draw out every particle of powder.

This takes the dust with it, whitens the hair and removes every trace of perspiration and oiliness.

Women and Morals.

We hope that women who claim their rights will use them soberly and well. It is of ill omen that most of the novels that throw morality to the winds and picture vicious living in seductive colors as an exercise of freedom and self realization are written by women. Women are the natural custodians of a high moral standard, and if they lower the standard they will fall themselves and drag men down with them.

How to Cook Chicken a la Creole.

To cook chicken a la Creole select a tender young chicken, cut it into the usual frieasee pieces, roll it in flour that has been seasoned with salt and pepper and fry it in fat until it is brown and tender. Keep the chicken hot while the sauce is making. For the sauce fry a minced slice of onion in two tablespoonfuls of butter and stir in a tablespoonful of flour. When all are nicely browned add one of the Spanish red peppers which come in cans (they are known as pimentos), two cupfuls of tomatoes, a bit of bay leaf and a piece of thyme. Stir until the sauce thickens. Then add the chicken and simmer very slowly for a few minutes.

Precautionary.

"See here," said the latter as he headed the young man off, "do you cross the street every time you see me to keep from paying that bill you owe me?"

"I should say not," replied the young man.

"Then why do you do it?" asked the knight of the tape.

"To keep you from asking for it," answered the other.—Chicago News.

The cushion dance was originally an old country dance in triple time, which was introduced into court at the time of Elizabeth. The dance was very simple. A performer took a cushion and after dancing for a few minutes stopped and threw the cushion before one of the spectators. The one so selected had to kneel on the cushion and allow the dancer to kiss her, after which he repeated the dance.

THE average American citizen ought certainly to get a little fun out of the present situation in his national capital. The politican always makes an amusing spectacle of himself when he comes into contact with plain, unfrilled, unfurbelowed direct sincerity. And the politicians at Washington are surely up against that sort of a proposition now. Its name is Tuft. Contrary to the popular impression Roosevelt is more of a diplomat and much handier with the "jolly" than Tuft can ever be. Roosevelt can beat the best of the politicans at their own game, if he has to Senator Aldrich, father-in-law of Standard Oil, gave way to the free alcohol legislation, although even now he may not fully realize how the president brought the pressure which undermined his opposition. Again, the railroad members of coogress fought rate legislation bitterly during the session when, through Mr. Townsend, of Michigan, the president was sowing the seed of the square deal in transportation. By the time the next session arrived the late enemies of this legislation were in a fever to vote for it. The pure food law affords another example of the neatness wherewith Mr. Roosevelt made converts of men while they were not looking.

But the politicians do not understand Mr. Taft. He has sent for none of them. They know he is posting himself on them, and that is all they do know. And if the new congress passes a tariff bill or any other bill which is a humbug on the American people it will be vetoed. Mr. McKinley was also elected with the underatanding that the tariff was to be revised, and he had Chairman Dingley, of the house, ways and means committee, at Canton for days at a time, and other members of that committee were likewise called there for long conferences. But bland and smiling Bill Taft—whom they expected to find so easy—is a new Bill Taft to them. Before election he went up and down the country assuring the people that certain palpable wrongs in the Dingley tariff would be righted, and other party pledges rigidly redeemed, if he were elected president. The politicians expected him to say those things. But now he is acting as if he expected all this campaign hullabub made good. He doesn't even trouble to ask any of them to make it good.

Taft certainly is the last man to be looking for a fight. It is his highest ambition to give the country an administration which will cool the heated, and gradually bring to perfection those reforms so vigorously started under President Roosevelt. If they really mean to do the right thing by the country there is no need for the statesmen at Washington to be giving so amusing an illustration of the way chickens run and hide when a hawk is sailing over the premises. Taft is no hawk.—Detroit Evening News.

PRESIDENT ROOSEVELT'S QUESTIONS

A Few of Them are Quoted Below and What They Mean.

1 Have you a good, warm house? Has your neighbors the same?

2 When your boys and girls start down to road to school these mornings are they sure of being educated so that they will be satisfied with farm life?

3 Do you and your neighbors get as much for produce as you are entitled to?

4 How do the railroad men and the trolley men treat you?

5 Is your telephone service all right? Have you any kicks on the mail man?

6 Do your wife and yourself chip in with your neighbors on buying and selling deals?

7 What about that fellow in your neighborhood that rents his farm? Is he making a go of it?

8 Is it hard to find farm hands?

9 How's your hired man? Happy? Does he "sit in" with the family? Isn't there something all farmers could do to make the hired man happier.

10 Do you and your neighbor know the banker, can you borrow money in a pinch?

11 How is your barnyard? Clean? Are your neighbors' yards clean? What do farmers think of a neighbor who keeps a dirty yard?

12 And your wife? Does she ever go out? Does she ever meet the women of the neighborhood? Is there any society at all in your neighborhood?

What is the thing that would make the greatest improvement in country life?—Grand Rapids Press.

OSBORN FOR GOVERNOR

"Son" Man's Boom Forming—Has a Brilliant Record.

The latest political talk relates to the probability of the Hon. Chase S. Osborn becoming a candidate for governor in 1910.

Osborn has a brilliant record as state game warden, railway commissioner and regent of the state university. He was asked to become a compromise candidate for governor this year, to solve the Warner-Bradley embarrassment, but refused to do so. In 1900 he had the support of the upper peninsula for governor against Bliss.

The position of Osborn in the Republican party was demonstrated this year when he was chosen chairman of the delegation at the Republican national convention. As an orator, he has few equals in the state. The party has had an impressive warning that it is high time a candidate of his fine qualifications were brought to the front.

General Farm Items.

Only good, sound apples should be used for cider.

The amount of humus in the soil indicates in great measure its richness in nitrogen.

It is claimed that exposed manure loses about one-sixth of its phosphoric acid and more than one-third of its phosphate.

A nail can be driven in hard wood by dipping the point in lard or tallow.

An acre of soil nine inches deep if of ordinary fertility is estimated to weigh about 3,000,000 pounds and contains about 2,000 pounds of nitrogen, 3,000 pounds of phosphoric acid and 6,000 pounds of potash.

According to late statistics, there are at the present time 19,746,000 horses in the United States. This is a gain of 40 per cent during ten years.

Good Form in Stationery.

Good form in stationery has always been considered a mark of a woman's refinement. Nevertheless the styles change in that accessory, and the latest fads this season are very dainty. Neutral tints are permissible, and usually one, such as gray, is more in vogue than any other. Blue is popular, but it is an indeterminate shade. Plain white is seldom seen, merely as a matter of fad, but it is always good form.

RAISING CHICKENS.

Her Theory Was Right, but a Flaw Marred Her Practice.

"Yes, farming is all very easy," the farmer said. "Any city person could make a success of it at the first go-off. Mrs. Jack Frost took the farm next to mine one year. Being from the city, she thought she would show us country people a thing or two about real farming. She began on a chicken yard.

"It was a fine yard. Pretty soon a hundred eggs hatched out. There were half hens and half roosters. Mrs. Jack Frost, before sailing for Europe, separated the two sexes, and, killing all the roosters, she sent them to her friends. A fine lot of spring broilers they made. They were no bigger than squabs.

"But when Mrs. Jack Frost got back from Europe a strange sight her chicken yard presented. It was nothing but young roosters—young roosters crowing, young roosters swaggering about, while here, with flying feathers and squawks and blood, a terrible fight went on. And there, disregarded by all, lay the corpses of brave birds slain in single combat. At sunrise you could hear the crowing of those roosters all over the county.

"Poor Mrs. Jack Frost understood the theory of chicken raising all right, only in separating the young birds she mistook the males for the females, and vice versa."—New Orleans Times-Democrat.

WHEELBARROW TRAVEL.

A Common Method of Transportation in China.

"Probably more freight and more passengers are transported in China by the wheelbarrow than by any other land method," said a Hongkong man who is interested in the shipping trade in the far east.

"The wheelbarrow used in China differs from that used in America in the fact that the wheel is set in the center and thus supports practically the entire load, while the handles are supported in part by a strap or rope over the shoulders of the man who operates it.

"As a result the cooly in China will transport nearly half a ton on his wheel. Wheelbarrows are much used in the country, where the roads are but little developed, and I have heard that passengers sometimes make the entire trip from Shanghai to Pekin, a distance of 600 miles, by barrow.

"A two passenger barrow will make about twenty miles a day, and the cooly is content with a pay of about 20 cents a day or an average of about half a cent a mile for each passenger. On the level, well kept streets of the foreign quarters of such cities as Hongkong, Shanghai and Pekin the wheelbarrow cooly will struggle along with a load of six or even eight people."—Washington Herald.

A Hard Language.

"Leesten!" said the perplexed Frenchman. "When you give a sing, you cannot keep 'eem! So?"

"So," said the English instructor.

"But when a hones' man gives 'ees word, 'ee keep 'eem. So?"

"So," said the instructor.

"But when 'ee give 'ees word, 'ow can 'ee keep 'eem? Does 'ee take 'em back?"

"No," said the instructor.

"But if 'ee keeps 'ees word 'ee does out give 'eem!"

"Oh, yes! If he does not keep his word he is not an honest man."

"Ah, I beegreen to see! 'Aving given 'ees word and not taken 'eem back, 'ee keep 'eem all ze while?"

"That's it!"

"Oh, la, la, la! What a language 'ees ze English!"

Always on Time.

A man who is constitutionally late surprised his friends by leaving the house at 1 o'clock to keep a 2 o'clock appointment.

"Jim's watch must be wrong or he wouldn't have started so early," they said. "He will surely be on time today. Where in the world can he be going?"

"He is going to a funeral," volunteered one who knew. "He is one of the pallbearers. Very seldom are pallbearers behind time. I have known men who were late on every other imaginable occasion—late for their own weddings, even—but if chosen for pallbearers they always came up to the mark."—New York Globe.

State Officials Paid In Pelts.

Probably few people today know that the original name of the state of Tennessee was Franklin or that in 1788 the salaries of the officers of this commonwealth were paid in pelts, but the following is a correct copy of the law:

Be it enacted by the general assembly of the state of Franklin, and it is hereby enacted by authority of the same, that from and after the first day of January, 1788, the salaries of this commonwealth be as follows—to wit:

His excellency the governor, per annum, 100 deerskins.

His honor the chief justice, 500 deerskins.

The secretary to his excellency the governor, 300 raccoon skins.

County clerk, 300 beaver skins.

Clerk of the house of commons, 300 raccoon skins.

Members of the assembly, per diem, 3 raccoon skins.

Justice's fee for serving a warrant, 1 minkskin.

A Bird of Paradise.

Four-year-old Frances is happy to be allowed to attend Sunday school at the graystone Episcopal church whose spire is visible from her home. When she returned after her first attendance she was asked by a kindly caller, "Where did you go this morning, Frances?"

"I don't know the name of the church," she replied after a little thought, "but it's the one with the great long look."—Exchange.

LARGEST IN YEARS

Postal Deficit During Year 1908 Largest in History

Postmaster General Meyer Urges Legislation Permitting Parcels Post.

In his annual report for the fiscal year ended June 30, 1908, Postmaster General Meyer gives the total receipts for the year as $208,351,881 thereby showing a deficit of $10,853,222, the largest in the history of the department, with an additional loss from fire, burglary, etc., of $37,050. The deficit of 1909, it is estimated, again will exceed $16,000,000.

The necessity for good roads is pointed out in connection with the development of the rural free delivery service. It is suggested that should congress grant the department authority to utilize rural routes still further by the establishment of a limited parcels post confined entirely to rural delivery routes, it would then be possible to earn additional revenue amounting to millions of dollars and at the same time benefit the farmer by enabling him to have merchandise delivered when ordered by telephone or postal card, which otherwise would not be purchased.

"The special parcels post," says the postmaster general, "will enable the farmers to have small parcels delivered at their gates, to live better, and to obtain easily the necessaries of life." Permission is requested to establish experimentally a limited parcel post in four counties, to demonstrate the practicability of the plan.

The Origin of Phoenix Park.

The origin of the name of Phoenix park, Dublin, has puzzled many scholars unacquainted with the Irish language. The manor was called in the Irish vernacular Fionn-uisge, pronounced finnisk, which signifies clear or fair water and which originated in the brief English manner exactly resembled the word phoenix. The spring or well so called from which the park derives its name still exists close to the Dublin entrance of the vice regal lodge. It is situated in a glen beside the lower lake and is one of the romantic objects of the park.

Settled Here 31 Years Ago Funeral Took Place Monday.

Mrs. Jane Wells, a pioneer resident of this county died at the home of her daughter, Mrs. Luther Trimble of Elstow, Saskatchewan, November 29, and was brought here for burial, arriving last Sunday. Her remains were taken to the home of her son, Norman Wells, who lives on the farm upon which Mrs. Wells had lived for twenty-nine years.

About two years ago she went to Elstow to make her home with her daughter, Charlottte, and while there was stricken with pneumonia which was one of the causes of her death. She was sick for over seventeen weeks before death relieved her of her suffering.

Mrs. Jane Wells was born in Canada, February 11, 1838, and moved to Michigan in 1877 settling in Marion township. She leaves ten children who are Eddie Wells of Dromore, Canada, Albert Wells and Mrs. Trimble of Northwest Territory, Canada, Mrs. Mattie Garland of Boyne City, George, John, Levi, Norman Wells, Mrs. Anna Hult and Mrs. Emma Rogers, who live in this city.

Mrs. Wells was a member of the Methodist Episcopal church, and was a woman of sterling christian habits and loved by all that knew her.

The funeral services were held Monday from the Epworth church, on the Norwood road, and her remains were laid at rest in Brookside cemetery. Mr. and Mrs. Luther Trimble, at whose home in Elstow her death took place, accompanied the remains here.

Black bears are unusually numerous in Kalkaska county this year. One weighing 250 pounds and measuring six feet from tip to tip, was killed last week. This makes the fifth bear killed in that vicinity in the past few weeks.

Albert T. Kellogg, justice of the peace and one of the oldest residents of Kalkaska, died at his home in that village Saturday, November 28. The funeral was held the following Tuesday under the auspices of F. & A. M. lodge. He had lived in Kalkaska over thirty-five years and was a member of the G. A. R.

An exchange gives the following formula for getting rid of stumps: with a two inch auger bore a hole perpendicularly into a stump about two feet; then pour into the hole a pint of a mixture of nitric and sulphuric acid in equal parts. Plug the hole up tightly with a plug dipped in melted paraffine. In thirty days a stump so treated will become a charred, pulpy mass, roots and all, ready to be spread over the soil as a fertilizer with a shovel.

The state railway commission has summoned Watson Wesley, a business man of Port Huron, and Joshua Allum, a Pere Marquette conductor, to appear before the board and explain an alleged violation of the new railway act. A startling provision of the new railway law is that one who rides on a train without paying the required fare is liable to a fine of from $100 to $500 and the conductor who permits a passenger to ride without making payment according to law is subject to the same penalty. It is said that Conductor Allum allowed Wesley to ride from Bad Axe to Port Huron for fifteen cents, whereas the regular fare is more than $1.50.

Literary Notes

Chanticleer Egg Cozy.

"New York girls are making for Christmas presents this year fascinating little roosters heads in flannel of two colors," reports the Woman's Home Companion for December. "Each head is cut double and wadded on the inside with cotton batting. The roosters are invariably white, with a comb and wattles of scarlet. When completed, Sir Chanticleer makes a novel egg cozy to slip over the breakfast egg in the egg cup when cereal or some other breakfast preliminary is to be eaten first."

A Christmas Blotter.

"With two large sheets of blotting paper of contrasting colors and an ordinary little calendar pad may be made an extremely useful gift," says Woman's Home Companion for December. "Out of the large blotters cut twelve small ones of uniform size, about ten by four inches. Paste a 'month' from the calendar, and on each small blotter, and with the colors alternating. Keep the twelve together by tying ribbon around them, with a pretty bow on top. Each month a fresh blotter may be slipped from under the ribbon and the month's calendar is right at hand. Red and green blotters tied with red ribbon are a Christmas combination."

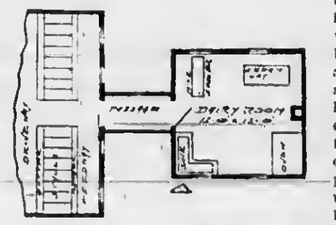
THE FARM DAIRY.

Proper Facilities Needed to Make Butter For the Market.

The very best butter is made on farms when the women thoroughly understand the business and have the proper facilities. When the milk from good healthy cows is run through a cream separator as soon as possible after milking and the cream cooled to the right temperature and kept in clean, pure air and churned when it is just old enough and not too old, you get the very nicest butter that skill and energy can make. Such butter, if shipped regularly to consumers in large cities, will bring a bigger price than the best creamery butter, says the Farm Press. It is no more work to make butter right than to make it wrong. In fact, there is less work, because you have a proper system, and that always helps.

The farm dairy may be very simple, but it should be by itself. You cannot make gilt edged butter in the kitchen. There are too many odors from cooking and sometimes from tobacco smoke. Cream is very touchy when it comes to odors. You can insult cream with a bad smell quicker than any other food product, and when it is once contaminated no cleansing process can possibly ribulnate the trouble.



PLAN FOR A FARM DAIRY.

The dairy may open off from the kitchen, but you must keep the door closed. You will need some means of heating this room in winter time, but during the spring, fall and summer it will be warm enough without, and if it is on the north side of the building it will be cool enough most of the time without using ice, but ice is cheap enough to have and use when you need it.

The plan of dairy shown in the illustration is intended for from ten to thirty cows. If you have more cows you may need more room, but that will depend to some extent on how often you ship the butter.

The intention is to pack the butter in one pound prints or five pound crocks and to ship in neat little crates holding two or three crocks each or in boxes holding ten or twenty prints. If you have the proper storage and the butter is made to keep you can hold it in your storeroom until you get ready to ship it. Good homemade butter is just as good in six months as it is the day it is made, only you cannot hold a customer unless you ship regularly.

If you agree to ship once a week, do so, and if you agree to ship once a month remember the date and don't let it go by, for it is just as important to sell right as to manufacture right.

How to Handle Sick Stock.

Place the sick animal in a well disinfected and dry box stall with plenty of bedding and sunlight (avoid drafts). In cold weather place a blanket on the animal and feed sparingly with digestible food, such as bran mashes made of linseed tea. Keep manger sweet and clean. Water should be pure and clean and warmed when necessary. It is always necessary for new milk cows to be given warm water. An injection of warm water should be given all sick animals, excepting those you can be sure do not require it.—Dr. David Roberts, Wisconsin State Veterinarian.

STOCK AND DAIRY.

It does not pay to leave stock in the pasture without shelter on cold, wet nights, and this applies especially to high efficiency cows. One night of chill will make them fall off in milk to an extent that it will take them a full week to recover.

Field Roots For Sheep.

Any kind of field roots are good, but turnips, rutabagas or mangels are most commonly used. A small quantity fed per day, as much as two or three pounds, will prove very helpful. They have an excellent effect on the digestion. When they are fed constipation will not affect the members of the flock. After the ewes have produced lambs they may be fed roots with much freedom. They are most excellent for the production of milk.—Professor Thomas Shaw.

Buying Cattle.

An experienced breeder gives this advice to the beginner in buying cattle: A lot of young feeding cattle are changing hands, and a few hints may be appreciated by those who are buying feeders for the first time. Buying locally is a good practice for the beginner. Then he can see the animal before buying and can examine the herd from which it comes. A little care in buying is generally just as important as the feed. As a rule, promising young cattle are retained at home, and the scrubs of the herd are sent to market. One is very likely to get the "three-year-old yearling" in almost any bunch, and often a good many such. We have sent off a few such cattle several months after buying and have found the weights no heavier and occasionally lighter. My advice to the cautious beginner is not to be rash or in a hurry. See the goods yourself. Be on watch for bargains the first time, that is, something good at a price that makes one comparatively safe.

LAMPS FOR LIGHT.

How to Get the Most Illumination From Them.

The lamps should first be collected from every room and all put together on a large tray in the kitchen. Then a big wooden box is brought out, which contains greasy cloths, soft cloths, a pair of old gloves, wick rags, scissors, chamois leather and chimney cleaners. Opinions are divided as to whether a wick should be cut or rubbed down. The best way is to rub it down with a bit of rag, which should be burned and not put back to the box, and then any stray ends of cotton cut off with scissors. Great care should be taken to hold the burner well away from the lamp when the wick is rubbed down, otherwise the charred portions are apt to fall on to it.

Once a month the burners should be boiled. Remove the wicks and then place the whole of the burner, first releasing its various portions from one another, in a saucepan of water with a little soda and bring to the boil. Twenty to thirty minutes' boiling will make the burners as bright as ever they were, and should any black still adhere it can be removed with a hatpin, after which the burner is boiled up again. Of course a saucepan must be kept specially for this, and it should be either plainly marked or kept away from other culinary utensils. The burners must be thoroughly dried and if possible put in the sun for a few minutes. Meanwhile the wicks must have been seen to. If very dirty they should be washed out in clean suds, but usually a thorough drying in the sun or in a warm kitchen will put them in condition for burning properly. It is extremely important that they should be quite dry before being put back into the oil.

Daily cleansing of every lamp in use should be as much a part of the housewife's duties as making the beds.

Another precaution to take to prevent wicks from smoking is to boil them. Buy them in bunches, place in a porcelain kettle, cover with strong vinegar, bring the latter to a boil and set where the kettle will keep warm for three hours. Drain out the wicks, dry thoroughly and keep from dust. Wicks thus soaked rarely smoke.

If chimneys are bought in quantity and boiled they also may be prevented in a great measure from breaking. Lay some shavings in the bottom of a wash boiler, pack in the chimneys, throw a handful of soda over them and fill with cold water. Allow to come to a boil slowly, simmer for two hours, then take from the fire. Cover thickly, so that they will be at least three hours in cooling. When cold wash the chimneys in hot water in which a little soda has been dissolved, rinse in hot water, dry and store in a cupboard. Chimneys should also be washed in hot soda water.

Beware of Ointments for Catarrh that Contain Mercury.

as mercury will surely destroy the sense of smell and completely derange the whole system when entering it through the mucous surfaces. Such articles should never be used except on prescriptions from reputable physicians as the damage they will do is tenfold to the good you can possibly derive from them. Hall's Catarrh Cure, manufactured by F. J. Cheney & Co., Toledo, O., contains no mercury, and is taken internally, acting directly on the blood and mucous surfaces of the system. In buying Hall's Catarrh Cure be sure you get the genuine. It is taken internally and made in Toledo, by F. J. Cheney & Co. Testimonials free.

How to Make a Sewing Bag.

Pretty new sewing bags are made of silk bandannas, finished at the top with a wooden stick which is run through a casing. These sticks are flat like those used in window shades, and the bag made with them is far easier to keep in order than are those pulled up by the aid of ribbons. Of course ribbons are used on these new bags, but they are run through bone rings which are sewed to the top of the casing.

These bone rings are a great improvement over those of brass, which were formerly used. The latter always became rusty at the seashore and never were neat and pretty like the bone ones. The bone rings may be purchased for about 8 cents a dozen, while the sticks may be procured for little or nothing. Have a hole punched at each end of the stick through which it may be tacked in place to the material, and then when the bag goes to the laundry the stitches may be ripped, the stick pulled out, and no harm will be done in the washing.

How to Trim Babies' Garments.

One of the favorite methods of trimming children's caps, sacks, dresses and undergarments is featherstitching, which can be put on in a variety of ways. A dainty way of putting on the stitches is to mark lightly with a pencil a zigzag line up and down an even distance along the hem you wish to catch. Follow this line in the featherstitching, and the effect will be pretty.

Another pretty way is to make a number of small circles, leaving a distance between them equal to the diameter of the circles. Now featherstitch the circles, and you will have a dainty finish to the garment. In the same way one could mark squares and diamonds as well as a long wavy line. One can never put too much work on baby garments of any kind, and of all trimmings featherstitching can be used to the greatest advantage.

How to Clean Wall Paper.

The spots sometimes found on wall paper can be quickly and easily removed by making a stiff dough of graham flour and boiling water. Knead the dough thoroughly and break into small pieces. As each piece is used it should be doubled in on itself so there is a clean surface at each rub. When one piece is soiled throw it away and take a fresh one. Always rub the paper in one direction, and do not go over the same surface twice.

How to Care For Clothes.

When an unwashable garment has just been taken off never put it into the wardrobe until it has been aired for an hour or so. Clothing which has been worn a long time, if not aired properly, contracts most disagreeable odors.

Air and sunshine have disinfecting qualities which are purifying, and we should know how to avail ourselves of them.

Holding Trumps

By W. F. BRYAN.

Copyrighted, 1908, by Associated Literary Press.

Bitter Creek cared little for the presidential race? It was too remote from the center of things to care which of the two Williams occupied the White House. It was the tail of the ticket that interested Bitter Creek, and interested it mightily.

The camp had reached a stage in its development where a local sheriff was of greater importance than a national ruler. The fight was to be made strictly on party lines, but the parties were the Colcordites and the Mullustites.

It was agreed that either man would admirably perform the onerous duties of the office, but Ben Colcord and Tom Mullus both wanted the place, and the contest would be none the less exciting because the two men were close friends.

"This sure is going to be a fight," announced Colcord when he met his rival after the nomination. "No hard feeling if I beat you, Tom?"

"If you can," confirmed Mullus, with a laugh. "I think I see myself wearing that badge already, Ben."

"Not if I can help it," denied Colcord. "I've a few ideas as to how to run a campaign myself, and I'm going to try them."

"Anything short of shooting," assented Mullus. "I hold the trump card, though. You wait and see."

Bitter Creek did not have long to wait. Colcord led from the first and took the first trick by lifting up the old Bella Union as a picture show. In between reels he made a speech to the audience, and the audience included most of the townspeople in the course of the evening.

The pictures were changed every evening, and even the barkeepers at the new Bella Union and the Yalta were permitted to take time off to see the new reel run through.

Business at the faro tables suffered, and Colcord would have become unpopular had it not been that at the conclusion of each performance he led the audience across the street for a drink, patronizing first the Bella Union and then the Yalta.

It was the general opinion that Colcord had set a pace too swift for his rival to follow, but Mullus only smiled.

This smile grew broader the following week when Mullus played and took the second trick. Bitter Creek sadly lacked the feminine element. Save for Mrs. Mulligan, who ran the Golden West hotel, the census of Bitter Creek was entered in the male column of the records.

The arrival of Edna Mullus created nothing less than a sensation, and that evening the picture show was deserted, while the voters of Bitter Creek slowly filed past the Golden West in the hope of obtaining a sight of the new arrival.

Edna Mullus was well worth the trouble. She was a slip of a girl with a coronet of silky hair the color of virgin gold. She dressed with an artful simplicity far more fetching than the latest fashion, and her smile was simply irresistible. She was just out of college, in love with the west and delighted to be one of the factors in an election contest.

Tom fitted up a store near the picture show, and waffles, with real honey, vied with the pictures as an attraction. Waffles were Edna's specialty, and with sleeves rolled above her dimpled elbows, with dainty apron and a coquettish cooking cap, her face flushed from the heat of the fire, she was a picture—and a moving one—far more effective than the product of lantern and film across the street. Bitter Creek decided that of the two Tom Mullus was better fitted to be sheriff.

Colcord racked his brains for something to counteract the effect of the waffles and brought down to the Creek half a dozen minor pugilists, who battled for the benefit of a mere handful of spectators, while the rest of the camp watched Edna make fudge.

Colcord left the fight and went over to see what success the fudge maker was having. The room was packed with men solemnly masticating the toothsome compound, while Mullus made a speech.

They listened, as in duty bound, but all eyes were upon the trim little figure hovering over the stove at the end of the hall. She had impressed Mrs. Mulligan as assistant, and the ponderous figure of the elder woman made an excellent foil for the girl.

Edna looked up, with a smile, as Colcord entered and made his way to the stove. It was by no means his first visit, and she had come to like the frank, breezy man who at once was her brother's friend and rival.

"I'm perfectly happy," she whispered as she offered Colcord a plate of the sweets. "When we made fudge in a chafing dish I used to say that I hoped some day to be able to make all I wanted to. I've got my wish sooner than I expected."

"I wish I might have mine," retorted Colcord.

"You can't," was the prompt reply. "I'm going to elect Tom as sheriff. Perhaps if you are real good I'll elect you the next time."

"It's hard—so fight fudge," assented Colcord, with a laugh, "but there is still the home stretch to be run off. You wait and see."

Edna smiled as she shook her head in disapproval of the claim.

"The way to men's hearts is through their stomachs," she reminded.

"A lesson you have taught me," he admitted. "You have dealt me the trump card."

"I thought you told Tom you held it all along," she retorted.

"This is a new deal—and a new trump," he declared mysteriously. "You wait and see."

He would not explain further, and presently he made his way back to the picture theater, where the concluding bout was just over. It had been an expensive experiment, and Colcord reflected that if fudge could beat fighting in Bitter Creek he had already lost.

His trump card was a burgoo. Colcord was from Kentucky, and he had pinned his last faith on this savory stew, the weapon of the politician, the delight of voters for generations.

Two aged negroes were imported to superintend the making, and Colcord had selected a field on the outskirts of the town where the crowds would have to pass his rival's house on the way to the grounds.

The day before election was selected for the function, and all business was suspended by common consent—that every one might participate.

Colcord watched Mullus sharply for a counter move, but no announcement came, and, with a chuckle, Colcord assured himself that at last he had played a trump, and played it at a moment when it would save the game.

He made an early trip to the grounds where already the great stew was bubbling and seething in its caldron, Edna was in the yard in front of the shack her brother had taken when he had arranged for her coming, and he stopped to chat and brag a little on his success.

"I don't suppose that you'd care to come to the grounds," he said, "but you really ought to taste the burgoo. There is nothing else like it. I'll send or bring some over."

"I shall be delighted," was the demure reply, and Colcord rode on rather sorry that he had to while Edna's brother. It might reduce his chances of winning Edna, and that was even more important now than the office on which he had once set his heart.

It had been announced that the burgoo would be served at 2 o'clock, but it was well past that time when a single rider came to explain why the crowd had not shown up.

"Mullus is giving a lawn party," explained Colcord's friend. "There's a dancing floor laid down in his yard and a band from Silver City. You can't get a one past the place, for Miss Edna is dancing with all in turn. Looks as though we were beaten, Ben."

"I'm rather glad that we are," was the unexpected reply as Colcord turned to give an order.

Some time later the guests at the lawn party were surprised to see Colcord drive up. In the wagon box were the two negroes and the caldron of burgoo.

"I promised to bring you some," explained Colcord as he approached Edna, "but as no one else seemed to want any I brought all of it. It may help out with the refreshments. It's rather a cold day for a lawn party, and the hot stew will be appreciated."

"Splendid!" cried Edna. "If you will drive round the house I'll show you where you can have it served. We only have cakes and lemonade."

She led the way to the back of the house, where the two cooks unloaded Colcord's addition to the refreshments and prepared to serve it. Colcord made the best use of his time, and when he appeared in the front yard again he approached Mullus.

"Tom," he said, "you can be sheriff, for I'm going to be your brother-in-law. I told you that I would win, but I didn't realize that my trump card would be the one you held."

A Hungry Mexican Shark.

Pursued by a nine foot shark, which when they abandoned their boat at the shore put his front fins on the edge of the boat and ate the fish therein as a pig would eat out of a trough until in its greed it swallowed a big hook thrown into the pile of fish, is the story told by several fishermen and people who saw the windup of the affair. The fishermen were returning to port with their sloop filled to the gunwales with fish when they noticed a great fish pursuing them and rapidly gaining on them, although still about 1,000 feet away. They hurried to the pier, where in terror they scrambled out of the boat. The shark, for such the fish proved to be, followed them and immediately wounded part way into the boat, where he began devouring great quantities of fish in single mouthfuls. The fishermen hurriedly secured a shark hook, which they threw in with the fish. The shark, after a mouthful or two, took the hook into his mouth along with several fish and swallowed it. A crowd of people had gathered by this time, and all lent a hand in pulling the monster in.—Mexican Herald.

The Meeting and the Parting.

They had met by chance at Atlantic City. They were strangers to each other, but he was convinced that she was a southern girl of high caste, and she no doubt believed him to be a New York man of money.

"You are from New York, aren't you?" she abruptly asked when they had paused for a moment after a stroll along the beach.

"Yes," he answered, determined to reveal himself in his true station. "I live in East Sixteenth street, where I grovel among my fellow clerks on $10 a week. But you—you are a southern lady of social distinction and"

"No," she coldly rejoined; "I live in East Sixteenth street among the clerks also."

"Anywhere near 258?" he faintly asked.

"Next door—258."

Then they parted.—New York Times.

BEST EGG PRESERVATIVE.

Lard Is Now Preferred by Many Foreign Experts.

Italian and French experts have of late days become convinced that lard as an egg preservative is to be highly commended. Dr. Campanini, an Italian agricultural authority, after reviewing the various known means of preserving eggs—by salt water, limewater, silicate of potash, vaseline and cold storage—described his lard experiments, which showed better results than all others. His theory is that to preserve eggs some system must be adopted that will absolutely prevent the exchange between the air outside and the inside of the egg, for it is this continual exchange that causes putrefaction. Dr. Campanini selected perfectly fresh eggs and covered them with lard so as effectually to stop up all the pores. The shells were thus rendered impermeable, and the exchange of air was prevented, the obstruction of the pores not permitting the evaporation of the water.

The whites and yellows of the eggs retained their colors perfectly, and the taste was not modified in the slightest degree. When properly coated with lard, not too thickly, the eggs are put in baskets or boxes on a bed of tow or fine odorless shavings and so arranged that there will be no point of contact between them; otherwise a mold will develop and putrefaction result. The packing room should be perfectly dry, the question of temperature not being important. By this process Dr. Campanini kept a quantity of eggs for a whole year through a very hot summer and a very cold winter, and they were perfectly preserved. Some authorities take exception to the smearing of eggs with fat or lard. Limewater, on the other hand, is strongly advocated by Canadian poultry experts.

RAISING DUCKS.

These Fowls Require Treatment Different From the Ordinary.

An authority on ducks says that they require different care from other fowls, and especially chickens. The same care and feed that will produce good results with chickens are not good for ducks. They require vegetables, animal matter and a good supply of green food, as well as plenty of water for drinking purposes where they are not allowed to run to a stream. They are good layers when fed and handled properly, and as a seller on the market the duck is in good demand at all times.

Pekin ducks are great layers, but are of no account as mothers; consequently, if they cease laying and remain on the nest, shut them up, feed them well for a few days, and when they are turned loose they will soon begin to lay again. As they will do this the season through from early March till late in November in warm latitudes with only a little rest in midsummer, a large flock can be raised from a very few to begin with. If one does not care for eggs later than the summer months the ducks may be picked, the feathers being a source of considerable profit, whether kept for one's own use or sold, but the ducks must not be picked during the period eggs are wanted.

While ducks will usually commence to lay in February, it is not advisable to begin hatching too soon. Dampness is more fatal to young ducks than anything else, and early in the spring it requires considerably more work to look after them than later on, after the weather becomes more settled. For the reason that they make better mothers and bear the necessary confinement better than ducks it is best to hatch the first brood under hens. Fear keeps them confined until the ducks are well fledged. There need be but little, if any, loss, and after the ducklings get well started to feathering they are quite hardy and can be turned out to look out for themselves. If given good care for the first ten days, there are few fowls that can be raised with less trouble.

Off With the Old Love.

A prominent Chicago lawyer tells of an amusing incident which he witnessed subsequent to a certain breach of promise suit in which he had acted as the defendant's attorney. The two were standing talking when they were joined by a third man, a friend of the client and an acquaintance of the lawyer. The third man had been out of town for some little time.

"Hello, old man, what are you looking so blue about?" the newcomer demanded as they shook hands.

"Oh, I've had a little hard luck. I've got to pay Miss Blank $5,000 on account of a breach of promise judgment," was the disconsolate reply.

"Say, I'm glad to hear that, old fellow," the friend exclaimed fervently, seizing the dejected one's hand and shaking it vigorously.

"Glad to hear it! I've got to pay that money, I tell you! What do you mean?" the other demanded in astonishment.

"Just that, my boy. It will be just about enough for us to set up housekeeping on. Miss Blank and I are to be married next month, you know."

"As a man soweth so shall he reap." That is the great truth that is pictured in this great story, in scenes that are intense with action and thrilling with dramatic surprises. It grips, holds, fascinates. Two men, one strong, the other weak, and one noble woman are the leading characters and they are drawn with a sure hand. The love element is there also, sweet and uplifting.

Here is a story about which the critics are generally agreed. "Powerful," "thrilling," "intense," "dramatic," are some of the terms used to describe it. It is filled with startling climaxes and the character painting is done with artistic skill.

It will be published in this paper and every reader who begins it will wait eagerly for each succeeding installment.

Sweet apples will cook better and have a more delicious flavor if a little lemon juice or pure cider vinegar is added.

If lettuce is kept for several hours it should be laid on a wet towel and placed on the cellar floor or in the refrigerator.

VOL. 25. NUMBER 51 | CHARLEVOIX, MICHIGAN, WEDNESDAY, DECEMBER 16, 1908 | PRICE $1.50 PER YEAR

LETTER FROM CALIFORNIA

Our Correspondent not Very Much Impressed With State

ALL AFTER EASTERN SUCKERS

Interesting Description of Visit to a Vineyard

One of the Most Beautiful Sights in the World—Price of Land is very High—Life of Farm Hands.

Tulare, Cal., December 6, 1908.
My Dear COURIER and its Readers:

I often think of you all so far away, in the snow and icebound land, with your winter sports and sleigh bells ringing and wish I could look out and see a well equiped portland with bells galore dash past, but no, all the bells I shall be able to hear are the ones the newsboy have attached to his saddle as he delivers the San Francisco Call every evening. I am tempted to ask him to put a whole strand on his horse Christmas day so I shall know when Christmas comes, as all the days are mostly the same here-only Sunday you hear the church bells which breaks the monotony, just a little. I never lived in a state before where there was no Sunday law, and no wonder California is considered such a wicked place.

I shall be glad when the time come for a mountain trip. I am told that Michigan weather prevails there. (I mean in the mountains.) It has always been my nature to love the country, so naturally I have learned more about the country and its ways, than I have of town. Country life is the life for me, but not in this country. To be gin with this certainly is the dirtiest country I was ever in. The prices here for land or anything else is as high as Mt. Whitney, and you all know how high that is.

I will tell you how some of the ranchers conduct their ranches. The largest ranches are owned mostly by the richest class of men, who hire a man and his wife to live on the ranch and act as managers. The ranch must be irrigated at certain seasons of the year in order to insure crops of any kind. Remember water is one of the principal factors of ranch life without it you might as well be out of exisiance. There are irrigation companies, when the water comes down from the mountains and then again they irrigate from wells, or what is commonly called pumping plants, for instance, Glenoak ranch of three hundred and twenty acres has a plant costing $4,000. it has a cement pipe line with canvas hose system for distributing ditches.

The industries of ranching is mostly alfalfa growing and dairying (stock raising) fruit and vinyards. Alfalfa is grown for the seed as well as for feed. This year the average yield of seed to the acre is one sack, a sack of seed weighs 170 pounds and at fifteen cents a pound means $25.50 per acre. This represents only a portion of the yield from the land, as two crops of hay are cut from the same land and after the seed crop is off it is used for pasture land for about five months, or until the first of February. An alfalfa ranch of six hundred acres has three large artesian wells which keep the ranch irrigated and supplies enough natural gas for their lights and fuel and to operate a gasoline engine. Right here is a little item worth mentioning. It should be taken into consideration that the soil that will produce anyone of the crops mentioned above, is valued at from one hundred to two hundred and fifty dollars per acre, say nothing of the cost of pumping plants, buildings, fences, stock, engines and other machinery need-ed to run these ranches. It means money in hard cash before you start out. Some have come here from the east with bright prospects and given their all in part payment for a ranch and then the crops and the next payment are shy: but the real estate men lack that virtue and so the easterner (or sucker as he is called here) bites the tempting bait put out for him, and is landed high and dry by the real estate angler. By the way the real estate men are not the only anglers here, the doctors are good at it too. This is the story of W. M. Hartford of Chicago, special traveler for the International Harvester Co., the company have been sending him here for the past six years, I asked him for his opinion of this part of the west. He laughed and said, "I would not exchange my home county in Wisconsin for the whole state of California. Then he told me of the misfortune he had of contracting California's most fashionable disease appendicitis. He was taken to a hospital and operated upon forthwith and when considered convalescent he ask for his bill. He said the statement caused him almost to faint, only $700. Just think of it, $700. I made up my mind that Michigan doctors were good enough for me.

Well I have been side-tracked

ANTI-SALOON LEAGUE

Will Establish Headquarters at Traverse City

For Northern Michigan Under Charge of Rev. T. P. Bauer, January 1.

Information has just been given out regarding the opening of district headquarters by the Michigan Anti-saloon league in Traverse City. At a recent meeting of the headquarters committee of the state league in Detroit, it was decided to create another district in the state, and a call was extended to Rev. T. P. Bauer of Knox, Indiana, to assume control of the district.

Mr. Bauer will begin his new duties about the first of the new year, and shortly after will locate with his family in Traverse City. He will have general supervision of all the northern part of the lower peninsula, beginning with Manistee and Wexford counties and running straight across the state to the east. Mr. Bauer is somewhat acquainted in Traverse City where he assisted in the local option campaign conducted by the Anti-saloon league a year ago.

He comes well equipped for the work, having served as principal of the Monroe high school for eleven years and then entering the ministry of the Disciple church. A little less than a year ago he accepted a call to Knox, where he has been serving the church since that time. The anti-saloon league work in the state is developing so rapidly that it is necessary to have representatives of the league located in various parts of the state in order to better facilitate the work.

Assistant Superintendent R. N. Hollaapie has the general oversight of the entire western part of the state, and Mr. Bauer coming into the work will relieve him of some of the work that it has been difficult for him to do. Mr. Bauer will probably have charge of the local option campaigns the coming spring in Benzie, Kalkaska, Emmet, Alcona and Iosco counties.

Octagon Club Meetings.

The Octagon Club held their last meeting at the home of Miss Mattie Bedford, Thursday night. Monday night a special meeting was held at the home of Miss Marion Harris, which ended up with a handkerchief shower for Miss Linda Cook. Next meeting will be held with the Misses Pearl and Ruby Emory, Thursday night.

It is unnecessary to state that an elegant time was had at all these meetings, as the Octagons never have anything else.

LOU J. BEAUCHAMP

Has had a Remarkable Career in in Many Lines in Life

Will Give the Next Entertainment of Lecture Course, January 6.

Lou J. Beauchamp has lived a peculiar life. Losing his mother when a babe, he spent his early years of his life among the Creek, Choctow and Cherokee Indians, and uses many of the customs of the tribes as illustrations in his lectures. Denied school and college privileges, he was taught his letters by a young girl, at once became an omnivorous reader, and at the age of fourteen was contributing prose and poetry to New York papers, and at twenty was one of the editors of a noted Cincinnati daily newspaper.

He has traveled one million miles in the old world and the new, investigating the lives of the underworld in the slums and dens of the world's greatest cities, writing his experiences for the press. Because of these unique experiences he brings to the platform gifts that have been given to few others, and his love and sympathy for humanity enable him to use these experiences in his lectures in a way to benefit and bless his hearers.

He has written books that have been translated into foreign tongues and of which many editions have been sold, and his poems of child-life are found in many collections of poetry, the repertoire of readers, and in scrap-books all over the land.

It is doubtful if any man on the platform causes as much laughter in an evening as does Mr. Beauchamp, yet all the time he is teaching truths that send his auditors out into the world better men and women, determined to do more than ever before to bring sunshine and song into the lives of those with who they come in contact.

WHY NOT BUY THE BEST

Avoid the Purchase of Cheap Inferior Imitations

You are certainly deceived if you are misled by slang and blarney to buy an inferior article because it is cheap.

We do not guarantee our records not to break, if you hit them with an axe, (any more than we could a violin not to) but we do guarantee them to produce the finest music possible to any phonograph, without the metallic rattle that accompanies a record that is hard enough not to break when thrown on the floor.

As usual we lead with the very best of its kind and others follow with cheap imitations.

The Edison phonograph, as all those posted know, is the best phonograph in the world, with the reputation of its maker, Thomas A. Edison, behind it, and just as surely the Victor Talking machine is miles ahead of any other talking machine made, so it is considered in a class by itself by all who know.

The great music houses in the country, like Lyon & Healy in Chicago and Grinnell Bros. in Detroit, handle no others but these.

We urge you to investigate the matter and listen to the music produced by each instrument before you buy a cheap metallic imitation thinking you have something "just as good" as an instrument world famous for sweet music.

Yours very truly,
F. N. Chapel & Co.

INTERESTING ADDRESS

Was that Given by Colon C. Lillie at Dairyman's Meeting

Held at Court House Tuesday—Will Meet Again in Four Weeks

The Charlevoix County Dairymen's Association held a well attended meeting at the court house yesterday which was addressed by Colon C. Lillie Deputy State Dairy and Food Commission.

Mr. Lillie's address was a splendid talk on the subject, taking up the different phases of the dairy industry. Mr. Lillie said it was the most dependable branch of farming known assuring a steady income to all who were engaged in the same, which could be said of no other branch of farming.

Good prices were sure to be maintained for the products of the of dairy, as the increase of production did not keep pace with the increase of population. To secure the best prices, however, the standard of quality must be raised and the consumer assured that he was receiving milk from cows that were free from tuberculosis and were kept in sanitary, well lighted and ventilated stables.

Co-operation in selling was urged by the speaker, as of far more importance than co-operation in buying. The question of the cost of production was of prime importance, and the successful dairyman must make a study of feeding values.

It was decided to meet again in four weeks at the same place.

BAD FIRE AT ALANSON

Six Buildings Destroyed—Loss Twenty Three Thousand Dollars

Fire starting in a doctor's office Friday night, wiped out six buildings at Alanson and for a time it was feared the whole town would go up in smoke. Petoskey was appealed to for aid, but as that town has no fire engine, no relief could be sent. There is no fire protection at Alanson, but a bucket brigade, and the efforts of the volunteers were of no avail in stopping the rush of the flames until they had wiped out all the buildings for a block on the north side of River street.

The wires are down at Alanson and all the details that are obtainable come by way of Conway or Oden.

The buildings that were destroyed are as follows:

The White building occupied by O. W. Wreese's general store; the Parker drug store; a grocery and a meat market owned by I. G. Saunders; the residence of Mr. White, owner of the White building, one shed.

The loss it is estimated, will amount to between $5,000 to $8,000 on the buildings, and on the contents to $12,000 or $15,000. The property was only partially insured.

The buildings were all of frame and they made a hot fire that lighted up the country for miles around. Alanson is a lumbering town on Crooked river, about a mile from its source at Crooked lake. The buildings burned constituted the greater part of the business section of the town.

The postoffice was located in the Saunders grocery building.

WILL OPEN MONDAY

The New Majestic Theater a Credit to Its Builders.

The new Majestic Theater will open its door to the public next Monday evening, with a highclass entertainment. The contractors, Munyon & Co., of this city, have completed a building which is a fine tribute to their skill and both outside and inside. The management promises that they will at all times have only high class entertainments to give their patrons.

GEORGE B. HORTON IS DEFEATED

For Master of Michigan State Grange by Twelve Votes

N. P. HULL THE NEW MASTER

Is Well Known Among the Farmers of the State

Grange Will Work with Anti-saloon League Next Year will Meet at Traverse City

The Michigan State Grange met in annual session at Saginaw last week, with over one thousand delegates and visitors in attendance, the sessions being held at the new Auditorium. Reports of the secretary and treasurer showed a total of 749 granges fully paid up to the state grange and enough active granges to bring the number up to 800, with a total membership of over 50,000.

After the reading of the master's address, Tuesday evening was taken up with a reception given by the citizens of Saginaw, and listening to an address by Congressman Handy of Delaware.

Wednesday the committees were announced and further reports of officers were heard, after which the lecturer's conference was held, under the direction of Mrs. F. D. Saunders, State Lecturer. At this session an invitation was given by Traverse City for the next session, Hon. George L. Crisp presenting the claims of the northern city. Kalamazoo also gave an invitation. Up to this time the election of officers had been the principal line of discussion among the hundreds of patrons present, Worthy Master Horton and Overseer Hull being candidates for the position of Master, and, with the exception of secretary there being contests for every position.

Thursday the time was taken up with election, Hull winning for Master over Horton by twelve votes. Horton retires after a service of sixteen years, during which time the order has increased its membership from nine to over fifty thousand, and with a treasury of nothing to nearly $50,000 surplus.

For overseer, the principal candidates were Charles A. C. VanDeventer of Gratiot, and Thomas McInnerbury of Sanilac, VanDeventer winning on the second ballot by a vote of 192 to 106.

Miss Jennie Buell proved an easy winner for Lecturer over Mrs. O. J. C. Woodman and Mrs. Ida Bishop. L. P. Strong of Kalamazoo, Frank Conard of Branch, and W. H. Robertson of Newaygo, were candidates for treasurer, Conrad winning out easily. J. W. Hutchins received a practically unanimous vote for secretary.

For members of the executive committee warm contests took place. George B. Horton being chosen over A. E. Palmer, who was a candidate to succeed himself. Thomas H. McNaughton and L. W. Oviatt defeating B. E. Kies and W. L. Taylor who were candidates to succeed themselves. M. H. Burton was re-elected. The rest of the official list is made up as follows, Steward, T. E. Niles; chaplain, Mrs. O. J. C. Woodman; gatekeeper, G. A. Whitbeck; assistant steward, Leon Haybarker; ceres, Mrs. A. J. Kellogg; flora, Mrs. Ella Morrice; pomona, Miss Nellie Mayo; lady assistant steward, Mrs. Ida Haybarker.

N. P. Hull of Diamondale, the new master, is one of the best known farmers in Michigan with whom he is very popular, as an institute worker and has been overseer four terms. He is connected with the state dairy and food department, and, with his brother, is proprietor of the Silver Creek dairy farm.

Neighborhood Notes

Charles Deverney and Vego Johnson, twenty year old youths, were arrested last week on a charge of attempting to extort $60 from Charles Blanchard, a well known resident or Elk Rapids, by means of a Black Hand letter. Sheriff Kittle of Bellaire, made the arrest.

James Johnson, a farmer sixty-one years of age, residing four miles southern of Alden, in Kalkaska county, committed suicide by taking paris green last week. Johnson had been on a spree for some time and had been to Chicago, Grand Rapids and Traverse City, returning to Kalkaska Saturday, where he bought a pound of paris green, and, stating that he was going home and kill his wife and himself, hired a liverymun to take him there. He started for home and tried to get into the house, but his wife had heard him coming and awoke other members of the family who frustrated his plans. He took the paris green, washed it down with whiskey and died shortly afterwards.

Sunday, December 6, while out rabbit hunting with his brother Forrest and cousin, Harrison Crow, Ora Plum of Alden, was instantly killed by the accidental discharge of his shot gun. The three boys had been hunting about two hours when the accident occurred only about eighty rods from his home. In getting over a fence Ora stepped on one of the lower boards, which broke. He fell, and in going down struck the gun in such manner as to cock the hammer of one of the barrels and discharged the other, the contents striking him just over the heart. He fell over the fence, but by taking hold of a board arose to his feet, standing erect a couple of seconds, then throwing up his hands he said "Oh my," and fell dead.

Rev. Richard Sidebotham, of Lapeer, recently a missionary in Korea, in attempting to start a fire in the kitchen stove a few days ago, caused an explosion which blew the stove to pieces and set fire to the house. A bicyclist passing the house was thrown from his wheel, and was just in time to drag the preacher from the burning kitchen.

Mr. Sidebotham received injuries which will scar him for life if they do not prove fatal. He was a former Kalkaska citizen, his father having at one time been pastor there. Later advices state that the injuries of Mr. Sidebotham proved fatal.

This is the punishment meted out by the state railway commission to Watson Wesley, the Port Huron business man who rode on a Pere Marquete railway train without paying fare:

"The commission hereby orders Watson Wesley to pay to the agent of the Pere Marquette Railroad company at Port Huron, the sum of $1.29, that being the fare from Ubly to Port Huron."

The commission was satisfied that the conductor did not willfully permit Wesley to ride without paying fare and was inclined not to impose the penalty of from $100 to $500 as provided by law. The commission declares that the railway companies should devise some method by which conductors will not be required to depend upon their memories alone, to determine whether passengers have paid the required fare. Passengers are also counselled to procure tickets to avoid errors on the part of conductors which may render them subject to the penalties.

Battling for hours in a forty mile northwest wind and a terrible sea, Monday, the schooner Belle, Dan Ludwig, of Benton Harbor, captain, parted her tow line when off Big Point Sauble and drifted ashore. The schooner was in tow of the barge F. W. Fletcher from Manistee to Chicago and so heavy was the sea that the steamer made Lndington only with the greatest difficulties.

The vessels were two hours out from port when the Belle waterlogged, the tow line parting, in the heavy sea it was impossible to pick up the tow again. The Belle showed distress signals and the Fletcher came about, standing as near as possible. Captain Anderson of the Fletcher called for volunteers to man the lifeboat and take off the crew of the Belle. Four men responded Carl Johnson, Torwald Johnson, O. Hansen and Jens Jenson. The Belle's crew, unable to clear the wreck in the schooner's own lifeboat due to frozen tackle, cut the masts to steady the boat not knowing that the Fletcher would risk her men to save them.

The Belle went ashore near Big Point Sauble and will prove a total loss.

Farm and Garden

AN INEXPENSIVE ICEHOUSE.

No Reason Why the Farmer Should Be Without It.

An icehouse and cool room may be constructed as follows: Excavate a half cellar in a perfectly dry place, from which the surface slopes (or may be made to slope) in all directions, so as to prevent danger of moisture from want of drainage. A stone or brick wall is built around this and laid in hydraulic cement. The floor is cemented. A frame or other building is built upon this basement to contain the ice. Twelve feet square will be large enough for a moderate sized family, as an icehouse of that size will hold about twenty loads or tons of ice.

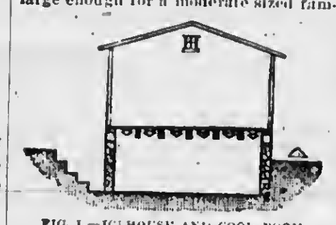

FIG. I.—ICEHOUSE AND COOL ROOM.

The main point is the division between the icehouse and the room below it. This must be perfectly air tight and a moderately good conductor of heat. The floor may be laid in the following manner:

Beams of sufficient strength are laid across and the ends well bedded in cement. A floor of zinc sheets is then laid upon the beams, the sheets being closely nailed to the beams upon strips of rubber sheeting to make the joints water and air tight. The beams should be dressed smoothly. The zinc sheets are bent, as shown in the illustration (Fig. 2). This is for the purpose of causing the moisture, which will condense upon the underside of this ceiling, to flow downward to the lower angle, where it will drip. The drip is caught in the little gutters of zinc shown in the figure attached to the ceiling and is carried off by a proper drain. With this water will also be carried off much of the impurity of the atmosphere, and if very little ventilation is given there will be little condensation and the air will be kept dry. This point must be well attended to, as the danger of excessive ventilation is very great. The beams and zinc ceiling should be painted with white paint—lead and oil.

Above the zinc ceiling a thin layer of dry, fresh sawdust should be laid smoothly, and a floor of matched pine boards should be laid upon this and thoroughly coated with melted pitch. This floor should slope a little to one corner so as to draw the waste water from the ice there, and an S trap drain should be laid from that to carry off the water into the drain above mentioned. The usual layer of sawdust is laid upon this floor to prevent too rapid conveyance of heat from below to the ice above. Small double windows should be used in the cool chamber below to prevent access of heat from the outside, and they should be tilted air tight. Ventilation should be provided for by means of a wooden pipe with a slide, by which the opening can be regulated. By carefully regulating the ventilation the air may be kept dry.

THE FARMER'S BOY.

In Many Instances He Has a Mistaken Idea of City Life.

The great trouble with country boys is that they are not aware of the circumstances under which the city boy is compelled to live and work if he has to earn his living by the sweat of his brow. The idea held up to the country boy is to go to town and get a nice, easy, soft snap such as So-and-so has. How many of them do it? Not one in a thousand. Far more go there to find work in some close, stagnant mill, to sweat amid the fumes of steam or tobacco smoke, or perhaps in some iron mill or foundry, surrounded by the curses of their fellow men, toil out a weary day of eleven or thirteen hours and after the day is over go home—and to such a home! Up some little back street in a bandbox built of brick and named a house more than likely our workman has his home, there to pass away the weary hours of the night amid the heat and stagnation of probably a filthy street only a few feet wide, hot, close and dirty. In any large city on some sultry night one may see the workmen and their families in these little narrow city streets stretched about the steps and pavements in all conditions. These are not slums either, but fairly respectable neighborhoods.

To such a condition of life many of our country boys have gone, and many more are today preparing to go. Fat pay and big pay envelopes? Not in these times. If our city laborer averages $12 a week he is a lucky man. Tens of thousands get less rather than more. Country boy, before you make the change, in the name of that country you have been taught to hold in reverence, look and do not leap! If you understand farming there are just as many chances on the land to be worked out as there are in the city.

This is a great country, and if you do not like the kind of farming you are working at there are many others. If you belong to a family that follows the grind, grind system of all work and no play, when you reach your majority and start for yourself follow out an easier system. Do not condemn country life just because you have been unfortunate enough to be brought up in the home of a man who knows nothing but grind. Do not overlook the fact that if such a man was your boss in the city he would grind your life away. Long, long before you were twenty-one years old you would be occupying some six feet of green turf, where at last you would not hear the dreaded call and curse of the boss.

Country life may not be and probably is not what many would like to color it; but, all things being equal, it is far preferable to city life. That is just where it comes in. City life is never compared with country life on an equal plane. Remember that if you must work in the country for a living you will have to work in the city for one, too, and if you possess the ability in yourself to rise above the ordinary workman in the city that same ability will carve out a home for you in the country. Look before you leap, consider all things, and if you are sure you can better yourself in the city go; if not, stay on the old farm.

Plowing For Grape Leaf Hopper.

Plowing is sometimes done by California vineyardists during the winter season for the purpose of destroying the grape leaf hoppers. This is partly based upon the supposition that the eggs may be in the leaves or in the ground or that the adult hoppers are in some way killed in the operation. So far as having a direct effect in destroying the hoppers is concerned, plowing is of little avail. The only ones that will be killed are a few that may not be disturbed from their resting places among the leaves or otherwise accidentally buried by the plow. During the cold or rainy days there may be a few thus turned under, but ordinarily they are active enough to escape readily before the plow.

Plowing, however, may have an indirect effect on the hoppers by depriving them of food or of suitable sheltering places during unfavorable weather conditions, and if this practice is generally carried out in a neighborhood it will no doubt result in reducing the numbers somewhat. However, a field may be free from hoppers during the winter, but this is not necessarily an indication of freedom from spring infestation. The insects are more generally distributed in the winter season, but the bulk of them will usually be found in the vineyard or on the vegetation of the borders immediately surrounding it. They may come in, therefore, from vineyards closely adjoining, so that plowing a single vineyard may be of little help. When the plowing is done in a single vineyard or over a small area it is likely to result simply in driving them into other fields where there is a better food supply. Once in these other situations they may or may not come back into the vineyard where they were originally.

Market Hogs.

What kind of hog will bring the most money in the market, and what breed will make the best market hog? These are questions hard to answer definitely. Markets vary as to the class of hogs that will sell at the top. When lard is at a premium the hog that yields a large amount of lard is the market topper, and that means the heavy, thick, fat hog. When lard is below other products this kind of hog sells for less than the light weight which will make handy pork loins and good hams without too much fat on them. Taking one year with another in eastern markets, the hog of 180 to 200 pounds will hit the top oftener than any other weight. In western markets hogs of around 250 pounds will probably average best. Sometimes lighter or heavier hogs will outsell these grades, according to the fluctuations in price of the product. In summer hog prices cover the widest range because there is the greatest difference in the yield of product at this season. In the winter all hogs are corn fed and yield more uniform quantities of product. In summer many are grassers that make low yields and of inferior quality to corn fed hogs. A 200 pound hog that dresses 81 per cent yields 160 pounds, one that dresses 75 per cent yields 150 pounds, and one that dresses 70 per cent yields only 140 pounds—an enormous difference in a carload of hogs, which the buyer makes allowance for in buying them on foot. As a rule, of late the best hogs have been the cheapest on the hooks at the top of the market because they have yielded so much more product than the others, which looked cheaper to the inexperienced observer. As to the breed that killers like best, probably more would answer Berkshire than any other breed. But hogs are what killers want, and the kind they want will top the market, whether black, white, red or spotted.

People who have little knowledge are always willing to scatter that little as far as they can.—Chicago Record-Herald.

HORTON IS DEFEATED

C. A. VanDeventer is a prominent young farmer of Gratiot county.

Miss Jennie Buell was secretary of the state grange for a number of years and is a popular speaker and writer on topics connected with the farm home. T. H. McNaughton is a former member of the executive committee and last fall was elected state representative from Kent county. L. W. Ovitt is a well known farmer of Bay county.

At Friday's session a resolution pledging the support of the grange to the anti-saloon league was carried with but three dissenting votes. The convention reaffirmed its declaration in favor of a state wide prohibition law.

The prohibition resolution was carried after much discussion. One member objected to its adoption, saying he had heard rumors of graft in anti-saloon circles.

As a mark of appreciation, the grange presented George B. Horton and Mrs. F. D. Saunders, the retiring master and lecturer with gold watches.

The meeting was pressed for time and several matters could not be given the proper consideration. Master Horton called the attention of the meeting to the good roads question, in his annual report. In this connection, the members think that some plan should be adopted whereby persons in all parts of the state would get the benefit of good roads, instead of improving the highways here and there. The committee recommended that a special tax be levied on automobiles this money to be spent for good roads.

The meeting adopted a resolution which says that no liquor should be sold or any gambling devices installed on agricultural grounds. A clause, which asks that the legislature forfeit the appropriation to any state fair if these methods are employed, was added.

The meeting also recommended the placing of a tax on all iron and copper ore that leaves the state, this to be in addition to the present property tax; postal savings banks and the parcels posts were indorsed; the committee on public utilities favors a trial of government regulation of railroads, and, if this fails, to ask for government ownership; the action in the past of the grange regarding the initiative and referendum and recall was indorsed, together with the Torrena system of land transfers; a resolution was passed favoring a specific tax on mortgages which should be paid when recorded; the plan for the state-wide primary law for all officers and all parties was endorsed; a resolution was passed asking the legislature to pass a general law which shall allow each county to adopt the fee system of paying its officers if the electors so decide.

A resolution was passed demanding economy by the state administration. Taxes are being increased, the grange members realize, in order to meet the present deficit.

TOUR OF INSPECTION.

Value of a Day Spent With a State Highway Commissioner.

ROADMAKING POINTS GAINED.

Right Way to Sprinkle a Macadam Roadway — Three Wise Drainage Rules—Forming a Subgrade—Gravel and Telford Road Construction.

"We start every morning at exactly half past 7 o'clock," said State Highway Commissioner James H. Macdonald of Connecticut on a recent evening when the writer was arranging for a day's trip in the official automobile over the highways which have made that state famous for its good roads. It was then 11 o'clock or later, and the commissioner had just returned home, so we anticipated a strenuous tomorrow. Promptly at the hour appointed all were ready for the start.

The improved roads over which we traveled have moderate grades and smooth surfaces. Though some of them were built a dozen years ago and have never been treated with oil or tar or any special preparation, they were in perfect condition except for some few spots where the autos are doing their destructive work, and the need of a little trap rock dust to protect the second course of stone is apparent.

One of the first points noticed on this trip was that the state roads outside of the villages were smoother than those connecting with them that are under the care of the municipalities, says Charles S. Long in the Good Roads Magazine. Within one town the commissioner called attention to a sprinkling wagon that was forcing the water down on the macadam and flushing the fine dust to the gutters instead of spraying it gently and leaving it to form a binder to the road. That kind of sprinkling tends to ruin a macadam roadway by removing the surfacing material, just as the motor car and the wind remove it.

Speaking of a stretch of road that extended like a ribbon of asphalt until the perspective brought it to a point at the farthest limit of vision, the commissioner explained that it was constructed of gravel and had been surfaced with trap rock dust. Many of the dirt and gravel roads of the state are being treated in this way. They are graded and rolled and then, after a year or so, are given a surfacing of trap rock splinters and dust, which abound in the state. The state furnishes annually a certain amount of broken stone or screenings to each town, and along the sides of the roads are to be seen piles of this material surmounted by signboards bearing the words "State Property."

When a road of whatever kind of construction is to be built with state aid in Connecticut the plans are drawn in the commissioner's office in the capitol building at Hartford. An engineer is then sent to establish the grades along the proposed road. These grades are verified from time to time by the engineer, and stakes which may have been displaced in the prosecution of the work by the contractor are reset, so that the finished road shall conform exactly to the original specifications.

Drainage is attended to first on the principle of the commissioner's famous three "keeps"—viz, "Keep the water off the road, keep it out of the road, keep it from under the road." This having been attended to, the necessary bridges and culverts are arranged for. These are being constructed of concrete as fast as possible.

Then comes the forming of the subgrade. The contractor is required in building any kind of road to remove all loam, roots and vegetable matter from the proposed travel way of the road and also everything of a spongy nature. If there is not material enough to bring the subgrade to the height required the contractor must supply the deficiency. If there is an overplus from cuts it must be disposed of according to directions. The subgrade is rolled thoroughly with a ten ton steam roller and brought to the exact contour of the finished road surface. Importance is laid upon the manner of building the shoulder. In fact, importance is laid upon every step in the progress of construction, for the commissioner says that there are no "little things" in roadmaking, and the contractor is required to extend the shoulder several inches on to the travelway and thoroughly roll or ram the material down to the established grade and then cut it back in the line. This renders it firm and unyielding to the metaling.

In the construction of a gravel road it is specified that "the first course shall consist of good, clean gravel, not less than 80 per cent of gravel, the balance material that will bind. No loam will be allowed.

"The gravel shall range from pea stone to three inches in its longest diameter. Care must be taken to have the gravel as near uniform in quality as possible, avoiding sand, the small sizes to predominate. The gravel shall be spread on uniformly and rolled down, after which a sprinkler shall be used and this course wet down and then rolled again and continue rolling until it is firm and thoroughly compacted. This course shall be three inches in depth when complete after rolling.

"After the first course the second course shall be put on, and the same method shall be pursued in its treatment in every particular as described for the first course, except that the size of the gravel shall not be larger than will go through a two inch screen. This course shall be three inches in depth after rolling.

"After the contractor has taken out all wheel and foot marks on the second course and has finished rolling he shall then put on the last or finishing course, which shall consist of 60 per cent of stone and 40 per cent of binding material. No stone shall exceed one inch longest diameter. This course must be spread with shovels either from the wagon or from the gravel dumped on the shoulders. The contractor must not dump the loads of gravel on the road proper. This course after being spread uniformly shall be wet down and rolled, and the wetting and rolling shall be continued until the road is solid and firm and will not show the mark of hoof or wheel while driving over it."

There are many miles of gravel roads within the state of Connecticut which are as smooth—to use a term that is becoming familiar as applied to improved roads—as a billiard table, and when, after a year or so of traffic, they are given the surfacing of trap rock splinters it is difficult to note the difference in appearance from macadam. This construction affords a hard, smooth and durable surface.

On this official tour of inspection there was included a stretch of telford construction, where the travel path had been excavated to a depth of a foot below grade line, and then the large stone for the first or bed course was laid. In doing this class of work the commissioner requires that the bed stone shall be of the following dimensions: Six to ten inches in width, eight to eighteen inches in length and eight inches deep, placed by hand, broadest surface of depth of stone placed down and stones laid in courses across the road, all joints broken and all interstices chinked in and wedged with broken stone. All sharp points of stone must be broken off with the hammer to bring the surface of the bed stone true to grade. The bed stone should be laid up full and strong so as to allow for all settling in rolling. In no case will the contractor be allowed to use stone that is not up to all these requirements. After bed stone has been laid, chinked and broken off to grade the roller shall be run over the bed stone until it is firmly bedded and will not kick or rock under the roller. No nests of small stone will be allowed, nor will the contractor be allowed to use rotten stone.

"The second course shall be four inches over all after rolling and must be broken trap rock unless otherwise specified. The stone used for this course shall be from three-fourths of an inch to two inches longest diameter, mixed in the screens (not in the blast, the smaller sizes to predominate. The size of stone for this course must be strictly followed to the letter, no tailings will be allowed, and any departure from the size specified will be at the contractor's risk. The stone must be dumped on the sides of the road proper or on the bed stone foundation and be scattered with shovels to the required depth sufficient to roll down to four inches. The rolling shall be continued until the stones are thoroughly united, firm and solid under the roller.

"The top course shall be one inch thick when finished. Trap rock screenings, including dust (no screenings larger than one-half inch stone will be allowed), shall be used as a finishing course. The screenings after rolling has been done on the last course of broken stone shall be carted on the sides of the road proper and dumped at suitable intervals, after which all wheel tracks and foot marks of horses shall be carefully filled and then rolled down firmly. Then screenings shall be scattered dry over the surface so as to fill all interstices, and the roller shall be run over the surface so as to shake in the dust. Immediately after a sprinkling cart shall be used and the screenings washed in, after which more screenings must be added and sprinkled and rolled again, and the screenings, rolling and sprinkling must be continued until all the coarse stones have been covered and the interstices completely filled and the road is smooth and will shed water and measure in depth one inch of screenings for wearing surface. The contractor is not to be allowed to put on the screenings all at one time, but must spread them on as described above, and he is not allowed to deviate from the above treatment in any way. The contractor must not wet the screenings before they have been scattered on the broken stone, and, furthermore, they must be perfectly dry before they are put on the road."

It requires constant vigilance during the term of construction to insure value received in road building. And one who has traveled for a day at a time with several state highway commissioners appreciates that the office is not a sinecure.

J. Leahy, the eye specialist, while hunting near Newberry this fall killed a monstrous wolf. The party of which the doctor was one, had broken camp and were on their way to Newberry when the wolf came out into the road to gaze at Leahy, who was in advance of the team and the first shot told the story. The tracks of this wolf measured 6½ inches wide by 5¾ inches long.

Fall Care of Orchard.

In sections where the ground is very rough the orchard should not be cultivated, especially in the fall. In hilly sections where the ground does not freeze and where there is a great deal of rainfall during the winter the ground is apt to be mellowed by the cultivation, causing the best part of the soil to wash away during these winter rains. But in sections where the ground will freeze during the winter, in level locations, fall cultivation will prevent the soil from wasting away. To turn up the mellow ground to the action of the frost renders many of the unsoluble minerals plant food elements available for the trees, which is valuable in developing and maturing the fruit. Cultivate between the rows, allowing the ground to be reasonably porous, so the freezing will be as beneficial as possible, but the dirt must not be allowed to remain in large lumps, which will expose the roots of the trees to the cold weather.

FARMER'S CLUBS MEET

Michigan State Association at Lansing last Week

Work of Anti-saloon League Indorsed - A. L. Chandler Elected President

The Michigan State Association of Farmer's Clubs met at Lansing last week with a large attendance. The following important resolutions were adopted.

"That as the Michigan state fair held at Detroit has been run in the interests of the saloon, fakers and gamblers without adequate provisions for police protection be it resolved that this association recommend that the appropriation by the legislature for this fair be granted only on the understanding that these features shall be eliminated."

Public evils and abuses were shown no quarter. Every organized effort for the overthrow of the saloon was endorsed and the work of the Anti-saloon league recommended, especially the demand for the enactment of a local option law by townships and precincts. D. M. Beckwith of Howell, was named as a member of the executive board of the Anti-saloon league.

Among the resolutions adopted by the association is one favoring an anti-cigarette law and equal suffrage. Another resolution says: "We demand a full and fair trial for ex-State Treasurer Glazier and if he is found guilty we recommend that he be punished to the full extent of the law."

Civil service reform in the state service was recommended and a statewide primary election law for all parties favored.

The removing of the tariff on all building material was also recommended. Repeated efforts failed to induce the association to recommend the state highway department.

Resolutions meeting with strong favor were presented by the club extention committee with reference to the forming of a national club, with a broader work throughout the states and a delegate will be sent from the Michigan club to the farmers' national congress at its next session. Mrs. E. J. Cook of Owosso, and Mrs. L. D. Watkins of Manchester were elected honorary members.

Officers were elected as follows: President, A. L. Chandler, Owosso; Mrs. W. L. Cheney, Mason, secretary; treasurer, D. K. Hanna, Tuscola county; two members of the board of directors, W. H. Marks, St. Clair county; B. A. Holden, Oakland county.

The Publisher's Claims Sustained

UNITED STATES COURT OF CLAIMS

The Publishers of Webster's International Dictionary allege that it "is, in fact, the popular Unabridged thoroughly re-edited in every detail, and vastly enriched in every part, with the purpose of adapting it to meet the larger and severer requirements of another generation."

We are of the opinion that this allegation most clearly and accurately describes the work that has been accomplished and the result that has been reached. The Dictionary, as it now stands, has been thoroughly re-edited in every detail, has been corrected in every part, and is admirably adapted to meet the larger and severer requirements of a generation which demands more of popular philological knowledge than any generation that the world has ever contained.

It is perhaps needless to add that we refer to the dictionary in our judicial work as of the highest authority in accuracy of definition; and that in the future as in the past it will be the source of constant reference.

RECIPE MIXED OFTEN

Druggists Hear Much Praise for this Mixture

Lots of Men and Women Here had the Simple Home-made Mixture Prepared, says Druggists.

Some remarkable stories are being told about town and among the country people coming in of this simple home made mixture curing rheumatism and kidney trouble. Here is a recipe and directions for taking it; mix by shaking well in a bottle one-half ounce Fluid Extract Dandelion, one ounce of Compound Kargon, three ounces Compound Syrup Sarsaparilla. Take as a dose one teaspoonful after meals and at bedtime.

No change need be made in your usual diet, but drink plenty of good water.

This mixture has a peculiar tonic effect upon the kidneys; cleansing the clogged up pores of the eliminative tissues, forcing the kidneys to sift and strain from the blood the uric acid and other poisonous waste matter, overcoming rheumatism, bladder and urinary troubles in a short while.

A druggist here who has had hundreds of calls for these ingredients since the first announcement in the newspapers last October stated that the people who once try it "swear by it" especially those who have urinary and kidney trouble and suffer with rheumatism.

All the druggists in this neighborhood say they can supply the ingredients, which are easily mixed at home. There is said to be no better blood cleansing agent or system tonic known, and certainly none more harmless or simple to use.

A Bit of a Bull.

One day an Irishman was asked to come to work an hour earlier than usual. This he promised to do. Next morning he was an hour late.

"Shure, sor, I should have been no good if Oi'd come, as I was fast asleep."

Reversed.

"Yes," remarked the race horse, "all my achievements have been due simply to putting my best foot forward."

"Yes?" replied the mule. "Now, I find that I accomplish most by putting my best foot backward."—Philadelphia Press.

Courier Grange Column

Five Hundred Charlevoix County Patrons Will go to Traverse City in 1909

The session of the State grange, held at Saginaw last week, a full report which appears in our news columns was largely attended, and, as we have predicted resulted in new deal in the most important officers.

Brother Hull, our new master, is probably one of the best known farmers in Michigan, by reason of his experience as an institute worker, and his connection with the dairy and food department, as well as overseer of the State Grange, which he has held for the past eight years. Extremely popular, well versed in the order, young and ambitious, if a change were to be made, which was sure to come, no better choice could have been made.

Brother VanDeventer, the new overseer is a young Gratiot county farmer who will prove a worthy successor to Brother Hull. Sister Jennie Buell, as lecturer, needs no introduction to the patrons of Michigan and will make an ideal lecturer.

On the executive committee, of the new members, Brother Horton will be a grand adviser to Brother Hull, Brother McNaughton, has his previous experience to guide him and Brother Oviatt comes from a section never before represented.

Charlevoix county as well as all northern Michigan, is determined to make the Traverse City meeting in 1909 a record breaker and has adopted as the slogan of Charlevoix Pomona, "Five hundred Charlevoix patrons will go to Traverse City in 1909." To make her word good, a meeting of the executive committee will be held in the near future, at which plans will be laid for a series of grange revival meetings in this county which will bring the order, and its advantages, into every farm home in the county. Full details will be published in the COURIER as soon as the plans are worked out.

South Arm Grange No. 865.

South Arm grange met December 12 and was called to order by the worthy master. The attendance was somewhat small. The committee for selecting the new degree team reported as follows:

Captain, H. L. Olney
Master, Frank St. John
Overseer, Reuben Murphy
Steward, Lawrence Isaman
Lecturer, Harry Jones
A. S., Cecil Blair
L. A. S., Ira Burbank
Chaplain, Ada Olney
Pomona, Ursula Crawford
Ceres, Minnie Crawford
Flora, Natherie Liskum
Chorister, Clara Liskum

The lecturer's hour consisted of a hymn sung by the brothers, and a beautiful song by the sisters. Roll call was answered to by reminiscences of school days. The lecturer wrote one stanza of some familiar songs on slips of paper, cut each slip into four pieces and after she had mixed them up, distributed them among the members. Then the four members having the slips of paper that when put together made up a complete stanza, were obliged to form in line before the other members and sing the song or as much of it as possible. This was very amusing and entertaining the songs being "Annie Laurie," "Old Folks at Home", "My old Kentuckey Home", "Nearer my God to Thee" and "Happy Day."

The grange will have a Christmas tree at their hall Christmas eve. The program will be furnished by the members of the grange and the pupils of the Ranney school. Brother and Sister Liskum gave a report on what they saw at State Grange.

The grange voted to have a masquerade dance New Year's eve. Frank St. John, Willard Robinson and Ralph Ranney were appointed as a committee on the dance.

Ironton Grange No. 707.

Ironton grange met Tuesday evening, December 8, with very few members present as some of the young men are working in the sugar factory and some in the lumber woods, and Mr. and Mrs. Knudsen were attending state grange at Saginaw. Brother Ole Lyngklip acted as master.

One application was received for membership. It was decided to hold a special meeting December 15 for the purpose of conferring degrees as the next regular meeting will be election of officers.

A motion was made that after the first of January that the meetings be held either the first and third or the second and fourth Tuesdays in the month, with an open meeting every three months that everybody could attend and listen to a good program. Action was postponed until the next meeting on account of the small attendance.

The new hall is now all finished except cleaning out. Monday the fourteenth was appointed as a cleaning up day so it will be ready for the next meeting.

Marion Center Grange No. 956.

Marion Center grange met in regular session December 9 with officers all present except master and chaplain and was opened in regular form in the fourth degree.

After the usual order of business the grange proceeded to confer the third and fourth degrees on Emmet Coulter, who took the degrees very calmly.

The meeting was then turned over to the lecturer who furnished a good program, consisting of several songs and recitations.

The ladies then invited everybody to the dining room where the table groaned with good things to eat and the harvest feast will long be remembered by those in attendance. The sleighing being good the attendance was large and everybody enjoyed themselves.

The election of officers will be the leading feature of the next meeting December 24. Every member is requested to be sure and be present and cast their vote.

Maple Grove Grange No. 1255.

Maple Grove Grange met in regular session December 15, with an attendance of forty-one, visitors three, and was opened in regular form by Worthy Master Woodin, all officers present.

Two applications for membership were received and ten candidates were instructed in the third and fourth degrees, after which an oyster supper was served.

The following officers were elected for the next year.

Master—E. E. Stroud
Overseer—F. J. Bartholomew
Lecturer—W. J. Smith
Treasurer—Platt Webster
Steward—Robert Miner
Secretary—David Smith
A. S.—Ney Smith
Chap.—Mrs. F. J. Bartholomew

Ceres—Mayme Scroggie
Flora—Sue Hale
Pomona—Ina Gilbert
L. A. S.—Mrs. E. E. Stroud
I. D. Arthur Tillotson.

Masquerade ball, December 18, with good music.

Next meeting December 29.

Wilson Grange No. 719

Wilson Grange met in regular session Saturday, December 12.

The work of plastering and wainscoting the hall is now completed and it was decided in the business session to varnish the wood work.

The following officers were elected for the ensuing year.

Master—Robert Shepard
Overseer, Willard Warden
Lecturer, Lottie Todd
Steward Albert Todd
A. S.—H. Batterbee
Chaplain Anna Warden
Secretary Edward Brintnall
Treasurer Samuel Nowland
G. K. Fred Holland
Pomona Ethel Brintnall
Flora—Lora Warden
Ceres Essie Shepard
L. A. S. Celestia Warden
Organist Prudence Smith.

Lecturer's hour was observed in the usual manner. There were twenty eight members present and no visitors. There will be a dance in the hall according to announcement.

Meeting closed in form.

long enough to tell you this story, now I am on the main line again I will tell you of a vineyard of eight hundred acres I visited a short time ago.

With a palatial home for the manager and his family, a large dining hall and bunk house for the help and large stables for the many teams to be housed. These buildings covered a large space of ground. Then comes this immense vineyard eight hundred acres of table, raisin and wine grapes (the help is mostly Japanese and Chinese) and as you look down between the long rows of well cultivated grapes and see the hundreds of trays filled with raisins drying in the sun, and see the wagons with long racks loaded with crates of grapes and then the train loads being shipped away, you can scarcely believe your eyes are not playing you false. This vineyard is a never to be forgotten sight.

I have visited the orange groves which are very beautiful to behold. The ground is as level as a floor and as black as earth could be, without a weed or a blade of grass to be seen. The ground is checked off both ways between the rows of trees, with very shallow ditches for irrigation purposes. The rows are as straight as they can be made and the trees are seemingly all of a size and height. The leaves are of the darkest shade of green, with oranges here and there among the boughs like golden balls. I rode around one grove which took some time to drive around it with an auto. Orange land is valued at $250 per acre. There are all kinds of orchards here, peach, apricot, pear, olive, fig, nectarine, almond, walnut, pomegranate, limes and apples. I think I have forgotten some of them.

This is a land of sunshine and flowers, magnolias and mocking birds, but when you enter the service of a rancher you will not find many charms held out to you. The California farm hand is a migatory person, little more than a tramp, his habits are bestial and pretty low in the moral scale, but there are excuses for him, because of the unsanitary and unhygienic conditions under which he is forced to live. He is not one of the family as in the east, but treated more like a tramp eating in a cook house on wheels in the centre of the ranch, sleeping in a bunk house with unwelcome bedfellows human and otherwise, or takes his blanket and creeps into some outhouse or alfalfa stack (most hands are expected to furnish their own blankets) thus the saying when you can kick up a blanket wherever night overtakes you, why then you are an accomplished farm hand. Just think of our boys coming here to be treated like swine. No wonder they squander their money and have no morals, with Mexicans, Italians, Chinese, Japanese, Portugese and the litter of two continents for associates.

SPECIAL SHORT COURSES

In Agriculture at the Michigan Agricultural College

The Agricultural College announces that in addition to the special short courses in Agriculture, Creamery Management, Cheese making and Fruit growing which have been given for several seasons past, two new courses, one in Forestry and one in Poultry Culture and also a second year's course in Creamery management will be given this year. These courses with the exception of the cheese course, begin January 5. The Cheese Course begins February 15.

These are short practical courses designed for young farmers and others who wish to obtain a technical training along their chosen line but for various reasons cannot take up a regular college course.

A catalogue will be sent on application.

SUPERVISORS ARE NOW IN SESSION

Not Much Business of Importance Transacted.

WILL MEET AGAIN FEBRUARY 9.

At Which Time the Petitions for Local Option Will be Acted Upon.

Changes in Our County Officials—Peyton, Lewis and Nicholas the New Officials, No Change in Deputies.

The Board of Supervisors met in regular adjourned session Monday forenoon, every member being present. It was decided that when the board adjourned at this session, it adjourn to meet February 9, every supervisor voting aye on the proposition, thus assuring a vote on the local option question at the spring election, as nearly twenty-four hundred voters have signed the petition asking that it be submitted.

Monday afternoon, F. A. Kenyon, repreaenting the American Ballot Machine Company, of East Jordan, appeared before the board and explained the merits of voting machines. A committee, consisting Supervisors Meech, Baxter and Graff was appointed to investigate the advisability of putting in the machines and report at the February session.

A petition was received asking that a portion of Marion township be set into Charlevoix township, and the petition was granted by the board.

Wednesday morning the bonds of the new county officers were accepted. County Clerk Payton, on assuming his new position, made a few remarks, thanking the members of the board for the many acts of courtesy, which he had received at their hands, and expressing the hope that the same friendly relations would be maintained in his new position.

A proposition to put the sheriff on a salary was left over until the February session.

There has been little change in our county officials with the new year. Judge Harris is still at his old post as Judge of Probate, where he undoubtedly will give the same efficient service that he has in the past.

Sheriff McWain has appointed the same list of deputies as follows: Under-Sheriff, W. J. Weikel, Charlevoix; Jailer, W. T. Driggett, Charlevoix; Trunt-officer, W. F. Bashaw, East Jordan; Deputy, Boyne City, T. A. Heaton; Deputy, East Jordan, Harry Circkendall; Deputy, Boyne Falls, Lewis Meeker; Deputy St. James, John Floyd.

D. S. Payton can be found occupying the chair in the clerk's office, where visitors are met with the same courteous manner that has marked his administration of the Treasurer's office. R. A. Emrey will continue as deputy.

Richard Lewis can be found at the desk in the Treasurer's office, where the people are assured of a careful painstaking official. Miss Clara Ainslee will continue as deputy.

Register Emrey can be found still at his post of duty, with the same efficient helpers.

A. B. Nicholas, as prosecutor, is a synonym for the best legal talent obtainable, as he has been tried before. Mr. Clink retires from the office with a creditable record, and will again resume his large law practice.

NOVAK--M'KINZIE

Prominent Charlevoix Manufacturer Married at Detroit.

Married, December 30, 1908, in Detroit, Miss Margaret McKinzie to Charles Novak.

Both the bride and groom are well known residents, the former having lived here a number of years.—Mr. Novak has been engaged in the manufacture of cigars in this city for the past five years.

Mr. and Mrs. Novak expect to go to house-keeping in a short time. Mrs. Novak will join her husband next week, being at the present time, visiting relatives in and around Detroit.

A host of friends who were very much suprised, join in showering congratulations for a happy future.

STATE CONVENTION

Of Republicans Will Meet at Grand Rapids February 12.

A a meeting of the Republican state central committee held at Grand Rapids Saturday afternoon, it was decided to hold the state convention at the Majestic theater in Grand Rapids February 12, Lincoln's birthday.

At that time nominations will be make for six members of the state board of agriculture, two justices of the supreme court, and superintendent of public instruction. There was some discussion over the latter nomination but it was the concensus of opinion of the committee members that Supt. Wright could hold office only until April, although he was elected last November for a two-year term. The new constitution provides that the superintendent of public instruction shall be chosen at the April election.

William M. Smith of St. Johns will be temporary chairman of the convention and W. Frank Knox of Sault Ste. Marie temporary secretary.

SECOND ANNUAL REUNION

Of Class '07 Charlevoix High School Held Wednesday Night.

Fifteen of the Original Twenty-Three Members Present—A Jolly Evening.

The second annual reunion of the class of '07 of Charlevoix high school, was given by the Misses Weaver and Stacks at the home of the former, on Wednesday evening, December 30, 1908.

The rooms were gayly decorated with maize and blue.

When the roll was called, it was learned that fifteen, of the original twenty three members, were present. They were as follows:— Maud Cross, Hyron Cook, Mabel Weed, Frank Campbell, Lola Cross, Mason Rose, Elsie See, Lee Scroggie, Merle Felts, Clare Finncan, Lafayette Carey, Winnie Weaver, Forrest Kane, Mayfred Stacks and Edward Horton.

After all had assembled, the class song was sung followed by the class yell, which was given with the spirit for which '07 is famous.

Souvenirs, consisting of walnut shells bound with maize and blue ribbon were distributed. When opened, each was found to contain a paper upon which was written the characteristic of each member of the class.

After a number of popular games were participated in, dainty refreshments were served by the hostesses.

Before the departure of the guests the Misses Felts and Weed claimed the honor of entertaining the class next year.

BARTLETT CHANGES HANDS

J. S. Baker the New Proprietor Since Monday Morning.

Name Will be Changed to Baker's Inn, Will be Greatly Improved.

One of the most important business changes we have recorded this winter took place Saturday when Dr. L. B. Bartlett disposed of the Hotel Bartlett and business complete, which he has conducted for the past fourteen years, to J. S. Baker, who took possession Monday morning.

Mr. Baker is the proprietor of the well known Charlevoix Beach Hotel and both himself and Mrs. Baker are experts in hotel management, having been engaged in the business for several years.

The name of the house will be changed to Baker's Inn and it will be given a complete overhauling. The front rooms will all be receiled, new bath rooms put in and the house be made into a thoroughly modern hotel in every respect. The Bartlett has long been one of our leading hotels and being centrally located will in all probability take an advanced position under its new management, who have several surprises in the line of improvements in view.

Dr. Bartlett is undecided as to his future movements but probably after taking a vacation will resume the practice of his profession.

FIRE AT CENTRAL LAKE

Wednesday Night of Last Week—Loss $7,000.

Dry Goods, Millinery and Shoe Stock of J. F. Homer & Co. Destroyed.

The dry goods, millinery and shoe stock of J. F. Homer & Co. on Main street adjoining the postoffice, was practically destroyed by fire shortly after six o'clock Wednesday night of last week.

Mr. Homer had just left the store for the night. The chimney caught fire and the stove pipe blew out letting burning soot fall into bales of cotton batting and yarns, piled on shelving in the back of the store room and in a moment the whole interior was on fire.

The alarm was given at once and chemical extinguishers were turned on the fire, to be reinforced immediately by water from the city hydrants.

The fire was fought from the west end of the store, and on account of the strong wind blowing it was not thought safe to open the front door on the east, so no goods were taken out, and the whole interior of the building the next morning was a blackened, charred mass, though of course, some few of the goods are not much damaged, though wet and blackened by smoke.

Mr. Homer estimates his loss on stock at between six and seven thousand, though as his annual invoice was just begun, exact figures cannot be given. Insurance was carried to the amount of $4,200.

The loss on the building owned by Samuel Crampton of Elk Rapids, will be small and fully covered by insurance.

The blow is a very severe one to Mr. Homer and he is much discouraged. Practically his whole resources were in this store. He is planning to get in a new stock at once and open business again as soon as possible. A part of his new spring stock was in the store, though the larger portion had not yet been received.

The fire originating as it did, no one can be blamed for it, and it is extremely doubtful if the result would have been much different, had it occurred before the store was closed for the night.

At no time after the fire was discovered and the fire apparatus turned on it was there any danger to other buildings.

CRIMINAL MATTERS

Boyne City Couple are Arrested for Grand Larceny.

Former Boyne City Man Settles a Case of Obtaining Goods Under False Pretences.

Monday morning, Sheriff McWain brought Ed. Clark, better known as Klonkike, a notorious character of Boyne City, and wife, to the county jail where they were sent in defautt of bonds of two-hundred dollars each, to wait trial in the Circuit Court on a charge of grand larceny. The facts in the case are as follows:

Clark and his wife were engaged as housekeeper for R. C. Huntley, an aged resident of that city. A short time ago Mr. Huntley was taken ill with apolexy and removed to the hospital for better care, where he afterward died. It is alleged that while he was in the hospital, the Clark pair sold articles of furniture and clothing belonging to Huntley, and when his family came to the city, after his death a gold watch and certain sum of money which he was known to have had in his possession had disappeared.

Sheriff McWain returned from Ishpeming Saturday, where he had been after Louis Apostle formerly of Boyne City, who was charged with obtaining goods under false pretences. It seems that Apostle has purchased a cash register while at Boyne City, paying a small sum down. Upon leaving he sold the register for eighty-five dollars, and failed to settle with the company.

Apostle settled the matter by paying the amount claimed and all costs that had been made.

MODEL LICENSE LAW

Will be Introduced in the Michigan Legislature.

Plan Proposed by Manufacturers and Dealers in Alcoholic Beverages.

Letters that are being mailed in large numbers to Michigan people by T. M. Gilmore, president of the National Model License league, an organization of manufacturers and dealers in alcoholic beverages, indicate that a bill will be introduced in the Michigan legislature embodying the league's ideas.

"It should be stated at the outset that the objects and purposes of the model license law are to take the liquor question out of politics and to take the lawbreaker out of the liquor business," says Gilmore in the letters, and he continues with:

"The liquor question should not be a political factor. The mere fact that a man favors or opposes the use of alcoholic beverages should not be deemed a qualification for discharging the duties incumbent upon holders of public office. Lawbreaking, in connection with the sale of alcoholic beverages, is injurious to the trade as a whole and society generally."

Some of the provisions that the league will attempt to put through are:

All licences to remain in effect until canceled because of violation of the law.

No new licenses to be issued until the population is in proportion of, say, 500 inhabitants to each saloon license.

Licenses to yield a good revenue to the city and state, but not excessive.

Suspension of license for thirty days on the first conviction; cancelation on the second, and the saloonkeeper barred from again doing business in the state.

Will Pay Four Per Cent

At the regular monthly meeting of the Board of Directors of the Charlevoix State Savings Bank, held Monday night, the gentlemen comprising the board, being broad-minded, progressive business men, decided to share with their customers the benefits of their rapidly increasing business and from January 1, will pay four per cent on savings deposits, computed semi-annually.

Held Annual Meeting

The Farmer's Mutual Fire Insurance Company of Cheboygan, Charlevoix and Emmet counties, of which E. B. Ward of this city is president, held their annual directors meeting at Petoskey this week. The year's business shows the company in better shape than ever before, although they have had a net loss of 101 members the past year, leaving 2,735 members at the present time.

C. C. Driscoll of Petoskey, was re-elected president; J. H. Detwiller of Brutus, vice-president.

HE'S GOING ROUND THE HORN

Captain Campbell Will Start on Long Journey This Week.

OF OVER TWO THOUSAND MILES

As Guest of the Alaska and Cape Nome Company.

Journey Will Take Over Two Months—Principal Ports to be Visited—A Pleasure Trip Indeed.

Next Friday, Captain P. D. Campbell expects to start for New York, where on the following Thursday 14, he will go aboard the St. Croix, for his long trip around the Horn to Seattle, Washington, as the guest of the Alaska & Cape Nome Transportation Company. The St. Croix is a palace passenger steamer, about the size of the Manitou, and was recently purchased by the Transportation Company for use in its passenger traffic. The Company while taking the steamer to its place of business intend to run an excursion, a party of New York business men making the long trip of over two thousand miles, which will probably take about three months, stopping at all the principal ports on the way.

Captain Campbell's son Ira A. immediately after his graduation from the law department of the University of Michigan, located at Seattle and rapidly advanced in his profession, until he is now considered one of the leading admiralty attorneys on the Pacific Coast. Among his clients is the Alaska & Cape Nome Company and when they planned this trip, through Mr. Campbell, an invitation was extended to the Captain to make the trip as the guest of the Company, assuring him that nothing would be too good for him.

Probably there is no better known sailor on the great lakes than Captain Campbell, who has sailed on Lake Michigan all his life. In 1868 he was in the log business at Muskegon, his first command being the tug H. Warner. From there he located at Whitehall in 1880, engaging in the building and dealing in freight and passenger barges, at different times having command of some of the finest barges on the lake. In 1895 Captain Campbell located at Charlevoix, having taken the contract for carrying the mail to Beaver Island, for the first six years in the steamer Hackley and since then in the Beaver.

Up to a few years ago, when the cable was laid, the arrival of Captain Campbell was the only medium of communication the Islanders had with the mainland and seldom indeed, has the Captain failed to make his trip and many boats lost in the fogs have been set on their course by this hearty captain.

Within the past few years the thousands of resorters who annually flock to this region, have learned of the beauties of the Islands, and their stay in this region is not complete until they make the trip with Captain Campbell, whose many droll and original sayings are long treasured in the store of memory.

As a citizen of Charlevoix, Captain Campbell has long taken an active part in the welfare of the city, having served faithfully as president of the board of public works, and everybody wishes him God-speed on his long journey.

A pretty wedding was solemnized at Mr. and Mrs. E. R. Sly's, Thursday evening at 6:30 p. m. The contracting party being their daughter, Miss Ruth to Mr. E. D. Pennell, Rev. Sly of Lansing, Michigan, joined the contracting party by pronouncing the words that ties for life.

Mr. Pennell comes to us as a very fine gentlemen. His presence with us has proved him as such. We consider with him that he has made a fine selection for a partner through life. Miss Ruth, is a young lady that made friends wherever she went by the kind words she had for every one. She will be greatly missed by her Sunday school class, she was so very kind to the little ones that they learned to love her, and while here was always willing to do good in the church and Sunday school. We all join in wishing them abundance of happiness, and prosperity.

Mr. and Mrs. Pennell left for Minneapolis, Minnesota, January 1, where he has a position as teacher in the Commercial College.

TELLS HOW TO MIX IT

Directions to Prepare a Simple Home Mixture

Tells You How to Overcome Rheumatism With Simple Recipe, Which is Easily Mixed.

A well-known authority on Rheumatism gives the following valuable, though simple and harmless, prescription, which any one can easily prepare at home.

Fluid Extract Dandelion, one-half ounce; Compound Kargon, one ounce; Compound Syrup Sarsaparilla, three ounces.

Mix by shaking well in a bottle, and take a teaspoonful after each meal and at bedtime.

He states that the ingredients can be obtained from any good prescription pharmacy at small cost, and being of vegetable extraction, are harmless to take.

This pleasant mixture, if taken regularly for a few days, is said to overcome almost any case of Rheumatism. The pain and swelling, if any, diminishes with each dose, until permanent results are obtained, and without injuring the stomach. While there are many so-called Rheumatism remedies, patent medicines, etc., some of which do give relief, few really give permanent results, and the above will, no doubt, be greatly appreciated by many here at this time.

Inquiry at the drug stores of this neighborhood elicits the information that these drugs are harmless and can be bought separately, or the druggists here will mix the prescription for our readers if asked to.

PRESIDENT ELECT TAFT is hoping to have his family with him for Christmas, not having had that privilege on the last holiday, Thanksgiving. Mrs. Taft Robert, Helen and Master Charles dined on that occasion with the president-elect's brother, Henry W. Taft, and family in New York. Robert Alphonso Taft, eldest son of the president elect is now in his junior year at Yale. He is striving nobly to uphold the family traditions at that venerable institution of learning. It is a good deal of a responsibility to be a Taft at Yale. Robert, who is in his twentieth year, is athletic and is also of a studious disposition and has so far made a fine record in scholarship. He expects to follow the legal profession, thus continuing the family traditions.

D. Archbold has been right in the limelight. The government prosecutor, Frank B. Kellogg, has left no stone unturned in his efforts to drag to the light secrets of operation and management which the trust has hitherto kept hidden. It has come out in the course of the inquiry that the total capitalization of companies throughout the world owned and controlled by the Standard is $3,328,301,495. Of this sum $98,378,300 is the capitalization of the Standard of New Jersey, or holding concern.

The diocese of Washington is one of the most important in the Episcopal church in the United States, and the election as its head of the Rev. Dr. Alfred H. Harding is an incident which has attracted special attention. Its former bishop, the late Right Rev. Henry Y. Satterlee, was a divine of progressive ideas, and he had done much to make the Episcopal church in his jurisdiction of influence proportionate to the importance of the society in the nation itself. Among other things he had laid the foundations for a cathedral system which it is hoped will one day become a conspicuous part of the religious activities of the nation's capital. To continue the work begun by Bishop Satterlee the Episcopalians of Washington were anxious to secure just the right man, and they hit upon Bishop Charles H. Brent of the Philippines as the one for the place. Though the Washington diocese is one of much greater wealth and general importance than that over which he now presides, Bishop Brent declined the election to it, preferring to continue in missionary labor. It was then offered in succession to two other men, who both declined on the ground that duty impelled them to remain in their present positions. Bishop Elect Harding is the fourth man to be chosen to the post, and he has accepted. He is one of the best known clergymen of Washington, having been for twenty-two years rector of St. Paul's church. He is a graduate of Trinity college, Hartford, Conn., and was ordained a priest in 1883.

troducing the president's athletic but winsome daughter to Gotham society Washington will witness the formal coming out of the new belle of the White House at a ball in the executive mansion on Dec. 28.

That Miss Ethel is truly a chip of the old block may readily be inferred from her ardent devotion to outdoor sports and particularly to horseback riding. The enthusiasm and interest she displayed at the annual clash of the army and navy football warriors warrant the assertion that this soon to be Washington society bud knows and appreciates the great pigskin game.

Though but seventeen, the date of Miss Roosevelt's debut was hastened a bit in order that she might enjoy her first season at the White House.

Governor J. H. Higgins of Rhode Island is about as sly a dog as there is in the country, and when he decided to get married he also decided that neither he nor his bride to be wanted any publicity, and so they slipped away and practically eloped. In their rounds they went to Pittsburg. They did not know anything about the sesquicentennial celebration, which was recently held there, and before they knew it they ran into more people at the Hotel Schenley, where they were staying, than they thought there ever could be contained in Little Rhody. The first man who greeted them was Governor Stuart of Pennsylvania, an intimate friend.

J. H. HIGGINS.

"Why, hello, governor!" shouted Stuart as Higgins tried to dodge behind a post in the foyer. "I didn't know you were here."

Higgins said he was merely there on private business, whereupon Stuart insisted on introducing him to Mayor Guthrie of Pittsburg and every one else within sight, and he was placed immediately on the program.

Then along came Governor Swanson of Virginia. The bride had been waiting half an hour by this time, but Swanson insisted on talking. All this time Governor Higgins protested that it would be impossible for him to speak, as he had an appointment. But he couldn't give a satisfactory explanation of what that appointment was, and so when it came time for the speakers to go to the exhibition hall Governor Higgins was dragged along.

When the hall was reached the two other governors permitted Governor Higgins to do some important telephoning, which took quite a long time, but which, he admitted afterward, was to his wife.

Governor Higgins and Miss Ellen Maguire were married in Pawtucket, R. I., on Nov. 17. The governor is one of the youngest of the state executives of the Union and when he was mayor of Pawtucket, in which post he served four years, was known as "the boy mayor." He was born in Lincoln, R. I., in 1876 and was left fatherless at thirteen. He took upon himself the care of his mother and two younger brothers in addition to supporting himself. He worked days and studied nights, and the boy's merits won him friends, so that he was able in due time to go through Brown university and also graduate from the Georgetown University Law school. His rise since then has been meteoric.

The white house in the aspens was in gala attire. Flowers—great banks of bloom—were massed in the hall, along the stairway and in the window seats, and wreaths of delicate fern trembled on the prim hung chandeliers. Over all breathed the sweet fragrance of jasmine. Musicians sat behind a screen of palms in a corridor, and a long scarlet carpet strip ran down the front steps to the driveway, up which passed bravely dressed folk, arriving in carriages and on foot, to witness the completion of a much booted romance.

For a fortnight this afternoon's event had been the chat of the town, for David Stires, who today retired from active business, was its magnate, the owner of its finest single estate and of its most important bank. From his scapegrace boyhood Hugh Stires had made himself the subject of uncomfortable discussion. His sudden disappearance after the rumored quarrel with his father and the advent of Jessica Holme had furnished the community sufficient material for gossip. The wedding had capped this gossip with an appropriate climax. Tongues had wagged over its pros and cons, for Hugh's past had induced a wholesome skepticism of his future.

There was an additional element of romance, too, in the situation, for Jessica, who had never yet seen her lover, would see her husband. The great surgeon on whose prognostication she had built so much had arrived and had operated. The experiment had been completely successful, and Jessica's hope of vision had become a sure and certain promise.

The operation over, there had remained many days before the bandages could be removed—before Jessica could be given her first glimpse of the world for nearly three years. Hugh had urged against delay. If he had stringent reasons of his own he was silent concerning them. And Jessica, steeped in the delicious wonder of new and inchoate sensations, had yielded.

So it had come about that the wedding was to be on this hot August afternoon, although it would be yet some time before the eye bandages might be laid aside save in a darkened room. In her girlish, passionate ideality Jessica had offered a sacrifice to her sentiment. She had promised herself that the first form her new sight should behold should be not her lover, but her husband. The idea pleased her sense of romance.

It was a sweltering afternoon, and in the wide cool parlor limp handkerchiefs and energetic fans fought vainly against the intolerable heat. There, as the clock struck 6, a hundred pairs of eyes gallopaed between two centers of interest—the door at which the bride would enter and the raised platform at the other end of the room where, prayer book in hand, in his wide robes and flowing sleeves, Harry Sanderson had just taken his stand. Perhaps more looked at Harry than at the door.

He seemed his usual magnetic self as he stood there, backed by the flowers, his waving brown hair unsmoothed, the ruby ring glowing dull red against the dark leather of the book he held. But Harry Sanderson was far from feeling the grave, allen figure he appeared. In the past weeks he had waged a silent warfare with himself, bitter because repressed. The strange new thing that had sprung up in him he had trampled mercilessly under. From the thought that he loved the promised wife of another a quick, fastidious sense in him recoiled abashed. This painful struggle had been sharpened by his sense of Hugh's utter worthlessness. To that rustling assemblage the man who was to make those solemn promises was David Stires' son, who had had his fling, turned over his new leaf becomingly and was now offering substantial hostages to good repute. To him, Harry Sanderson, he was a debtor, a marplotless gambler in the futures of his father's favor and a woman's heart.

Only a moment Harry stood waiting; then the palm screened musicians began the march, and Hugh took his place, animated and assured, looking the flushed and expectant bridegroom. At the same instant the chattering and hubbub ceased. Jessica, on the arm of the old man, erect, but walking feebly with his cane, was advancing down the roped lane.

Harry's eyes dropped to the opened book, though he knew the office by heart. He spoke the time worn adjuration with clear enunciation, with almost perfunctory distinctness. He did not look at Hugh.

"If any man can show just cause why they may not lawfully be joined together, let him speak or else hereafter forever hold his peace." In the pause—the slightest pause—that turned the page he felt an insane prompting to tear off his robes, to proclaim to this roomful of heated, gaping, fan fluttering humanity that he himself, a minister of the gospel, the celebrant of the rite, knew "just cause."

The choking impulse passed. The periods rolled on. The long white glove was slipped from the hand, the ring put on the finger, and the pair whom God and Harry Sanderson had joined together were kneeling on the white satin prie dieu with bowed heads under the final invocation. As they knelt choir voices rose.

Then, while the music lingered, the hush of the room broke in a confused murmur, the white ribbon wound ropes were let down, and a voluble wave of congratulators swept over the spot. In a moment more Harry found himself laying off his robes in the next room.

The celebrant of the rite knew "just cause."

With a sigh of relief he stepped through the wide French window into the garden. The strain over, he longed for the solitude of his study. But David Stires had asked him to remain for a final word, since bride and groom were to leave on an early evening train; the old man was to accompany them a part of the journey, and "the Stires place" was to be closed for an indefinite period.

It was not long before the sound of gay voices and of carriage wheels came around the corner of the house, for the reception was to be curtailed. One by one he heard the carriages roll down the graveled driveway. A last chime of voices talking together—Harry could distinguish Hugh's voice now—and at length quiet told him the last of the guests were gone.

The east room was empty save for servants who were gathering some of the cut flowers for themselves. He stood aimlessly for a few moments looking about him. A white carnation lay at the foot of the dais, fallen from Jessica's shower bouquet. He picked this up, abstractedly smelled its perfume and drew the stem through his buttonhole. He heard voices in the library, and, opening the door, he entered.

In the room sat old David Stires in his wheel chair opposite his son. He was deadly pale, and his fierce eyes blazed like fire in tinder. And what a Hugh! Not the indolently gay prodigal Harry had known in the past nor the flushed bridegroom of a half hour ago! It was a cringing, a hangdog Hugh, with a slinking dread in the face, a trembling of the hands, a tense expectation in the posture. The thin line across his brow was a livid pallor. His eyes lifted to Harry's for an instant, then returned in a kind of fascination to a slip of paper on the desk, on which his father's forefinger rested, like a nail transfixing an unfrunate infamy.

"We have married Jessica to a common thief."

"Sanderson," said the old man in a low, hoarse, unnatural voice, "come in and shut the door. God forgive us! We have married Jessica to a common thief! Hugh, my son, my only child, whom I have forgiven beyond all reckoning, has forged my name to a draft for $5,000!"

Chapter 5

FOR a moment there was dead silence in the room. Harry's breath caught in his throat, and the old man's eye again impaled the hapless son. Hugh threw up his head with an attempt at jauntiness, but with furtive apprehension in every muscle, for he could not solve the look he saw on his father's face, and said:

"You act as if it were a cool million. I'm no worse than a lot who have better luck than I. Suppose I did draw the five thousand. You were going to give me ten for a wedding present. I had to have the money then, and you wouldn't have given it to me. You know that as well as I do. Besides, I was going to take it up myself, and you won't never have been the wiser. He promised to hold it. It's a low trick for him to round on me like this. I'll pay him off for it some time. I don't see that it's anybody else's business but ours anyway," he continued, with a surly glance at Harry.

Harry had been staring at him, but with a vision turned curiously inward—a vision that seemed to see Hugh standing at a carpeted dais in a flower hung room, while his own voice said out of a torrid shadow, "Wilt thou have this man to be thy wedded husband"—

"Stay, Sanderson," said the old man; then turning to Hugh, "Who advanced you money on this and promised to hold it?"

"Mr. Moreau."

"He profited by it?"

"He got his margin," said Hugh sullenly.

"How much margin did he get?"

"A thousand."

"Where is the rest?" David Stires' voice was like a whip of steel.

Hugh hesitated a moment. He had still a few hundreds in pocket, but he did not mention them.

"I used most of it. I—had a few debts."

"Debts of honor, I presume?"

Hugh's sensibility quivered at the fierce, grating irony of the inquiry.

"If you'd been more decent with spending money," he said with a flare of the old effrontery, "I'd have been all right! Ever since I came home you've kept me strapped. I was ashamed to stick up any more of my friends. And of course I couldn't borrow from Jessica?"

"Ashamed!" exclaimed the old man with harsh sternness. "You are without the decency of shame! If you were capable of feeling it you would not mention her name now!"

Hugh thought he saw a glimmer through the storm cloud. Jessica was his anchor to windward. What hurt him would hurt her. He would pull through!

"Well," he said, "it's done, and there's no good making such a row about it. She's my wife and she'll stand by me, if nobody else does!"

No one had ever seen such a look on David Stires' face as came to it now—a sudden blaze of fury and righteous scorn that burned it like a brand.

"You impudent blackguard! You drag my name in the gutter and then try to trade on my self respect and Jessica's affection. You thought you would take it up yourself and I would be none the wiser! And if I did find it out you could on my love for the poor, deluded girl you have married to make me condone your criminality, to perjure myself, to admit the signature and shield you from the consequences. You imagine because you are my son that you can do this thing and all still go on as before. Do you suppose I don't consider Jessica? Do you think because you have fooled and cheated her and me and married her that I will give her now to a caught thief, a common jailbird?"

In the thoughts that were darting through Hugh's mind there was none now of regret or of pity for Jessica. His fear was the fear of the trapped spoiler who discerns capture and its consequent penalties in the patrolling bullseye flashed upon him. He studied his father with hunted, calculating eyes as the old man turned to Harry Sanderson.

"Sanderson," said David Stires once more in his even, deadly voice, "Jessica is waiting in the room above this. She will not understand the delay. Will you go to her? Make some excuse—any you can think of—till I come."

"Hugh, Hugh!" she cried. "My husband!"

Harry nodded and left the room, shutting the door carefully behind him, carrying with him the cowering, helpless look with which Hugh saw himself left alone with his implacable judge. What to say to her? How to say it. He mounted the stair as if a pack swung from his shoulders. He paused a moment at the door, then knocked, turned the knob and entered.

There in the middle of the blue hung room in her wedding dress, with her bandaged eyes, and her bridal bouquet on the table, stood Jessica. Twilight was near, but even so all the shutters were drawn save one, through which a last glow of refracted sunlight sifted to fall upon his face. Her hands were clasped before her. He could hear her breathing—the full, hurried respiration of expectancy.

Then, while his hand closed the door behind him, a thing unexpected, anomalous, happened—a thing that took him as utterly by surprise as if the solid floor had yawned before him. Slim fingers tore away the broad encircling bandage. She started forward. Her arms were flung about his neck.

"Hugh, Hugh!" she cried. "My husband!"

The paleness was stricken suddenly from Harry's face. An odd, dazed color, a flush of mortification, of self

ELSEWHERE in this issue will be found the license law which will be introduced in the legislature by the organized liquor dealers.

There was a time in the history of the state when such a measure would have been accepted as a help to the solving of the problem of the the liquor traffic, but that time has past. Regulations of the traffic has been tried and pronounced a failure and the people will not be satisfied until saloons are driven from our midst The most ardent advocate of prohibition does not claim that the passage of prohibitory laws will prevent liquor being drunk, but it will remove from our midst the opportunity for the boys, who are growing up to form a habit which will remain with them through life. That is what it is hoped will be accomplished by the carrying of local option in Charlevoix next spring. How will you cast your vote?

STATE TREASURER SLEEPER announces that he will publish each month, a financial report of the standing of the state treasury—a move which is very commendable and is receiving favorable comments from the state papers, as an innovation for a treasurer to make in the conduct of his office. To Charlevoix county, however, it is no new thing, as each month it has been the custom of former treasurer Payton to publish such a statement and we have reason to believe that Treasurer Lewis will do the same. Wonder if Mr. Sleeper got the idea when he was up in our county last campaign?

Fortify Yourself

AGAINST pneumonia and similar troubles by breaking up a cold before it gets a good hold on your system. In other words, nip a cold in the bud, then you will not have to worry about its future stages.

Rexall
COLD TABLETS

Are the best thing in the world to break up a cold. They have the advantage of similar preparations because they are made for one specific purpose—that of curing colds. They strike at the root of the trouble, equalizing blood conditions, and opening the pores so that the body can breathe and purify itself once more.

Rexall Cold Tablets positively cure colds, grippe and catarrh. They also prevent diphtheria, pneumonia and bronchial troubles. You should never be without them.

GOVERNOR OF MICHIGAN

Chase S. Osborn Will Make the Run if Wanted.

But is Not Campaigning for the Job. Honor Must Seek Him.

"If the impression had got abroad that I have started campaigning for the Republican nomination for governor in 1910, I am sorry, for no such thing is true, and I object to being placed in the light of wanting any office bad enough to employ either barnstorming or gumshoe methods to get it," Chase S. Osborn, of the Soo, said at Detroit.

Three months ago," he said, "if I had been asked if I were going to be candidate for governor next time, I would have said 'no' most emphatically and positively, but at this time I would not care to answer the question either affirmatively or negatively. A great many things can happen in two years, and as I look at the situation now I would not care to assert that I would decline to run if a considerable number of the representative Republicans of the state should seem to think that I ought to do so.

"This far I have not turned my hand over in any way with a view to getting the nomination, and I have no present intention of doing so, but it is a fact that a good many of my friends in the party already have strongly urged me to become a candidate. If that sentiment should develop in sufficient strength to convince me that a majority of the Republicans would like to see me governor, I may make the run. I used to think that there was no such thing as spontaneity in politics, that if the man did not seek the office he would not get it, but recent events in various parts of the country have demonstrated that sometimes the office does really seek the man.

"I do not mean to imply that I place myself in the class with some of the strong men who recently have been called by the people in spite of the politicians and interests, but I do mean to say that if I can not be governor except by the dictation of the politicians and the corporations then I do not wish to be governor at all.

HELD JOINT INSTALLATION

Baxter Post G. A. R. and Woman's Relief Corps Saturday Evening.

The supper and joint installation of Baxter Post G. A. R. and W. R. C. held Saturday evening January 2, was an event of unusual enjoyment. The Odd Fellows hall was filled to overflowing by the "old boys" and their friends, their ages ranging from nine months to ninty-two years.

After the ritualistic work was finished a very interesting and appropriate musical program completed an evening of good cheer and all departed wishing each other a Happy New Year.

TAR WATERPROOF ROADS.

Expert Approves Binding Material For Stone Metaling.

In an article summing up the work of the international roads congress recently held in Paris a contributor to Nature, the leading English scientific weekly, says:

"On a matter of common interest—that is, the substitution of tar or bituminous binding material in place of the water hitherto used to consolidate and hold together the road material—the congress practically gave a unanimous answer. This was to the effect that if the tar be put on in the correct quantity, and this quantity the smallest required to hold the individual stones of the road metal firmly in position, so that they never roll or move in relation to one another, and their upper surfaces are allowed to wear themselves bare of tar, it is not difficult to obtain at moderate expense a waterproof road which will be practically dustless and which need not be slippery.

"It appears certain also that the annual cost will be considerably less than the cost of the existing water bound roads.

"It may be here remarked that, owing to the cautiousness and hence the reticence of some of the most important of our road authorities, the true position of England, which now possesses the greatest lengths of carefully waterproofed roads of any country in the world, was not put forward so much as might have been the case.

"It was interesting to converse with American engineers, who on account of the importance of road development in America are studying this question very closely, and to hear from them how much more they could learn by visiting our English roads than anywhere in France, at any rate near the capital."

GOOD ROADS AS MONEY SAVER

Lay Sermon by Curtis Hill on Gospel of Better Highways.

Curtis Hill, the state highway engineer, is sending to the people of Missouri pamphlets for spreading the gospel of good roads. Here is a copy:

"It is right that people should fear a heavy tax rate and should prevent taxes from becoming exorbitant. A certain amount of taxes, however, is necessary to provide for public institutions and to improve the country. A low tax rate does not necessarily mean a public saving. Not the amount of money spent, but the judicious expenditure of it, should be our position.

"Road improvement should keep abreast with the growth of the state. No one internal improvement is more essential to the prosperity and advancement of the state than good highways. One reason the roads are not improved is because the people fear they cannot afford it.

"It must, however, be borne in mind that no road official, no matter how efficient he may be, can build roads without funds. Permit me to quote from a letter of one of our county highway engineers: 'We have some very attractive scenery in our county, but the only safe way to see it is in an old fashioned farm wagon or by airship. When I first came to this county I could not understand why people with such good road material at hand had no better roads. This was twenty five years ago, and at present the roads are worse than they were then. The reason is plain from the following figure: Total mileage of roads, about 2,000; road fund, $1,984.75, not quite $1 a mile for road maintenance.'"

The Dust Problem.

After highways have been once well tarred spraying on alternate years is said to keep them in good order.

Dustless coats as the remedy for the dust nuisance has appealed to Belgians so forcefully that they are talking of making quite a number of them.

The Royal Automobile Club of England will during the winter devote the most of its energies to a study of the dust problem.

All the experiments abroad have gone to show that it will be a problem of road rather than car construction that will finally solve the dust question.

Three years' experiments on the Lincoln park system of Chicago have shown that the best road, so far as a dustless condition and wearing surface are concerned, is one made of a limestone foundation, with a lightly rolled torpedo sand top dressing.

Good Roads School.

Georgia's State College of Agriculture will hold a good roads school in January. Commissioners of all the counties and all persons interested will be invited to attend a five days' session at Athens, Ga., when a number of road building experts will deliver lectures during each morning. The afternoons will be taken up in inspections of roads in the vicinity. During the session a United States government expert will build a mile of road according to methods approved by the bureau of roads. Manufacturers have been invited to make exhibits of machinery.

The Tall Chimney.

It might puzzle the ordinary mortal to state in legal form just how much time and how much money he would require to take down a tall brick chimney. The contracting engineer would make it take itself down. After doing a small sum of arithmetic on his cuff he would direct certain portions of the base removed. In the spaces thus left he would fit a lot of very stout timbers, then remove the bricks which remained between them. Then he would set fire to the timbers and, watching from a safe distance with a camera would take a snapshot of it as it fell.—Scribner's.

MEN ARE HELPLESS AS CHILDREN

When Taken Suddenly Ill—Here is a Common-sense Safeguard

Big, strong man is as a helpless infant when he is suddenly ill.

The sturdiest chap in town usually loses his self control, and is utterly unable to regard his condition with the common sense that characterizes his every-day actions.

For example: He comes home tired, eats a heavy dinner and sits down to read and smoke away a quiet evening.

Suddenly he notices a weight on his stomach, then sharp pains around his heart, and a feeling of suffocation. Thoughts of "heart disease" rush over him, and in his agony he fears the worst.

His trouble was acute indigestion brought on by overloading his tired stomach.

A couple of Rexall Dyspepsia Tablets would have given him instant relief would have saved him hours of suffering.

Carry a package of Rexall Dyspepsia Tablets in your vest pocket or keep them in your room. Take one after each heavy meal and indigestion can never bother you.

Rexall Dyspepsia Tablets cure stomach troubles by supplying the one element, the absence of which is the gastric juices, causes indigestion and dyspepsia. They enable the stomach to digest all kinds of food and to quickly convert it into good rich red blood.

We know what Rexall Dyspepsia Tablets are and what they will do. We guarantee them to cure indigestion and dyspepsia. If they fail we will refund your money.

Price, 25c per full package. Sold only at our store or by mail. The Ivy drug store, A. B. Fleischer, proprietor.

She was sulking over a broken resolution ment late hours; but, forgetting this for the nonce, he said:

"Do you know, darling, I never tire of looking at this snapshot of you?"

"You might have it framed and hung up in the halge, then," she answered tartly.

The resignation of Judge Clyde C. Chittenden of Cadillac is in the hands of Governor Warner, who is expected to take action in a day or two. The resignation has been expected for nearly a year. For the last two years Judge Chittenden has spent more time at Seattle than in Michigan. He is heavily interested in timber lands and expects to make his home in Washington permanently. That, with the fact that his hearing is so poor that the trial of cases is extremely difficult for him, caused him to decide to retire from the bench. His successor will be elected at the spring election, and no strong opposition to Probate Judge Fred S. Lamb of Cadillac is anticipated.

Mary, wife of Nathan A. Thayer, residing about four miles west of Bellaire, died suddenly, December 20. Mr. Thayer had been talking with his wife for a few minutes before getting up to start morning fires, but on returning and calling her, she did not respond. Investigation disclosed the startling fact that she had died without warning or outcry of any kind. There are three children, Edith, Claude and Raymond, besides the husband. The funeral was held Saturday afternoon, December 26, 1908, at the Ball schoolhouse.

In a recent write-up of the village of Cusino, Schoolcraft Co., in the Manistique Courier-Record appears the following complimentary mention of the camp, in charge of William Yettaw and wife, formerly of Atwood: "The cooking department is in the charge of Will Yettaw and the writer knows whereof he speaks when he says the table is equal if not superior to most of the hotels throughout the country. The beds are all double iron beds and the place is kept clean, neat and sanitary, differing much from the lumber camps of the early 70's and 80's and the men are of a high type of intelligence and character. They are readers and thinkers and are as well posted upon current events as many who have greater advantages."

MISERY IN STOMACH

And Indigestion Vanishes Five Minutes Later.

Eat Your Favorite Foods Without Fear of Dyspepsia or an Upset Stomach Resulting.

Why not start now—today, and forever rid yourself of Stomach trouble and Indigestion? A dieted stomach gets the blues and grumbles. Give it a good eat, then take Pape's Diapepsin to start the digestive juices working. There will be no dyspepsia or belching of Gas or eructations of undigested food; no feeling like a lump of lead in the stomach or heartburn, sick headache and dizziness, and your food will not ferment and poison your breath with nauseous odors.

Pape's Diapepsin costs only 50 cents for a large case at any drug store here, and will relive the most obstinate case of Indigestion and Upset Stomach in five minutes.

There is nothing else better to take Gas from Stomach and cleanse the stomach and intestines, and, besides one triangule will digest and prepare for assimilation into the blood all your food the same as a sound, healthy stomach would do it.

When Diapepsin works, your stomach rests—gets itself in order, cleans up—and then you feel like eating when you come to the table, and what you eat will do you good.

Absolute relief from all Stomach Misery is awaiting you as soon as you decide to begin taking Diapepsin. Tell your druggist that you want Pape's Diapepsin, because you want to be thoroughly cured of Indigestion.

SHOES AND STOCKINGS.

A Way by Which Their Lasting Qualities May Be Increased.

While your shoes are new or before the soles are much worn apply with a small brush several coats of linseed oil, letting it dry in well each time before reapplying. The oil acts much the same on the leather as it does on wood, and if the applications of oil are repeated frequently the sole may be preserved intact indefinitely.

It sounds unreasonable to talk of preserving hosiery to any appreciable extent, but it may be done. The oftener hosiery is washed the longer it will last. By washing I do not necessarily mean the ordinary laundry method, which is calculated to fade and rot the fiber. Really, to preserve hosiery it must have personal supervision. Stockings should never be worn longer than one day. They should then be rinsed in lukewarm water with a few drops of ammonia in it, dried and worn without ironing. This repeated wetting of the fiber keeps it so firm and strong that it will not break at the points of greatest distension. This treatment applies to cotton, lisle thread and silk hosiery. If you will treat your new hose this way from the beginning, you need darn but very little. Of course in time all hosiery, however expensive or strong, will succumb to wear, but the above method of treatment will double the lasting qualities.—New York World.

"But don't you want to catch a husband?"

"What! me?"

"Yes, you."

"No! I."

New York As a City Of Light

NEW YORK as a city of light is a comparatively recent development. New Yorkers themselves hardly realize what an evolution their town has experienced in this respect. It usually takes the stranger to note the fact as it deserves to be noted. It is the visitor from abroad especially who makes this discovery.

When the Pan-American exposition was opened at Buffalo seven years ago last May the people flocked from all the states of the Union and from many foreign climes to see what had been called in the preliminary advertising of the fair "the Rainbow City." It was indeed an architectural creation remarkable for its multiplicity of colors and the general harmony of the color scheme, but the visitors soon made the discovery that it was rather as a city of light than as a city of many colors that the exposition deserved to be known in the history of such enterprises. It was the first affair of the kind to utilize the opportunities created by science and invention for the presentation of artistic and impressive illumination in connection with architectural achievements on a large scale.

The Pan-American exposition showed how to create beautiful and entrancing effects in illumination by the outlining of buildings with thousands upon thousands of electric lights and by massing the lights in certain places so as to give the effect of a solid, resplendent, tensely luminous surface glowing, but not glaring, and impressing the beholder with a certain idea of mystery, as if the illumination were the result of miraculous occurrence or the exhibition in some way of more than an earthly power. This was especially the effect produced by the illumination of the electric tower, the great architectural and spectacular triumph of the fair at Buffalo. The night effects of the world's fair at St. Louis were also most striking and beautiful, particularly the illumination of the cascades and the colonnade of states. These expositions pointed the way to what is now being carried into execution in New York, namely, an all the year round display which gives the largest city in the Union a reputation it has not had heretofore for beauty by night. The skyscraper era is responsible for this new evolution of artistic effects. There may be some question as to the symmetry and beauty of New York's sky line by day, but at night, with the towering structures of the lower portion of Manhattan Island outlined against the sky by thousands if not millions of little electric lamps, the fascination and beauty of the scene are not to be gainsaid. On either side of Manhattan Island flow the two rivers which have made the city the greatest commercial center in the new world. The many ferry houses on the Hudson contribute their part to the illumination by the lighting of their frontage toward the river, and the boats plying up and down the stream present a spectacle of dancing and darting lights that has its own particular fascination. Across the East river are the spans of the bridges, their graceful arcs illuminated by rows of powerful lights and the cars passing and repassing affording another spectacle of moving lights.

But most conspicuous and impressive of all is the illumination of the skyscrapers of the downtown district, with the new Singer tower rising above them all. In the edge of the evening, when the lights are gleaming from a myriad of offices where employers and employees alike are striving for the almighty dollar, after the sunset hour, the scene is wonderful indeed. The lighted buildings rise theron on both sides of the island from the water front to Broadway and form illuminated terraces, with the shining flagstaff of the Singer tower, 670 feet above the curb, as the topmost point in the brilliant sky line of the city.

The illumination of the Singer tower is just now the newest marvel in the wonders New York by night presents. The tower itself is a striking reminder of the admired and lamented electric tower of the Pan-American exposition. Its architectural lines are quite similar to those of the exposition structure, and when it is illuminated one could almost fancy himself back amid the fairylike confines of the gay city of pleasure which flourished for a season and then vanished, instead of in a place where people work six days in the week and sometimes seven in pursuit of the elusive dollar. The Singer illumination is still in the experimental stage. Never before has a commercial building been illuminated on the plan followed in this instance. The idea was conceived by Charles G. Armstrong, consulting mechanical and electrical engineer of the building, and the illumination is accomplished by thirty eighteen-inch projectors designed expressly for the purpose by the General Electric company. At the height of the fourteenth story are located projectors from which beams of light are thrown upon the exterior walls of the tower, from its base to the thirty-fifth floor. The remainder of the exterior is illuminated by 1,500 concealed incandescent lamps. The flag at the top of the tower is illuminated by the projection of a beam of light from a thirty-six inch projector on the roof of a neighboring building. There is a charm about the effects produced which, as the old saying goes, has to be seen to be appreciated.

In the Herald square and Times square districts there are other spectacular illuminations which are most fascinating in their way. Broadway itself is an avenue of light, and it is not inappropriately termed "the Great White Way" now that electricity has come to play such a part in the doings of the town at night as well as by day. A photographic view of Broadway from the Flatiron or Times building reveals a highway up and down which is a stream of light let loose with such prodigality that one would think it was all furnished free gratis instead of with a vast expenditure and with bills which somebody in some way has to foot. From the Battery to the Bronx, from the Jersey shore to Coney Island and the Rockaways, the mysterious fluid flowing over myriad wires makes day of night, but adds a charm and heavenly beauty which sunlight seems not to possess or which at any rate we do not attribute to it under ordinary conditions. Some people think that New York at no distant day will be the most beautiful city in the world. However that may be, it is perhaps the most brilliant by night of any American city.

EDWARD HALE BIERSTADT.

A STRANGE SITUATION.

George E. Chamberlain of Oregon and the Senatorial Question.

The senatorial situation in Oregon is a most unusual one. The legislature elected in June last is almost unanimously Republican, of the ninety legislators fifty-one voluntarily signed a pledge to elect the popular choice as United States senator. At the June election Governor George E. Chamberlain, a Democrat, was nominated for United States senator by the people in a state which is Republican by 15,000 majority. His nomination was in part due to factional strife between the Fulton and anti-Fulton Republicans.

GOVERNOR CHAMBERLAIN.

The question now arises whether the legislature should follow the instructions given by the people in the senatorial primary. Some hold that there should be no departure from these instructions; others maintain that the situation justifies the Republican members of the legislature in disregarding their pledges and choosing a member of their own party to Senator Fulton's seat.

His Request.

"I'm sorry I took the horse," said the captive, "but let's compromise this thing.—If there's goin' to be any hangin' done let me do it."

"You mean suicide?" asked the leader of the lynching party.

"No. Suppose you allow me to hang my head with shame and let it go at that?"—Philadelphia Ledger.

Tolerance.

"A great many men talk about things they don't understand."

"Yes," answered Miss Cayenne, "but I don't criticise them for that. So many men I know would have to keep up an embarrassing silence unless they did."—Washington Star.

"'By these signs ye shall know them.' What does it mean, pa?"

"What—signs?"

"Yes."

"Dollar signs, I presume."

THE DARDANELLES.

Changes in the Name of the Famous Two Mile Strait.

The Dardanelles, which is so familiar today, meant to our grandfathers not the Hellespont, but merely "two ancient and strong castles of Turkey, one of which is in Roumania and the other in Natolia." The famous strait was known in early Victorian geography by the name of Gallipoli. But the brave, dominating castles swept away both Hellespont and Gallipoli and gave their own name to the two mile passage. Those venerable castles, built in 1359 to "secure the Turkish fleet from the insults of the Venetians," were known, according to an early geographer, as the Old Dardanelles to distinguish them from two others at the entrance of the strait, one of which "stands in like manner in Asia and the other in Europe" and called the New Dardanelles.

In spite of the four castles, however, the passage was forced by a British fleet in 1807. In later years fortifications of a formidable nature have been constructed between the two sets of castles, and these are now properly the Dardanelles. The ultimate responsibility for naming the famous strait rests with Dardanus, the gentleman who crossed on his inflated skin from Samothrace to Asia and founded the town which afterward became the city of Troy.—London Chronicle.

THE ARAB'S HORSE.

How He Is Treated and Why He Excels at Long Journeys.

It is most interesting to note the way the Arab treats his faithful friend, the horse. So inured indeed is the Arab pony by long usage and descent to the manner of life in the desert that even my own pony positively improved on the treatment, and I never saw him so fit as when he came back from the trip.

If the Arab and his horse are by legend closely allied they are in point of fact even more intimately connected. His mount is his first thought and at all times by far the most interesting topic of conversation.

He is ungroomed, unclipped, unhaltered, for the Arab prefers to shackle him by means of two ropes, a short cord connecting the fore and hind fetlocks and a long line tethering him above the hind fetlock to a peg in the ground. Thus he can move about or roll at leisure and should there be any rough herbage at hand can forage for it.

Perhaps one of the principal reasons why the Arab so excels at long journeys is that he never worries himself, nor does he ever distress his mount unless there is real cause to do so. He simply continues a steady walk all day and hardly ever gallops in the wild way in which one so often sees him depicted by artists.—London Field.

Bill's Specialty.

They found the old man sitting on the fence smoking his corncob.

"Howdy, pap! What's your son Jim doing these days?"

"Jim? Oh, he's running a telegraph key at the depot. Jim's an operator."

"And how's Zeke?"

"Zeke? Wual, Zeke is captain of a lake steamer. He's a navigator."

"And Pete? Is he still living?"

"Oh, yes. Pete's working on an airship. He's what they call an aviator."

"Well, what has become of Bill.—Is he doing anything?"

The old man blew a quid of tobacco at a while eyed grasshopper.

"Yep, stranger, Bill's hanging around the house all day grumbling and complaining and saying the country's going to smash. Bill's just an aggravator—just a plain aggravator."—Judge.

The Tall Chimney.

It might puzzle the ordinary mortal to state in legal form just how much time and how much money he would require to take down a tall brick chimney. The contracting engineer would make it take itself down. After doing a small sum of arithmetic on his cuff he would direct certain portions of the base removed. In the spaces thus left he would fit a lot of very stout timbers, then remove the bricks which remained between them. Then he would set fire to the timbers and, watching from a safe distance with a camera, would take a snapshot of it as it fell.—Scribner's.

Grouchy.

"There is a movement on foot," said Mr. Snoope, "to prevent the marriage of weakminded persons. What do you think of it?"

"I think it's rot," answered Mr. Grouch. "Why, who else ever wants to get married?"—Cleveland Leader.

An Easy Stunt.

"I see a premiere danseuse is advertised to dance with five snakes twined about her."

"Should think she would. If a snake got on me I'll bet I'd dance!"—Philadelphia Ledger.

The Want of It.

"The love of money," quoted the moralizer, "is the root of all evil."

"That being the case," rejoined the demoralizer, "the want of money must be the full grown tree."—Exchange.

reproach, flooded it from chin to brow. Despite himself he had felt his lips molding to an answering kiss beneath her own. He drew a gasping breath, his hand nervously caught the bandage, replaced it over the eyes and tied it tightly, putting down her protesting hands.

"Oh, Hugh," she pleaded, "not for a moment—not when I am so happy! Your face is what I dreamed it must be! Why did you make me wait so long? And I can see, Hugh! I can really see! Let it stay off, just for one little moment more!"

He held her hands by force. "Jessica, wait," he said in a broken whisper. "You must not take it off again—not now!"

An incredible confusion enveloped him. His tongue cleaved to the roof of his mouth. Not only had the painful contretemps nonplused and dismayed him; not only had it heightened and horrified the realization of what she must presently be told—it had laid a careless hand upon his own secret, touching it with an almost vulgar mockery. It had overthrown in an instant the barricades he had been piling. The pressure of those lips on his had sent coursing to the farthest recesses of his nature a great wave which dikes nor locks might ever again forbid.

"What a dear goose you are!" she said. "The light didn't hurt them—indeed, indeed! Only to think, Hugh! Your wife will have her sight! Do go and tell your father. He will be waiting to know!"

Harry made some incoherent reply. He was desperately anxious to get away. His thought was a snarl of fatters threaded by one lucid purpose—to spare her coming self abasement this sardonic humiliation.

He almost ran from the room and down the stair.

Chapter 6

At the foot of the stair Harry paused, drawing a deep breath as if to lift a weight of air. He needed to get his bearings, to win back a measure of calmness.

As he stood there Hugh came from the library. His head was down, and he went furtively and slinkingly, as though dreading even a casual regard. He snatched his hat from the rack, passed out of the house and was swallowed up in the dusk. David Stires had followed his son into the hall. He answered the gloomy question in Harry's eyes.

"He is gone," he said, "and I hope to heaven I may never see his face again!" Then slowly and feebly he ascended the stairs.

Ten, fifteen minutes passed, and old David Stires re-entered the room, went feebly to his wheel chair and sat down.

"I have told her," he said presently in a broken voice. "You are kind, Sanderson, very kind. God help us!"

"What has God to do with it?" fell a voice behind them. Harry faced about. It was Jessica as he had first seen her in the upper room with the bandage across her eyes.

"What has God to do with it?" she repeated in a hard tone. "Perhaps Mr. Sanderson can tell us. It is in his line."

"Please"— said Harry.

He could not have told what he would have asked, though the accent was almost one of entreaty. The harsh satire touched his sacred calling. Coming from her lips it affronted at once his religious instinct and his awakened love. It was all he said, for he stopped suddenly at sight of her face, pale frosted, white as the folded cloth.

"Oh," she said, turning toward the voice, "I remember what you said that night right here in this very room—that you sowed your wild oats at college with Hugh—that they were 'a lldy crop!' You were strong, and he was weak. You led, and he followed. You were 'Satan Sanderson,' abbot of the Saints, the set in which he learned gambling. Why, it was in your rooms that he played his first game of poker. He told me so himself! And now he has gone to be an outcast, and you stand in the pulpit in a cassock, you, the Rev. Henry Sanderson! You helped to make him what he has become! Can you undo it?"

Harry was looking at her with a stricken countenance. He had no answer ready. The wave of confusion that had submerged him when he had restored the bandage to her eyes had again welled over him.

"I am not excusing Hugh now," she went on wildly. "He has gone beyond excuse or forgiveness. He is as dead to me as though I had never known him, though the word you spoke an hour ago made me his wife. I shall have that to remember all my life—that and the one moment I had waited for so long, for my first sight of his face and my bridal kiss! I must carry it with me always. I can never wipe that face from my brain or the sting of that kiss from my lips—the kiss of a forger of my husband!"

The old man groaned. "I didn't know he had seen her!" he said helplessly. "Jessica, Hugh's sin is not Sanderson's fault!"

In her bitter words was an injustice as passionate as her pain, but for her life she could not help it. She was a woman wrenched and torn, tortured beyond control, numb with anguish.

To Harry Sanderson her words fell with a wholly disproportionate violence. It had never occurred to him that he himself had been individually and actively the cause of Hugh's downfall. The accusation pierced through the armor of self esteem that he had linked and riveted with habit. The same pain of mind that had spurred him on that long ago night to the admission she had heard had started to new life a hatred, a scathed, a rekindling sin.

Stunned blow upon blow on his bowed soul.

"It is all true," he said. It was the inveterate voice of conscience that spoke. "I have been deceiving myself. I was my brother's keeper! I see it now."

She did not catch the deep compunction in the judicial utterance. She stood an instant, quivering, then turned and, feeling blindly for the door, swept from their sight.

White and breathless, Jessica climbed the stair. In her room she took a key from a drawer and ran swiftly to the attic studio. She unlocked the door with hurried fingers, tore the wrappings from the tall white figure of the prodigal son and found a heavy mallet. She lifted this with all her strength and showered blow upon blow on the hard clay, her face and hair and shimmering train powdered with the white dust, till the statue lay on the floor, a heap of tumbled fragments.

* * * * * * * *

Fateful and passionate as the scene in the library had been, her going left a pall of silence in the room. Harry Sanderson looked at David Stires with pale intentness.

"Yet I would have given my life," he said in a low voice, "to save her this!"

Something in the tone caught the old man. He glanced up.

"I never guessed," he said slowly—"I never guessed that you loved her too."

But Harry had not heard. He did not even know that he had spoken aloud.

David Stires turned his wheel chair to the Korean desk, touching the bell as he did so. He took up the draft and put it into his pocket. He pressed a spring; a panel dropped and disclosed a hidden drawer, from which he took a crackling parchment. It was the will against whose signing Harry had pleaded months before in that same room. The butler entered.

"Witness my signature, Blake," he said and wrote his name on the last page. "Mr. Sanderson will sign with you."

An hour later the fast express that bore Jessica and David Stires was shrieking across the long skeleton railroad bridge, a dotted trail of fire against the deepening night.

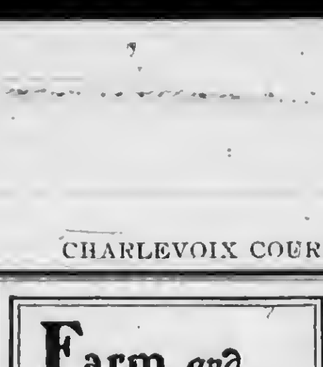
Farm and Garden

ALCOHOL ON THE FARM.

The Denatured Variety May Now Be Made Legally.

Two years ago congress passed a law taking the internal revenue tax from denatured alcohol. This bill was passed with the aid and by the influence of farmers, who were led to believe that this bill would help them settle a hard question of light and fuel. Many of them thought that after the bill was passed the average farmer would be able to make alcohol on the farm at a low price and that he could use this alcohol in place of other fuel. The result has been disappointing to such farmers. The price of alcohol is still so high that it cannot be used in place of wood or coal. At the time the bill was passed many well informed farmers all over the country feared that the alcohol industry would be much the same as the beet sugar business—that it would not be made on the small farms, but concentrated in the factories, where farm produce is brought, very much as sugar beets are brought to the factory or milk or cream to the creamery.



SMALL FRENCH STILL.

There is still, however, a demand for a small distilling apparatus, but so far nothing of practical use has been made in this country.

The illustrations given herewith are taken from a French catalogue and show two devices for making alcohol in small quantities. They are popular in France. These pictures give an idea of the way the machines are operated. The small ones appear to be pretty close to toys, but there are larger and more expensive devices which are really practical.

A great deal of the alcohol making in France appears to be done by traveling distillers, who go from place to place very much the same as grain threshers travel in this country. They will go to a farmer's place and work apples, potatoes, beets or other material into alcohol at a stated price. It is doubtful whether this method will be practical in this country for a good many years, as the conditions here are very different from those on the other side.

SIMPLE FARM APPARATUS.

SEED WHEAT.

Grade Generally Used Not Up to the Standard.

That the grade of seed wheat generally used is not up to the standard was ascertained in an investigation by G. W. Shaw of the California station, who secured a large number of samples of seed wheat over a wide area in the Sacramento and San Joaquin valleys of California to determine the general character of the seed used by the farmers of the state. In general the samples showed that the quality of seed used by most farmers is lacking in purity, perfection of development, weight per bushel, freedom from weeds and freedom from hunt. It is stated that practically all investigators have found the use of large, plump seed and of a high weight per bushel the most profitable. No permanent benefit is believed to be secured from the frequent exchange of seed unless a better type of wheat or a more vigorous strain of the same type is obtained by the exchange. The use of seed from heavy yielding plants, a plump and heavy grain, a clean wheat and a pure variety are considered by him the most important points in seed selection.

In this connection the results secured by E. G. Montgomery of the Nebraska station in an experiment with seed wheat and seed oats selected by the use of the fanning mill are of interest. In these experiments heavy seed wheat as separated by the fanning mill did not show an improvement in either yield or quality of grain as compared with light or unseparated seed, and it is believed that no permanent improvement in quality or yield is to be expected from the use of the fanning mill in seed selection.

At first thought it would seem that if "like produces like" the large, or heavy seeds should produce the best crop. However, we must recognize the individual plant as a unit for selection rather than the individual seed. If a single plant of wheat be taken and the kernels thrashed out it will be found that all sizes of kernels are produced by the plant, some large and some small.

As every wheat plant contains both heavy and light seed, the fanning mill gives almost the same kind of wheat, so far as inheritance is concerned, in the light wheat as in the heavy. It must be remembered that reference is made here to the permanent results which may be expected from the use of the fanning mill and that its use or the use of screens for removing obnoxious weed seed is in no way discouraged.

Honey Vinegar.

A modification of a French generator devised at the Arizona station will prove especially serviceable where only small amounts of honey wine are to be made into vinegar from time to time. A good wine or alcohol barrel is carefully painted on the outside to prevent corrosion of the hoops. A vent hole is now bored in each end of the cask near the chime on the side next the bung and covered with a fine screen to keep out insects. At the bottom of one end a spigot is inserted and a perpendicular row of gimlet holes bored and fitted with wooden plugs to act as a gauge. Fresh wine, which must first be fully fermented, can be added from time to time through a tube passing in at the bunghole and ending near the bottom of the cask. In this way the active film will not be disturbed by drawing off a little vinegar or adding a little fresh wine. The tube must not be of metal, but can be of glass where available. In this region a large stalk of native cane, the joints of which have been perforated with a hot iron, makes a very serviceable tube. A tin funnel may be used in pouring the wine into the tube. A similar apparatus has been found very serviceable in France for converting table wine waste into vinegar. Such wastes under suitable temperature conditions yield good vinegar in ninety days. The generator is started with a mixture of about three-fourths wine and one-fourth good vinegar. When once started no new vinegar need be added.

Courier Grange Column

Five Hundred Charlevoix County Patrons Will go to Traverse City in 1909

Lecturer's Department

This department is designed to be to Charlevoix county what the quarterly lecturer's conferences are in counties differently located than ours, where lecturers are able to get together from all portions of the county and talk their work over, as without live aggressive lecture work no grange can be a strong working grange.

A new year of particularly aggressive grange work has commenced in this county, one which will require the best efforts of all lecturers.

Report both your successes and failures to this office, and I will either answer you through this column or personally; and together, we will secure uniformity in the work which is the only true way to achieve success.

Patron's Rallying Song

Come all Charlevoix patrons, and join in a song.
Sing it with a spirit that will move us right along.
Sing it as we're going to sing it full five hundred strong.
When we all go down to Traverse next December

We'll tell them of our fertile soil, that grows the sugar beet,
And of our big red apples, we know they can't be beat.
Oh won't we have a glorious time, we'll get there with both feet.
When we all go down to Traverse next December.

The farmers on the saddle, the grafter's on the run,
Organization is our weapon; our every fight we've won.
But when we go to Traverse, we're going there for fun,
Yes, we're all going to Traverse next December.

Chorus: Hurrah! Hurrah! Come join in our cry.
Hurrah! Hurrah! We win when e'er we try.
Oh won't we have a jolly time. Its coming by-and-by.
When we all go down to Traverse next December.

Barnard Grange No. 986.

Barnard Grange met in regular session December 20, with Worthy Master S. Godbold in the chair, with an attendance of sixteen, visitors three.

After the regular routine of business, a recess was declared, and the steward announced that the ladies had the oyster supper ready. The grangers looked pretty thin when they went down to the basement but when they came out they had a hump on each side of 'em.

After recess the grange was called to order and the election of officers for the ensuing year was in order. Worthy Master Godbold announced he was not a candidate for any office.

Election resulted as follows:
Master—Allen Bollmis.
Overseer—George Dougherty.
Lecturer—Libbie Shapton.
Steward—James Willis.
Chaplain—Albert Beattie.
Treasurer—Henry Gortsell.
Secretary—Edmund Shapton.
Assistant Steward—Clarence Beattie.
Gate Keeper—Dana Spayd.
Ceres—Jennie Beattie.
Pomona—Bertha Heise.
Flora—Maggie Godbold.
L. A. S.—Effie Willis.
Insurance Director—Samson Godbold.

Next meeting January 13, when the installation of officers will take place, and a supper will be given by the ladies. All patrons are welcome.

Receipts, $13.55. Disbursements $13.50.

Peninsula Grange No. 706.

The following officers were elected at the last meeting of Peninsula grange:

Master—Fred Heller.
Overseer—Joe Kenny.
Director—Mrs. Fred Heller.

GALLOWAYS TO THE FRONT.

Brs These Desireble Cattle Or...ize an Association.

The Galloway breeders of several western states have organized the Western Galloway Breeders' association, the object being to increase the demand for this desirable breed of cattle. In addressing the association recently G. E. Clark, its secretary-treasurer, said in part:

"Once you have induced a man to use a good pure bred Galloway sire you have a possible convert to the pure bred cattle business. If he is progressive he is not long in detecting their value, and the most successful breeders of pure bred cattle attain their position only through years of patient endeavor, beginning with one pure bred sire which possibly cost him $100 and looked very much more unreasonable than did $300 or $400 a few years later.

"Right here I wish to make mention as to prices. I have received letters from a few breeders who say that they have to sell their bulls for $40 to $50 per head. A farmer can well afford to pay more money than that for a bull and should be made to do so. Any farmer can well afford to pay $150 for a good bull to use on a herd of common cows and then make a large profit by the investment. But the great mass of farmers are still unconvinced.

"There is not a farmer in this whole country that would even hesitate at $150 for a good work horse simply for the work there is in him. Teams are selling from $300 to $500. Is it not a strange judgment of values that will hesitate at paying that price for an animal that will put many times $150 more selling value into his herd for years to come?"

Life of the Machine Depends Upon the Care It Receives.

By EDWARD H. WEBSTER.

If the separator shakes while it is skimming there will be some intermixing of the milk and cream, and the result is poor work. The operator should aim to secure two things if he expects his machine to do good work—(1) a perfectly true mating of bowl, and, (2) a sufficient speed (which must be uniform) to create force for separating.

In order to have the perfect motion of the bowl the machine must be set level and be kept clean and well oiled. The oil should be thin, or light, so that it will not gum the wearing parts. A heavy oil will make the machine run hard and will gum quickly on small high speed bearings. All the bearings of the machine should be frequently flushed with coal oil. It is well to make a run about once in two or three weeks, using coal oil on all the bearings. This keeps the parts free from gum and washes out grit or sand that may have blown into them.

It is an excellent plan to have a cover of closely woven cloth or oilcloth that can be kept over the machine while it is not in operation. This will keep out dust and sand and will aid materially to the lasting powers of the machine. The separator should be set up on a good solid floor, so that it will not move or sway as the operator turns the crank.

The life of a separator depends mainly upon the factors just pointed out. A machine that is allowed to run gummy or dirty may wear out in a year. If kept free from dirt and well oiled it will last a number of years.

Spots on Tamworth Hogs.

In reply to the questions, "Do Tamworth hogs ever vary in color from a red? Do they ever have any spots on them?" the secretary of the American Tamworth association says:

From the best information that I can obtain Tamworths in England some years ago almost invariably had a black spot or spots upon them. The standard of excellence adopted by the Animal Pig Breeders' Association of Great Britain now gives black spots as an objection, but no indication of impurity of blood. The American Tamworth association also adopts the same ruling. Black spots are an objection, but no indication of impurity of blood or no bar to registration. It is considered that the animal of solid red is a better looking animal and more to be desired from a fancy standpoint than one with spots. Some of the very best Tamworths of late years have had small black spots upon them, but they are fast being bred off, and a great many do not wish any tendency to anything but solid color in red.

Kindness to Live Stock.

Kindness is the only profitable policy to pursue with live stock. The man with a loud or harsh voice and intrepid temper seldom ever gets along with any kind of live stock. The successful steer man moves among his cattle quietly, speaking gently. Kindness and gentleness are the requisites for the best care of all live stock. Never should your milk cows be stroked by anything other than the gentle touch of the hand or grooming brush.

Veneer.

The woods principally used for making veneer are red gum, maple and yellow poplar, which together yield more than half of the total product. Red gum is largely used for baskets and maple for furniture. More valuable than these, however, are white oak and walnut veneer. Beech, which can be cut very thin, is used very largely for wooden plates. A number of other kinds of woods are used

PINE LAKE LODGE KNIGHTS OF PYTHIAS

Hold Installation and Banquet Monday Evening.

NEW OFFICERS THE ENTERTAINERS

Toastmaster and Speakers Were at Their Best.

Jewel Presented to George W. Priest—Fine Musical Selections—Order is in Fine Condition.

Monday evening the members of Pine Lake Lodge Knights of Pythias, and their wives and sweethearts, to the number of a hundred, attended a semi-public installation of officers for the ensuing year, an banquet, which was given by the newly installed officers at their hall on Bridge street Hugh C. McCartney officiated as installing officer, doing the work in a manner which won applause from all fortunate enough to be present.

The work of installation was interpersed throughout by musical numbers as follows:

Song—By the Lodge.

Piano Duet—Miss Johoson and Emory.

Duet—Mr. and Mrs. Woodley.

Violin Solo—Mrs. Davidson, Miss Payton.

After the installation a banquet was served, the newly installed officers acting as hosts.

Lisle Shanahan officiated as toastmaster and was at his best. The following toasts were responded to.

"Our Guests—The Ladies," Hon. F. W. Mayne.

"Our New Members," Rollie L. Lewis.

"Scotland," Dr. R. B. Armstrong.

"Good Fellowship," Hon. R. W. Paddock.

"The Relationship Between Pythians and Sugar Beets," E. B. Ward.

"Stories," Dr. J. B. Thielen,

Both toastmaster and speakers were at their best and the evening will long be remembered.

At the close of the banquet a beautiful past officer's jewel was presented to Past Chancellor Commander George W. Priest as a token of the love and esteem felt for him by his brother Knights.

During the past year the order has made a remarkably fine growth in our city having become finely located in their new quarters and a rapid increase of membership which has been recruited from the ranks of our best young men has taken place.

RECEIVED 2,300 VOLTS

Floyd Bettys did at the City Electric Light Plant this Morning.

This morning Floyd Bettys, one of the employes of the city lighting plant, while working in repairing the switchboard, brought his arm in contact with one of the live wires, receiving a charge of 2,300 volts, badly burning his arm from the elbow to the knuckle of the middle finger. His receiving the current shut off the power from Bellaire for a while. Mr. Bettys beyond receiving a badly burned arm received no other injuries, which is remarkable in view of the fact that only 1200 volts are required to kill a man in the states where electricity is the mode of execution.

Business has Increased

The Michigan Investor says: "The increase in the deposits of the two banks at Cadillac since May 1st last is attributed by temperance advocates as the direct results of the adoption of local option. The experience of the banks is also the experience of nearly all the business concerns of the city, many of them said they are doing as good or a better business then a year ago, notwithstanding the fact that some of the manufacturing plants have been idle all summer, and others running on short time."

STATE SAVINGS BANK

Held Its Annual Meeting Tuesday Evening.

No Change in Officers Probable—Gratifying Growth the Past Year.

The annual meeting of the stockholders of the Charlevoix State Savings Bank, was held Tuesday January 12th. Out of the two hundred fifty shares of the capital stock two hundred forty-two were represented.

The efficient board which has been serving remains unchanged and the directors were re-elected as follows: R. P. Fahey, G. C. Gerken H. S. Harsha, W. J. Raehow, Guy S. Brown, H. L. Iddings and John Barns. The organization of the board will take place soon and it is not at all probable that there will be any change in officers.

During the year 1908 the business of the bank has nearly doubled and and it is enjoying a gradual even growth and without a doubt its resources will continue to increase. Beginning with the year 1909 the bank is paying .01 per cent interest on savings deposits, compounded semi-annually and this is very gratifying to its depositors.

ANTRIM WILL STAY WET

Supervisors Refuse to Take an Adjourned Session.

By a Vote of Seven to Seven, Dry's Win in Emmet.

The saloons in Antrim county have secured a lease of life for another year at least.

Local option petitions were circulating in Mancelona, Alba and several neighboring towns but the required number of names was not secured. A motion brought before the board of supervisors last week to adjourn thirty days to give the temperance people an opportunity to secure enough names to submit their petition was lost seven to seven, the Hon N.W. Burdick, of Mancelona, not being present. The question of local option can not now be voted on before a year from next April and those favoring the open saloon are jubilant over the thoughts of another "wet" year.

The present failure of the cause of local option is ascribed to two facts First, the saloon keepers of the county have an organization formed with the express purpose of securing obedience to the law in regard to closing at the proper hours and on Sundays and holidays. That this organization has done much to improve conditions in the county is an argument that the anti-saloon league encounters on all sides. Second, Antrim county went dry in the spring of 1901 for two years and many voters still blame the financial deficit which forced the issuing of $8,000 in bonds to pay current expenses, to the resulting decrease in revenue.

In Emmet county the drys won out although a hard fight was put up by the wets and the question will be voted upon next spring.

BEST IN COUNTRY

Are the Roads of Michigan According to Earle.

Three Hundred Twenty-Six Miles of Road Have Been Supervised by State Highway Department.

Three hundred and twenty-six miles of good roads have been built in this state in the last three years and a half, which is a record not equaled by any state, and these roads have been inspected and their construction supervised by the state highway department at a less cost than in any other state. The cost of inspection in Michigan has been less than 1 per cent, while the cost in other states has not been less than 3 per cent.

These are some of the facts which Highway Commissioner Earle will embody in his annual report to Governor Warner, in which he will cover the work of the department since it was organized under his supervision in July, 1905. In that period application has been made for state aid in construction of 562.2 miles of good roads. The applications were principally for aid for macadam and gravel roads, it being proposed to construct 291 miles of gravel road and 251 miles of macadam. There has been a total of 301 miles of good roads completed and there are 26 miles which will be completed by the first of the year. Of the total mileage completed, 153 miles are macadam roads, 140 miles gravel, 3.6 miles are of stone bottom with gravel top and one mile of low grade gravel road. There is pending the reward for 215 miles of road now under application of the department. In this total is included 127 miles of gravel road and 81.9 of macadam. This shows, Mr. Earle will point out, that he has gradually weaned the people from macadam roads for country use to good gravel roads which serve every purpose just as well and are not injured by automobiles as are macadam roads, and they cost less.

The department has received applications for $108,613 in state rewards for road building; it has paid $238,215 and there is now pending application for $149,786. The total amount appropriated for rewards was $120,000.

Boyne City Pair Brought to Jail Friday.

S. A. Crocker and Martha Luebke the Names of the Parties, Bail $300 Each.

Boyne City is doing its full share of late towards keeping the county jail occupied. Some weeks ago a couple giving the name of S. A. Crocker and wife struck Boyne City and the man has been engaged since in working at his trade of painting. They came from Petoskey and lived at a boarding house while in the city. Thursday August Luebke of Petoskey swore out a warrant for their arrest. He alleges that the woman is his wife, Martha Luebke, and that she has no right to be living with Crocker. The pair were taken into custody and had a hearing before Judge Hammond. They waived examination and were held for trial at the next term of the circuit court with bail fixed at $300 each. Not being able to procure the necessary bondsmen they were given a sleigh ride to Charlevoix by Deputy Heaton. The woman stated that Luebke had no kick coming for she had not lived with him for four years and left him because he did not support her.

HOLIDAYS FOR 1909.

Fourth of July on Sunday, Christmas on Saturday.

Holidays in 1909 will come in almost in every case upon peculiar dates. July 4 falls on Sunday, leaving the small boy with little chance to celebrate. Christmas and New Year's fall on Saturday.

Carnation day, or McKinley's birthday, the first legal holiday of the year, excepting, of course, New Year's, which is a thing of the past so far as 1909 is concerned, on Jan. 29, falls on Friday, the "hoodoo" day of the week. The birthday of Abraham Lincoln, the first martyr president, fares no better, falling on the second Friday of February. Washington's birthday falls on washday, the Monday of the same month.

Memorial day and July 4 both are on Sunday.

Easter will be April 11. Labor day, the workingmen's holiday, will be late in its month, September, falling on the 6th. Thanksgiving will be on the second to the earliest possible date, falling on Nov. 25. Next year it will fall on the 24th, but in 1911 will be six days later.

COMMITTEE MEETING

Of Pomona Grange Held Thursday—Interesting Action Taken.

Plans are Laid for the Extension of the Order in Charlevoix.

Thursday the executive committee of the Pomona Grange met at East Jordan for the purpose of out lining plans for the extension of the order in Charlevoix county. Much important business was transacted which will be of interest not only to members of the order but to all our readers.

The appointment of Glenn M. Dafoe as County Lecturer, to fill vacancy was approved by the committee.

The committee pledged its best efforts to secure an attendance of five hundred patrons from this county at the next meeting of the State Grange at Traverse City next December, and authorized the master to plan a special line of work among the granges of the county during the year, giving special assistance to Clarion and Union granges.

The Master was authorized to draft a uniform by-law for subordinate granges relative to the reinstatement of delinquent members and to have prepared a secretary's record book, to be sent to each subordinate secretary.

The next meeting of Pomona was fixed with Wilson grange Thursday February 11.

The meeting was a very enthusiastic one and each member pledged themselves to devote their best efforts to the extension of the order during the coming year.

FOR SIXTY YEARS

Has Micajah Sherman and Wife Been Married.

Anniversary Celebrated at Their Home in This City Friday.

Friday afternoon a few friends of Micajah Sherman and wife of this city gathered at their home to remind them of the sixtieth anniversary of their marriage. The time was very pleasantly spent in visiting and enjoying a splendid supper which was served the guests.

Micajah Sherman was born in Erie county New York in 1821 and came to Michigan in 1846 where he located at Lyons, Ionia county where he followed his profession of black smith, coming to Charlevoix about eight years ago.

January 8, 1849 he was married to Miss Sarah Hunt, who was born at Ann Arbor Michigan, in 1831, and they have been the parents of five children, four boys Henry M. of this city, the well-known engineer of the Beaver, Dennis of Muskegon, William of Holton and Charles F. of Bay Shore, and one daughter Mary Lydia, who is deceased.

Mr. and Mrs. Sherman are among our best known residents and everybody unites in congratulating them on the completion of sixty years of married life.

MESSAGE OF THE GOVERNOR

Is Along the Line of Progressive Legislation.

AS ADVOCATED IN PRIMARY CAMPAIGN

Regulation of Lobbying, Taxing of Telephone and Telegraphs.

Scope of Primary Law to be Enlarged, Local Option on Liquor Traffic to be Extended to Cities, Villages and Wards.

The Governor recommends that fraternal beneficiary societies be speedily placed upon a basis that will insure their perpetuity and save from bitter disappointment countless thousands of widows and orphans throughout state and nation.

That a law be enacted for better informing the public as to the nature of private banks, if not for the better protection of depositors in these so-called banks.

That a law be enacted for the regulation of the business of stock brokers.

The active measures be taken to lessen the appaling fire waste of general property.

That the National Guard and Naval Reserves be encouraged and sustained.

That the law as to admission to the home for the feeble minded and epileptic be amended and that the state be not called upon to pay the expense of maintaining inmates not in indigent circumstances.

That there be legislation in accordance with the request of the Grange and the State Association of Farmers' Clubs, giving the cities villages and townships power to restrict, or abolish the liquor traffic.

That under no circumstances should any municipality, or community, be permitted to establish more than one saloon for each 500 inhabitants, leaving it optional with the municipality, or community, to say whether the number of inhabitants per saloon shall exceed 500

That the railroad commission law be amended so as to give the commission jurisdiction over water transportation lines operated wholly between Michigan points. Other recommendations to this law are made:

That lobbying be abolished and that such representatives of legitimate interests as may be concerned in pending legislation be required to register, disclosing the source of their employment and the measures they favor or oppose.

That telegraph and telephone companies be required to pay an ad valorem tax and at the same rate as are all other property owners and tax payers who share the burden of government.

That all issues of stocks and bonds of public service corporations be required to have the approval of some competent state authority.

That the scope of the primary election law be enlarged and provision made for making all nominations, state, congressional, county and legislative, that are made by direct vote on the same day, all local acts being made to conform to the state law in this respect.

That the 10 per cent clause be eliminated from the law and that the same requirements apply equally to all candidates who are nominated by direct vote.

That greater time intervene between enrollment day and primary day and that the law be amended so as to protect the state against the great expense incident to needless and unwarranted recounts.

That, under a proper law, the heads of state departments grade their employes' salaries.

He sharply prods the auditor general, blaming the shortage in the treasury's general fund to that official's departure from the customary method of reporting the November apportionments to the superintendent of public instruction.

After reviewing the Glazier incident, he says: "It is gratifying to note that the framers of the new constitution sought to safeguard the funds of the state by providing that no deposit of state funds should be made in excess of 50 per cent of the capital and surplus of the depository."

Prohibition and Municipal Prosperity

The following press despatch from Birmingham, Ala., speaks well for prohibition prosperity:

The cry of the antis before the election was that the city government would lose $117,000 from the loss of the saloon licenses. This caused hundreds of votes to be turned against prohibition that would otherwise have gone for it, it is claimed.

The year 1908 shows an increase in the taxable values of the city of approximately 33 per cent. This will net the city during the year $80,000 more than it received from the same source last year. This great increase, however, does not include the assessments that have been raised by the board of revenue or the back tax commissioner. It is estimated in city hall circles that the taxable values of the city have been raised in this way nearly $8,000,000, which will net the city during 1909 $80,000 more than it received in 1908. This will be an increase in taxable values for two years of $17,000,000, giving the city additional taxes of $170,000, or $60,000 more than it received under the open saloon regime.

When it is taken into consideration that the buildings formerly occupied by saloons are now occupied by other kinds of business, netting the city at least $20,000 more in license, it is seen that 1909 will bring the city's net revenue up to more than $100,000 more than it received during 1907, the last year of the saloon.

A gain of $100,000, instead of a loss of $117,000, is not so bad! Even more remarkable are the figures given in the Columbus, Ga., Ledger, showing a financial gain of $50,000 the past year.

The city administration for the present year will complete its work with a balance to its credit.

This is a remarkable record, since it went into office with a deficit of $30,435.81, and additionally had to face the loss of $22,000 liquor revenue, available in previous years, making a total of over $50,000 short upon which the administration had to carry on the work of the municipality.

There was a special election, it is true, in which the people voted to levy an additional tax of one-half of a mill, and which many people yet misunderstand to have been a whole mill and which, instead of enlarging the city's revenue to over $17,000 as they think, increased it less than $9,000.

Subtract $9,000 from 50,000 and it will be seen what the 1908 administration had to face.

Every single department of the city government will have money to its credit at the end of this fiscal year.

The city owes not one dollar for money borrowed this year, except $12,000, borrowed at 4 per cent for educational purposes. This over draft only exists because taxes were not due until August and will not be all collected until January. When the taxes are paid, the amount will be repaid and the school board will not have exceeded its allowance a penny.

At the beginning of the year, Mayor Rhodes Browne and the city council determined that the various departments must live within their appropriations. Every department has cooperated, with the result that January 1 will find the city in a financial condition far ahead of that for many past years.

The result has been accomplished without dropping a single member of the police force or the fire department, as many predicted would be necessary. The police improvements have progressed on a much larger scale than was anticipated.

MILLIONS OF LIVES LOST

The Awful Toll Collected by Consumption

If the people could only understand that Catarrh is an internal scrofula—that nothing applied externally does much good—they would not need to be warned so often about this fatal disease, which when neglected, invariably ends up in Consumption, at the cost of millions of lives every year. Yet Catarrh is easily cured if the right treatment is employed.

Catarrh is caused by germs in the blood which circulate throughout the entire system. External remedies give but temporary ease. Although the effects are often seen in the form of pimples, rash, eczema or dry scaly skin, the trouble is internal, and can never be cured by external remedies.

The only way to cure catarrh is by employing a medicine which is absorbed and carried by the blood to all parts of the system, so that the mucus membrane or internal lining of the body is thoroughly medicated, soothed, disinfected of germ matter, and the soreness healed.

We have a remedy prepared from the prescription of a physician who for thirty years studied and made Catarrh a specialty and whose record of success was a cure in every case where his treatment was followed as prescribed. That remedy is Rexall Mucu-Tone. We are so positive that it will cure Catarrh in all its various forms, whether acute or chronic, that we promise to return every penny paid us for the medicine in every case where it fails to cure or for any reason does not satisfy the user.

We want you to try Rexall Mucu-Tone on our recommendation and guarantee. We are right here where you live, and you do not contract any obligation or risk when you try Rexall Mucu-Tone on our guarantee. We have Rexall Mucu-Tone in two sizes. The prices are 50c. and $1. Very often the 50c. size affects a cure. Of course, in chronic cases a longer treatment is necessary. The average in such instances is three $1.00 bottles. The Ivy Drug Store, A. H. RURAL ROADMAKING.

How Some Farmers Built a Good Highway Cheaply.

STONES FROM FIELDS USED.

Nothing Paid For Material—No Large Profit For a Contractor—Only Cost of the Road Was the Cost of Home Labor.

One fact people are slow to learn is that the soil mixture made for growing plants in does not make a good roadbed. Soil is decomposed or pulverized rock with some humus or vegetable matter. When this is wet it is mud; when very dry it is dust.

When soil is used for a road the most of the time it is in either one of these two conditions, but there are short periods when there is just the amount of moisture in the soil that makes it so compact as to be a firm road. For many years rural roadmaking has been some process of getting more soil into the road and the stones out. I can remember how under the supervision of the "path master" we used to work out the road tax by drawing soil in the road with a team and scraper and afterward throwing the stones from the roadbed into the ditch. The next year, after the soil had been flattened out by travel, the same soil was scraped into the center of the road again and the same stones thrown out. The last few years this work has been more cheaply or easily done with the road worker. This plan of roadmaking may give a fairly good country road, where heavy loads are seldom drawn, for two or three months in summer, but for the greater part of the year there is no firm, smooth roadbed, but mud, ruts and dust, says W. H. Jenkins of Sidney Center, N. Y., in Hoard's Dairyman. For the same reason that we need better schoolhouses and rural schools we need better country roads. Instituting stone or macadamized roads in agricultural localities is a most wise and farseeing policy, for it hastens the time of better agriculture and civilization and adds to the value of real estate.

Man always finds nature has anticipated his needs and is only waiting for him to work up to a point where he can use what she provides. He must learn to make his roads from the rock before the glacier has ground them into soil, not afterward. For many years in many sections the agriculturists have not known how to get rid of the stones on their fields or what use to make of outcropping ledges of rock that could be quarried. Now the modern machinery for making macadamized roads and the need of them and learning the uses of concrete will make these among their most valuable assets on the farm. As I am able to see it, the building of state roads by state funds does not best solve the problem of good roads for the farmer, but by the farmers cooperating with the state.

The local interest and effort are needed. Then they will get better roads at less cost. In many sections farmers are complaining about poor state roads. In one road district in New York two miles of macadamized road were built at a cost of $1,500 per mile. One half of this amount was subscribed by the people living in the road district, and the state paid the other half. This road was built under the supervision of the town road commissioner, and the steam road crusher and other machinery owned by the town were used. No large profit was paid to a contractor. Nothing was paid for material. The only cost of the road was the cost of labor. I would call attention to the fact that the process of scientific road building as it was done in this instance is the reverse of that so long practiced by farmers. The soil they try to keep in the road is first all removed down to the bedrock or gravel, and when the grading is done the understratum of the roadbed is made of the common field stones one or two feet thick. Next quarry stone or refuse from the quarry is broken to make a layer several inches thick, then finished with a layer of hard crushed stone from the stone crusher and rolled with the steam roller.

I drove over this two years from the time it was built and can say it was in better condition than some state roads I have seen built at the same time. I have taken pains to talk with people living on this road and find them entirely satisfied with their investment and planning to build more of this road. I think on our mile of this road four farmers live on the average. The road cost them $250 per mile, or about $163 each. The interest on the investment is less than $10, and I think all can see that no farmer can make a better investment. Here they have a roadbed that will last for many years and the yearly road tax will keep it in repair. Farms have been cleared of stone in providing material, work was provided for home labor, a road has been made in the right way, according to the principles of good road building, and the benefits that follow are beyond estimation.

THE DARDANELLES.

Changes In the Name of the Famous Two Mile Strait.

The Dardanelles, which is so familiar today, meant to our grandfathers not the Hellespont, but merely "two ancient and strong castles of Turkey, one of which is in Roumania and the other in Natolia." The famous strait was known in early Victorian geography by the name of Gallipoli. But the brave, dominating castles swept away both Hellespont and Gallipoli and gave their own name to the two mile passage. Those venerable castles, built in 1659 to "secure the Turkish fleet from the insults of the Venetians," were known, according to an early geographer, as the Old Dardanelles to distinguish them from two others at the entrance of the strait, one of which "stands in like manner in Asia and the other in Europe" and called the New Dardanelles.

In spite of the four castles, however, the passage was forced by a British fleet in 1807. In later years fortifications of a formidable nature have been constructed between the two sets of castles, and these are now properly the Dardanelles. The ultimate responsibility for naming the famous strait rests with Dardanus, the gentleman who crossed on his hide-tiated skin from Samothrace to Asia and founded the town which afterward became the city of Troy.—London Chronicle.

THE ARAB'S HORSE.

How He Is Treated and Why He Excels at Long Journeys.

It is most interesting to note the way the Arab treats his faithful friend, the horse. So inured indeed is the Arab pony by long usage and descent to the manner of life in the desert that even my own pony positively improved on the treatment, and I never saw him so fit as when he came back from the trip.

If the Arab and his horse are by legend closely allied they are in point of fact even more intimately connected. His mount is his first thought and at all times by far the most interesting topic of conversation.

He is ungroomed, unclipped, unhitched, for the Arab prefers to shackle him by means of two ropes, a short cord connecting the fore and hind fetlocks and a long line tethering him above the hind fetlock to a peg in the ground. Thus he can move about or roll at leisure and should there be any rough herbage at hand can forage for it.

Perhaps one of the principal reasons why the Arab so excels at long journeys is that he never worries himself, nor does he ever distress his mount unless there is real cause to do so. He simply continues a steady walk all day—and hardly ever gallops—in the wild way in which one so often sees him depicted by artists.—London Field.

Bill's Specialty.

They found the old man sitting on the fence smoking his corncob.

"Howdy, pap! What's your son Jim doing these days?"

"Jim? Oh, he's running a telegraph key at the depot. Jim's an operator."

"And how's Zeke?"

"Zeke? Waal, Zeke is captain of a lake steamer, the's a navigator."

"And Pete? Is he still living?"

"Oh, yes. Pete's working on an airship. He's what they call an aviator."

"Well, what has become of Bill. Is he doing anything?"

The old man blew a quid of tobacco at a wide eyed grasshopper.

"Yep, stranger, Bill's hanging around the house all day grumbling and complaining and saying the country's going to smash. Bill's just an aggravator—just a plain aggravator."—Judge.

Weevil In Wheat.

H. A. Gossard, entomologist of the Ohio experiment station, gives the following method of ridding wheat bins of weevil:

To destroy weevils working in wheat bins fumigate with bisulphide of carbon. Procure one pound of the liquid for each thousand cubic feet of space inclosed in the bin. Pour the liquid into shallow containers, such as plates or tin pans, and set on top of the grain.

Make the building as nearly air tight as possible by pasting paper strips over the cracks, windows, etc. If the door does not fit tightly tack a horse blanket over it with lath strips after charging the bin with the chemical. Keep closed for thirty hours. Do not bring a lamp or light of any kind, such as a lighted cigar, near the building while fumigation is in progress. Fumigation for thirty hours ought not to injure the grain for either seeding or milling purposes. If one fumigation does not succeed repeat the treatment as often as necessary, increasing the dose if the building leaks gas.

Holyoke's Test of Tar Macadam.

A year's experience in the use of gas tar produced at the municipal plant in Holyoke, Mass., has increased the confidence of the members of the board of public works in the value of that material in the construction of macadam roads. The tar from the city gas plant costs only 2 cents a gallon as compared with 6 cents or more for the ordinary commercial article. Although not carefully refined and brought to a uniform standard, the material has given good results at a remarkably low cost. As laid in Holyoke a new macadam road can be laid with two pourings of tar on the surface costs for 80 cents a square yard. This year the tar macadam will be used on more heavily traveled streets than those laid last year. To get the best results experience has taught that the broken stone screenings should be free from all dust and as clean as if washed. If the fine stone on which the tar is poured is dusty the tar does not stick.

Chapter 7

HARRY SANDERSON as he walked slowly back from a long ramble in knickerbockers and Norfolk jacket over the hills was not thinking of the sights and sounds of the pleasant evening. He had tramped miles since sundown and had returned as he set out, gloomy, unrequited, a follower of baffled quest.

Set back from the street in a wide estate of trees and shrubbery stood a great white porched house. Not a light had twinkled from it for nearly a year. The little city had wondered at first, then by degrees had grown indifferent. The secret of that prolonged honeymoon' Harry Sanderson and the bishop alone could have told, for the bishop knew of Hugh's criminal act. He was named executor of the will that lay in the Korean chest, and him David Stires had written the truth His heart had gone out with pity for Jessica, and understanding. The secret he locked in his own breast, as did Harry Sanderson, each thinking the other ignorant of it.

Since that wedding day no shred of news had come to either. Harry had wished for none. To think of Jessica was a recurrent pang, and yet the very combination of the safe in his study he had formed of the letters of her name! In each memory of her he felt the fresh assault of a new and fireless foe—the love which he must deny.

Outcast and criminal as Hugh was, castaway, who had stolen a hunk's money and a woman's love, he was still her husband. Hugh's wife! What could she be to him? And this fevered conflict shot through with yet another pang, for the waking smart of conjunction which had risen at Jessica's bitter cry. "You helped to make him what he has become!" would not down. That cry had shown him in one clarifying instant the follies and delinquencies of his early career reduplicated as through the facets of a crystal, and in the polarized light of conscience Hugh—loafer, gambler and thief—stood as the type and sign of an enduring accusation.

But if the recollection of that wedding day and its aftermath stalked always with him—if that kiss had seemed to cling again and again to his lips as he sat in the quiet of his study—no one guessed. He seldom played his violin now, but he had shown no outward sign. As time went on he had become no less brilliant, though more inscrutable; not less popular, save perhaps to the parish heresy hunter, for whom he had never cared a straw. But beneath the surface a great change had come to Harry Sanderson.

Tonight as he wended his way past the house in the aspens, through the clatter and commotion of the evening, there was a kind of glaze over his whole face—a shell of melancholy.

Tomorrow began Harry's summer vacation, and he had planned a month's pedestrian outing through the wide ranch valleys and the farther ranges, and this should set him up again.

Now, however, as he walked along he was bitterly absorbed in thoughts other than his own needs. He passed more than one acquaintance with a stare of nonrecognition. One of these was the bishop, who turned an instant to look after him. The bishop had seen that look frequently of late and had wondered if it betokened physical illness or mental inquiet. More than once he had remembered, with a sigh, the old whisper of Harry Sanderson's early wildness. But he knew youth and its lapses, and he liked and respected him. Only two days before, on the second anniversary of Harry's ordination, he had given him for his silken watch guard a little gold cross engraved with his name and containing the date.

At a crossing the sight of a knot of people on the opposite side of the street awoke Harry from his abstraction. They had gathered around a peripatetic street preacher, who was holding forth in a shrill voice. Beside him on a short pole hung a dripping gasoline flare, and the hissing flame lit his bare head, his thin features, his long hair and his bony hands moving in vehement gestures. A small melodeon on four wheels stood beside him, and on its front was painted in glaring white letters:

HALLELUJAH JONES.
Suffer me that I may speak, and after that I have spoken mock on.—Job xxi, 3.

From over the way Harry gazed at the tall, stooping figure pitilessly betrayed by the thin alpaca coat, at the ascetic face burned a brick red from exposure to wind and sun, at the flashing eyes, the impassioned earnestness. He paused at the curb and listened curiously, for Hallelujah Jones with his evangelism mingled a spice of the zeal of the socialist. In his thinking the rich and the wicked were mingled inextricably in the great chastisement. He was preaching now from his favorite text: "Woe to them that are at ease in Zion."

"Woe to them that are at ease in Zion."

Harry smiled grimly. He had always been "at ease in Zion." He wore sumptuous clothes. The ruby in his ring would bring what this plodding exhorter would call a fortune. At this moment Hede, his dapper Finn chauffeur, was polishing the motor car for him to take his cool evening spin. That very afternoon he had put into the little safe in the chapel study $2,000 in gold which he had drawn, a part for his charities and quarterly payments and a part to take with him for the exigencies of his trip. The street evangelist over there preaching paradise and perdition to the grinning yokels often needed a square meal and was lucky if he always knew where he would sleep.

The thread of his thought broke. The bareheaded figure had ended his harangue. The eternal fires were banked for a time, while, seated on a camp stool at his melodeon, he proceeded to transport his audience to the heavenly meads of the New Jerusalem.

Two, three verses of an old fashioned hymn he sang, and after each verse more of the bystanders, some in real earnestness, some in impious hilarity, chanted in the chorus:

"Palms of victory!
Crowns of glory!
Palms of victory I shall wear!"

Harry walked on in a brown study, the refrain ringing through his brain. At the chapel gate lounged his chauffeur awaiting orders.

"Bring the car round, Hede," said Harry, "and I shan't need you after that tonight. I'll drive her myself. You can meet me at the garage."

The study was pitch dark, and Rummy halted on the threshold with a low, ominous growl as Hurry fumbled for the electric switch. As he found and pressed it and the place flooded with light, he saw a figure there, the figure of a man who had been sitting alone, beside the empty hearth, who rose, shrinking back from the sudden brilliancy.

It was Hugh Stires.

Chapter 8

HARRY SANDERSON stared at the apparition with a strange feeling, like rising from the dead. The aristocratic features were ravaged like a nicked blade. Dissipation, exposure, shame and unbridled passion had each set its separate seal upon the handsome countenance. Hugh's clothes were shabby genteel and the old slinking grace of wearing them was gone. A thin beard covered his chin, and his shifty look, as he turned it first on Harry and then nervously over his shoulder, had in it a hunted dread, a dogging terror, constant and indefinable. From bad to worse had been a swift descent for Hugh Stires.

The wave of feeling ebbed. Harry drew the window curtains, swung a shade before the light and motioned to the chair.

"Sit down," he said.

Hugh looked his old friend in the face a moment; then his unsteady glance fell to the white carnation in his lapel as he said, "I suppose you wonder why I have come here."

Harry did not answer the implied question. His scrutiny was deliberate, critical and inquiring. "What have you been doing the last year?" he asked.

"Why did you leave it?"

"A little of everything," replied Hugh. "I ran a bucket-shop with Moreen in Sacramento for awhile. Then I went over in the mining country. I took up a claim at Smoky Mountain. That's worth something or may be sometime."

"Why did you leave it?"

Hugh touched his parched lips with his tongue. Again that nervous, sidelong look, that fearful glance over his shoulder.

"I had no money to work it. I had to live. Besides, I'm tired of the whole thing."

The backward glance, the look of dread were tangible tokens. Harry hesitated then

"You are not telling the truth," he said shortly. "What have you done?"

Hugh flinched, but he made sullen answer: "Nothing. What should I have done?"

"That is what I am now inquiring of myself," said Harry. "Your face is a book for any one to read. I see things written on it, Hugh—things that tell a story of wrongdoing. You are afraid."

Hugh shivered under the regard. Did his face really tell so much?

"I don't care to be seen in town," he said. "You wouldn't either, probably, under the circumstances." His gaze dropped to his frayed coat sleeve. In his craven fear of something that he dared not name even to himself and in his wretched need he remembered a night once before when he had sidled into town drunken and sodden to a luxurious room, a refreshing bath, clean linen and a welcome.

"You're the only one in the world I dared come to," he said miserably. "I've walked ten miles today, for I haven't a red cent in my pocket, nor even decent clothes," he ended.

"That can be partly remedied," said Harry after a pause. He took a dark coat from its hook and tossed it to him. "Put that on," he said. "You needn't return it."

Hugh caught the garment. In another moment he had exchanged it for the one he wore and was emptying the old coat's pockets.

"Don't sneak!" said Harry with sudden contempt. "Don't you suppose I know a deck of cards when I see it?"

The thin scar on Hugh's brow reddened. He thrust into his pocket the pasteboards he had made an instinctive move to conceal and buttoned the coat around him. It fitted sufficiently.

"Look here, Harry," he began, "you were a good fellow in the old days. I'm sorry I never paid you the money I borrowed. I would have but for—what happened. But you won't go back on me now, will you? I want to get out of the country and begin over again somewhere. Will you loan me the money to do it?"

Hugh was eager and voluble now. The man to whom he appealed was his forlorn hope. He had come with no intention of throwing himself upon his father's mercy. He had wished to see anybody in the world but him.

"If you will, I'll never forget it, Harry!" he cried. "Never, the longest day I live! I'll use every dollar of it just as I say! I will, on my honor!"

"Honor!" he said. "Have you enough to swear by? You are what you are because you are a bad egg. You were born a gentleman, but you choose to be a rogue. Do you know the meaning of the word honor or right or justice? Have you a single purpose of mind which isn't crooked?"

"You're—just—like—the—rest, then," Hugh retorted. "Just because I did that one thing you'll give me no more chance. Yet the first thing I did with that money was to square myself. I paid every debt of honor I had. That's why I'm in the hole now. But I get no credit for it, even from you. I wish you could put yourself in my place."

Harry had been looking steadily at the sallow face with its hoof print of the satyr, not seeing it, but hearing his own voice say to Jessica: "I was my brother's keeper. I see it now." And out of the distance, it seemed, his voice answered:

"Put myself in your place! I wish I could! I wish to God I could!"

The exclamation was involuntary, automatic, the cumulative expression of every throe of conscience Harry had endured since then, the voice of that remorse that had cried insistently for reparation, dinning in his ears the fateful question that God asked of Cain. Suddenly a whirl of rage seized him, unmeasured, savage, malicious. He had despised Hugh, now he hated him—hated him because he was Jessica's husband and, more than all, because he was the symbol of his own self abasement. A daredevil side of the old Satan Sanderson that he had chained and barred rose up and took him by the throat. He struck the oak wainscoting with his fist, feeling a red mist grow before his eyes.

"So you paid every 'debt of honor' you had, eh? You acknowledge a gamester's honor, but not the obligation of right action between man and man! Very well. Give me that pack of cards. You want money—here it is!"

He swiftly turned the clicking combination of the safe, wrenched open the door and took out two heavy canvas bags. He snapped the cord from the neck of one of these, and a ringing stream of double eagles swept jingling on the table. He dipped his hand in the yellow pile. A thought mad as the hoofs of runaway horses was careening through his brain. He felt an odd lightness of mind, a tense tingling of every nerve and muscle.

"Here is two thousand dollars—yours if you win it—for you shall play for it, you gambler, who pays his debts of 'honor' and no other! You shall play fair and straight, if you never play again!"

Hugh gazed at Harry in a startled way. This was not the ministerial Harry Sanderson he had known—this figure with the white, infuriate face, the sparkling eyes and the strange, veiled look. This reminded him of the reckless spirit of his college days, that he had patterned after and had stood in awe of.

"How can I play," he said, "when you know very well I haven't a sou marked?"

Harry stuffed the gold back into the bag. He snatched the cards from Hugh's hand and a box of waxen envelope wafers from his desk. There was a strange light in his eyes, a tremor in his fingers.

"It is I who play with money," he said. "My gold against your counters! Each of those hundred red disks represents a day of your life—a day, do you understand—a red day of your is what we give you—no bluff. Would you rather wear clothes that are chopped out and put together by machinery and of the same pattern as 25 to 100 other fellows can buy or wear those made by legitimately by hand throughout by a real tailor?

Don't be bluffed with your eyes wide open into believing that the "make believe tailor" gives you anything but a "guess fit" and cheap made clothes.

Why look as if you had joined some uniform brigade when you can come to us and select an exclusive pattern for yourself, something 50 other fellows can't buy?

Give us a call and we will demonstrate to you what real tailoring is.

A CHECK ACCOUNT

Assists you to save by pointing out useless expenditures.

The man who knows where every cent goes is better able to dispense with luxuries. The things that you do not need are the ones that make the expense bill high. Might it be possible to cut down in some places and save a little each month?

A check account will furnish you with an accurate record of all amounts spent. It gives you a grip on expenditures because you can tell what was bought, when you got it, and from whom. This method will put you ahead.

If you don't know where you can save, a check account will tell you.

Republican State Convention Call.

Grand Rapids, Mich Jan. 11, 1909.

To the Republican Electors of the State of Michigan:

The state convention of the Republicans of Michigan is hereby called to meet in the City of Grand Rapids on Friday, February 12, 1909, at eleven o'clock in the forenoon, for the purpose of nominating two candidates for the office of Justice of the Supreme Court, two candidates for the office of Regent of the University, one candidate for the office of Superintendent of Public Instruction; one candidate for the office of member of the State Board of Education, and six candidates for the office of member of State Board of Agriculture, and for the transaction of such other business as may properly come before the convention.

In accordance with the provisions of law and the action of the Republican State Central Committee, every county will be entitled to one delegate for each two hundred and fifty of the total vote cast therein for the Republican candidate for Secretary of State at the last election and one additional delegate for a majority of 125 votes or more.

Under the resolutions of 1858, no delegate will be entitled to a seat in the convention who does not reside in the county he proposes to represent.

The delegates from the several counties in each Congressional District are requested to meet in district caucus at ten o'clock a. m., on the day of the state convention, and select office as follows, to present to the state convention for confirmation:

One Vice President.
One Assistant Secretary
One member of the committee on "Credentials."
One member of the committee on "Permanent Organization and Order of Business."
One member of the committee on "Resolutions."

By order of the Republican State Central Committee.
GERRIT J. DIEKAMA, Chairman.
DENNIS E. ALWARD, Secretary.

Apportionment of Delegates.

The following is the apportionment of delegates to the several counties on the basis of the total vote cast for the Republican candidate for secretary of state at the last election, viz: one delegate for each two hundred and fifty votes and one additional delegate for a majority of one hundred and twenty-six votes or more.

Fortify Yourself

AGAINST pneumonia and similar troubles by breaking up a cold before it gets a good hold on your system. In other words, nip a cold in the bud, then you will not have to worry about its future stages.

Rexall COLD TABLETS

Are the best thing in the world to break up a cold. They have the advantage of similar preparations because they are made for one specific purpose — that of curing colds. They strike at the root of the trouble, equalizing blood conditions, and opening the pores so that the body can breathe and purify itself more.

Rexall Cold Tablets positively cure colds, grippe and catarrh. They also prevent diphtheria, pneumonia and bronchial troubles. You should never be without them.

"I AM aware there are some who have already celebrated the county option law's repeal, and I beg to remind all those who contemplate its repeal that it is the livest wire in the political machinery in this commonwealth, and is charged with enough electricty to electrocute the party that repeals it.

"Alcohol must be held responsible for about four-fifths of the anti-social propensites that make necessary the huge paraphernalia of police systems, criminal courts, jails, prisons and reformatories that constitute so serious a blot upon present day civilization.

"The general relation between alcohol and pauperism is everywhere recognized. Investigations made give secure warrant for the belief that at least one-third of all the recognized pauperism in the most highly civilized communities of Christendom result from bodily and mental inefficiency due to alcoholic indulgence. It is fairly demonstrable that as a minimum one-fourth of the seekers of charity outside of almshouses and almost one-half of the dependent children in America owe their deplorable condition to alcohol. The same cause is responsible for the mental overthrow of fully one-fourth of all the unfortunates who are sent to the asylum for the insane; for the misfortune of two-fifths of the abandoned children and for the moral delinquency of at least one-half of the convicts in our prisons and not less than four-fifths of the inmates of our jails and almhouses."

SAVE RECIPE ANYWAY

Put It In a Safe Place, for It May Come in Handy.

Says Home-Made Mixture Is Easily Prepared, and Cures Weak Kidneys and Bladder.

Here is a simple home-made mixture as given by an eminent authority on Kidney diseases, who makes the statement that it will relieve almost any case of Kidney trouble if taken before the stage of Bright's disease. He states that such symptoms as lame back, pain in the side, frequent desire to urinate, especially at night; painful and discolored urination, are readily overcome. Here is the recipe. Try it:

Fluid Extract Dandelion, one-half ounce; Compound Kargon one ounce; compound Syrup Sarsaparilla, three ounces. Take a teaspoonful after each meal and at bedtime.

A well-known druggist here in town is authority that these ingredients are all harmless and easily mixed at home by shaking well in a bottle. This mixture has a peculiar healing and soothing effect upon the entire Kidney and Urinary structure, and often overcomes the worst forms of Rheumatism in just a little while. This mixture is said to remove all blood disorders and cure the Rheumatism by forcing the Kidneys to filter and strain from the blood and system all uric acid and foul, decomposed waste matter, which cause these afflictions. Try it if you aren't well. Save the prescription.

HIS LIFE FOR A HAND.

An English Legend of the Time of the Crusaders.

In a little town or village in Gloucestershire there is a church which contains the mortal remains of one of the old crusaders. In mouldering effigy he is depicted on the tomb, while by his side in cold eloquence is limned the form of his wife. It will be noticed by even the casual observer that the female image is bereft of one of the hands, and the story runs that the crusader while fighting in the east was made a prisoner of war and brought before Saladin, who, before executing judgment upon him, asked him if there was any reason why he should not be put to death. To this the knight replied that he was but young and would leave a newly wedded wife, who would bitterly mourn his loss.

"The love of woman is as a fleeting breath," retorted the sultan. "Your wife will forget that you have ever lived; she will love again and marry another." To this the sad knight could only reply that on her fidelity he could rest his soul. "Well, then," replied Saladin, "I will promise on my oath as a soldier that if this man's wife will cut off one of her hands and send it to me I will set him free to go to her." By tedious and slow journeyings the message came, and she, in all piteousness for him who was her lover and her lord, caused her hand to be cut off and sent it to the sultan, who kept his word and set the crusader free.—London Notes and Queries.

RISE OF DIALECT.

Source of the Expressions "Stig 'im!" and "Sick 'em!"

When a boy in some parts of New England has occasion to set his dog upon any one or anything he exclaims, as a rule: "Stig 'im! Stig 'im!" The New York boy or the boy of the west generally says: "Sick 'em! Sick 'em!" To the western boy the command "Stig 'im!" sounds absurd; it provokes his laughter, but his own command is equally amusing to the New England boy.

This little difference illustrates the beginning of local dialect. Probably neither boy thinks of the exact meaning of what he says. He is merely repeating words he has heard others use, which he is sure, from their frequent repetition, that the dog will understand.

The boy who says "Sick 'em!" is repeating a corruption only one degree removed of the words "Seek him!" which are a very old command.

"Stig 'im!" is a corruption one degree further removed from its original than "Sick 'em!" It began with "Take him!" which was varied by the use of "so" before it—"So take him!" From this to "S' take him!" was an easy step, and the more easily pronounced "Stig 'im!" was the next corruption.—Boston Transcript.

To Whom it May Concern:

We are very much pleased to advise you that Mr. B. P. Wilkinson has gone through our factory school of instruction and has noted carefully our method of making the various parts, the assembling and testing of engines and our triple system of inspection prior to shipment.

His knowledge of the "NEW WAY" AIR COOLED ENGINES is complete and while the average user never has any trouble of moment with a "NEW WAY," in case any adjustment is necessary, he can tell you how to make it quickly.

It will be unnecessary for any user of a "NEW WAY" engine purchased of Mr. Wilkinson to call for expert help, as he is perfectly able to render assistance when necessary.

Yours very truly,

The "NEW WAY" Motor Co.

Nessen City, Benzie county is now enjoying its second time on earth, the resurrection being due to forest fires last fall which made necessary the lumbering off of several tracts of timber in that neighborhood. The local mill is being stocked with logs and it is thought that six million feet of logs will be shipped from that point this winter and about five thousand cords of bolts.

It is stated that the star of Bethlehem can now be seen in the heavens by anyone who will rise early enough in the morning. The star which is unusually bright can be seen in the east where it was discovered about ten days ago. It now makes its appearance about daybreak. The star of Bethlehem which 1909 years ago guided the wise men is said to appear only at intervals of 500 years.

Marshall Baker returned from Central Lake Wednesday morning. He had in custody Arthur Plank and Frank Young who were wanted on a charge of board jumping preferred by Landlord O'Connor of the Northern. The boys were taken before Justice Mann. On account of it being his first offense sentence was suspended in Plank's case for 60 days during which time he must report to the justice and square his account. Young, who had previously served a sentence in the reform school, was given 30 days in the county jail. The boys live in Central Lake.—Pellston Journal.

William Clark of the Ayr neighborhood was brought before Justice Harman Monday to answer to a serious statutory offense preferred by Charles Newland of the same neighborhood. The girl mentioned in the warrant is Newland's fourteen year old daughter. Clark waived examination and was bound over to circuit court for trial. The penalty upon conviction may be life sentence or any period of time in the discretion of the court. Clark appears to be about 21 years of age.—Pellston Journal.

INDIGESTION ENDS

Stomach Distress Vanishes Five Minutes Later.

Eat Sausages and New Bread or Other Favorite Foods Without Fear of Dyspepsia.

You can eat anything your stomach craves without fear of a case of indigestion or Dyspepsia, or that food will ferment or sour on your stomach if you will occasionally take a little Diapepsin after eating.

Your meals will taste good, and anything you eat will be digested; nothing can ferment or turn into acid or poison or stomach gas, which causes Belching, Dizziness, a feeling of fullness after eating, Nausea, Indigestion like a lump of lead in stomach, Biliousness, Heartburn, Waterbrash, Pain in stomach and intestines or other symptoms.

Headaches from the stomach are absolutely unknown where this effective remedy is used. Diapepsin really does all the work of a healthy stomach. It digests your meals when your stomach can't. Each triangule will digest all the food you can eat and leave nothing to ferment or sour.

Get a large 50-cent case of Pape's Diapepsin from your druggist, and start taking today and by tomorrow you will actually brag about your healthy, strong Stomach, for you then can eat anything and everything you want without the slightest discomfort or misery, and every particle of impurity and Gas that is in your Stomach and intestines is going to be carried away without the use of laxatives or any other assistance.

THE LETTER THAT KILLETH.

Trifling Errors That Have Had Big Results In Court.

It is on record that Lord Denman established great reputation at the bar by securing an acquittal in a famous case on the ground that a certain firm described in the indictment as "proprietors of a silk and cotton lace manufactory" should have been described as "proprietors of a silk and of a cotton lace manufactory," it having been ascertained that they made both silk and cotton lace.

In 1827 a judge quashed an inquisition for murder because it was referred to the jurors as "on their oaths" instead of "on their oath."

In yet another case the judge held that the omission of the word "ewe" was sufficient to invalidate a conviction because the word "ewe" as well as "sheep" was used in the statute.

In 1811 Lord Cardigan was indicted for firing on Captain Tucket in a duel. He was acquitted because the captain's Christian names were wrongly entered in the indictment.

In another case about the same period a legal document was invalidated because the letters A. D. were used instead of the words "In the year of our Lord."—Westminster Review.

Changes in Boston.

In 1630 one of the suburbs of Boston was Newe Towne, which in 1638 was changed to Cambridge and as the seat of Harvard university has an international reputation today. Since the early lines were fixed Cambridge abolished by annexation a part of Charlestown, but has ceded land to the towns of Waltham, Brighton, Watertown, Belmont and West Cambridge, the latter now known as Arlington.

The Boston of 1630, called Tri Mountain, was very different from the Boston of today. Its area was not extensive, although it included the larger portion of Quincy, out of which the town of Braintree was made at a later period. The first annexations to Boston were Noddles Island (East Boston) and the territory now covered by Chelsea.

In 1640 Boston lost its rights in Quincy, which were acquired by the town of Braintree. Subsequent additions to Boston have been Roxbury, Dorchester, West Roxbury, Brighton, Charlestown and a part of Brookline.

As an independent municipality Charlestown, which was settled as early as Boston, gave birth to Somerville, Woburn, Malden, Stoneham and Mulford and furnished land to Cambridge.—Boston Post.

Value of the Architect.

The members of a country club, the building and decoration of whose clubhouse had been placed entirely in the hands of the architect, even to the minutest furnishings, found themselves in need of new window shades and a few other small household necessities. Instead of buying the things themselves, they sent for the architect to come out and look things over and order appropriate fittings.

"That is not at all an unusual case," said the architect. "I can show you houses that I planned more than twenty-five years ago that have never been furnished with so much as a new chair without my being consulted first. Having deferred entirely to my judgment in the first place, those confiding patrons are afraid to trust their own taste in the smallest matter, and they will probably continue to ask my advice in every little detail of decoration as long as they occupy the house."—New York Globe.

Bats In a Bedroom.

An army of bats invaded the bedroom of a rectory in Dorsetshire, and from every part of the room they could be heard plunging against mirrors and glasses, knocking against the ceiling, while too often to be pleasant one would hit against the head of the bed. The rector struck a match and lit a candle. This served to attract the creatures nearer to that particular part of the room in which the bed was placed. Then the reverend gentleman placed the candle near an open window, only to find that other bats began to come in, so that it was impossible to count how many there were in the room. Another plan was tried. All the curtains were drawn aside and the east window opened wide. The light was put out, and the visitors gradually dispersed.—London Standard.

Yawning Fish.

The mouth of the turbot is twisted to one side, rather as if it had belonged to a round fish which some one had accidentally trod on and squashed half flat. The yawn begins at the lips, which open as if to suck in water. Then the jaws become distended, and it is seen that this is going to be a real, genuine fish's yawn. But the yawn goes on, works through the back of its head, distending the plates of the skull, and comes out at the gills which, open, show the red inside and are inflated for a moment; and then, with a kind of stretching shiver of its back, the fish flattens out again.—London Mail.

Originality Needed.

To revive an old style of building, no matter how well it may be done, does nothing to advance the art of building. It would at the best be but a copy of an old work. Painters copy old masters for the purpose of study, but copying pictures will never make a painter's reputation. Something new must be achieved, some original work executed, before any advance in art is possible. So it is with architecture.—Country House.

Possibly the chap who growls about the wash day dinner would have found it more pleasing to his taste if he had done the washing.—Success.

White Violets

Out of the darkness Margaret said, "Then every one knows it?"

"Every one but you, my dear. Over at the Country club it is common talk."

"But, Aunt Clara," vehemently, "they gossip so at the hotel."

"This isn't gossip. I've known it for a long time, Margaret."

"Oh"—the sigh was almost a sob—"he has always seemed such a gentleman."

"He has the training of one," Mrs. Kent affirmed. "His mother is charming."

After a moment's silence Margaret broke out, "But he saved my life, Aunt Clara."

There was a rustle of skirts as Mrs. Kent moved impatiently in her chair. "Yes, and that's the worst of it."

Mrs. Kent ended the longer silence that followed by rising for lights.

"No, no," Margaret protested. "I like it better with just the fire."

"But I must go, dear, and dress for dinner, and you will be so dreary alone in the dark."

As she rose and stood by the couch her caressing fingers touched Margaret's cheek and found tears on it.

"You'd better have the lights," she said, and there was a worried note in her voice. "I hate to leave you here alone."

"Oh, I shall be all right," Margaret said. "I'll lie here in the dark and pet Toodlekins."

Still protesting, Mrs. Kent found her way out, and after a time in the lighted room there came the sound of a stifled sob, and another and another, and after that everything was very quiet. The flame of the fire died down. The green eyes of the little cat, snuggled close to her mistress, glowed in the blackness.

The click of an electric button and the flare-up of lights brought Margaret's head out of the cushion where she had buried it. She shielded her face with her hand.

"You are early, Uncle Dick."

"I'm late. What's the matter with the lights? Why didn't you get somebody to look after them?"

"I like the dark."

"Queer jades." He gave her a keen glance and sat down in the chair by the couch. "How's the foot?"

"It hurts a little, but it's going to be all right."

"Everybody at the club is talking about your accident. They are making a regular hero of Ridgeway." He settled himself back in the big chair and smiled at her genially. "He must have had the strength of a Hercules to hold those horses back."

"He's awfully strong," Margaret said and sat up. "His college record in athletics is fine."

"He flunked in some of his studies, though," Mr. Kent teased.

Margaret's face flamed. "I know." She smoothed the little cat with nervous fingers. "Is—is he very ill, Uncle Dick?"

"Who—Ridgeway? Um—well, that depends. He's a mighty nice fellow, Peggy." He caught the eagerness of her eyes and pulled himself up. "That is—oh, well, your Aunt Clara wouldn't exactly approve of him, and—and—I don't know that he's just the friend for you, Margaret."

"Oh!" came in fluttering protest, and after that Margaret lay with her eyes closed, and nothing was said for several minutes.

"Tired, little girl?" asked her uncle finally, and when she nodded he stood up.

"I must go and dress for dinner." He hesitated by the couch, looking down at her until she opened her eyes and held out her hand and said, "Dear Uncle Dick," and then he patted her cheek and said a little huskily, "Cheer up."

This time there was no friendly darkness to hide the tears, so Margaret dabbed at them with her handkerchief and started until a ring of the front door bell brought her to an upright position.

"It's Mr. Ridgeway," the maid announced.

"I'm afraid I can't see him!" Margaret said nervously.

"Please," boomed a big voice from the hall, "please don't turn me out like that."

"Oh, well," Margaret agreed, and the maid's place between the curtains was usurped by a young man as big as his voice, who came over and picked up the pussy cat and dropped a small square box in its place. "If you'll let me pet Toodlekins I'll let you have some flowers," he said, and as he sat down the little cat curled into the hollow of his arm and sang her song of contentment, unruffled by the change.

There were white violets in the box, and Ridgeway said, his big voice softened by some fine emotion, "They always make me think of you."

"Oh, don't, don't!" Margaret said with quick caught breath, and Ridgeway stared at her in a puzzled way.

"Don't you like them?" he asked.

"Yes."

"Well, it's a funny way to show it." There was so much of the boy in him that Margaret smiled in spite of herself.

"It's because I like them so well that I don't want you to bring them to me any more."

"You don't"—

"I mean it," she said faintly. "You mustn't bring me any more flowers."

"Why not?" sharply.

"Because I can't take them."

"Why can't you take them?"

"Because"—

[illegible] out. "Do you mean that you don't want me to come?"

She held out one slim hand to him. "Don't," she said beseechingly—"don't speak to me like that. We must always be good friends, but you mustn't come."

He took her hand. "It's to be just—friends?"

"Yes."

"Never anything more?"

"Never."

"And yet that night after the accident you let me kiss you—Margaret."

"Yes," very low.

The fire flickered and sapped. The little cat, disturbed somewhat, slipped down from Ridgeway's arms and curled herself up on the rug.

"Would you mind," Margaret said at last, "turning off the upper light? The strong glare hurts my eyes."

The rosy hue of the lamp made dark the distant corners of the room. Margaret on her couch was a dim outline. The little cat was invisible except for her emerald eyes. Ridgeway came back and sat down; then he bent forward.

"Margaret," he said sharply, "you are crying."

"Yes," she sobbed, "I'm crying—oh, because you are such a black sheep, Justin."

He drew his breath sharply. "So that's it?" he said at last.

"Yes. I didn't know until tonight. Aunt Clara told me."

He stood up. "Then there's nothing more to say. Goodby."

He went to the door, hesitated and came back.

"Look here, Peggy," he said grimly, "if I were a story book hero I'd take my medicine and go away and suffer in silence. And it would all be very tragic and romantic, but it wouldn't be sensible."

He threw himself into the big chair and knitted his brows. "The sensible thing is to get over the difficulty. Let's begin at the beginning. Everybody says I'm a black sheep?"

"Yes," she murmured.

"Well, I am. I've wasted my time in riotous living, as the Bible says of the prodigal, and when I flunked in my studies I got what was coming to me. But that was before I met you, Peggy. I don't think my worst enemy could accuse me since the night I saw you at the junior prom in your white gown, with your hair twisted up in a big braid like a crown. You seemed the princess in a fairy tale, and I made up my mind then and there that I'd win out."

He drew a long breath and went on: "But now I know I'm not good enough, and I know, too, that I have not any right to ask you to wait for me. All I'll ask is that you don't condemn me utterly, don't shut me out from your life."

His voice broke. Then as she held out her hand to him he went on steadily:

"I'm only going to ask that you will believe in me and if, after two or three years, no one else has come into your life that you care—for and I have made good, that you will let me plead my cause again."

He stood looking down at her. Her cheek was laid against the bunch of white violets. Their delicate fragrance was roundabout her.

"Dear little girl," he said, "I'll stick it out at college another year, and then I'll go into business with dad and show him what I can do. And if you will have faith in me"—

She sat up, her eyes shining. "Oh," she said, "I felt that lack of it all there was a man in you, Justin—and then—when you saved my life—I felt that it belonged to you."

"I'm not half good enough," he said humbly.

She took from the bunch of violets a half dozen blossoms and held them out to him.

"They shall be a talisman," she said, "of faith and hope and love. You must let them keep you from all evil, Justin."

And as he knelt beside the couch the rapture in his eyes answered her.

It Made a Difference.

A Chinaman of noble birth had been invited to dine at William's home. His mother was very anxious that the guest should not be made uncomfortable by the little chap's curiosity, so she took him aside and explained all about the yellow skin, long braid of hair and almond eyes of the Mongolians and even showed him pictures of Chinese. She impressed upon him more than anything else the fact that the visitor was his father's friend and was to be treated with respect. Upon the Celestial's arrival William tried hard not to stare or look too curious and succeeded in being very quiet for some time, when, much to the surprise of his mother and the amusement of the Chinese, he called out, "Mamma, if he wasn't our friend wouldn't he be funny?"—Bellman.

Diving For Fish.

An Arab pilot on board an English ship located in the Persian gulf had been amusing himself in diving for oysters. After several attempts his search proved unsuccessful.

"I will now," said he to the officers of the vessel he was commissioned to convoy, "since I cannot gather oysters, dive for and catch fish."

All ridiculed the idea. He went down again, and the officers were astonished to see him after a short time rise to the surface with a small rockfish in each hand. The Arab's own explanation of the feat was that as he seated himself at the bottom the fish came around him and nibbled at his skin. Watching an opportunity he seized and secured his prey by thrusting his thumb and forefinger into their expanded gills.

Mamma—Marion, I am surprised that you should suffer a man to kiss you! Marion—But, mamma, it wasn't suffering.

sin! A day of yours against a double eagle! What you win you keep. But for every counter I win you shall pay me one straight, white day, a clean day, lived for decency and for the right!"

Hugh's eyes were fastened on the gold in Harry's fingers. Two thousand dollars! If luck came his way he could go far on that—far enough to escape the nameless terror that pursued him in every shadow. Money against red wafers? Why, it was plenty if he won, and if he lost he had staked nothing. What a fool Harry was!

Harry saw the shrewd, calculating look that came to his eyes. He caught his wrist.

"Not here!" he said hoarsely. He flung open the chapel door and pushed him aside. He seized one of the altar candles, lit it with a match and stuck it upright in its own wax on the small communion table that stood just inside the altar rail, with the cards, the red wafers and the bags of coin. He dragged two chairs forward.

"Now," he said in a strained voice, "put up your hand—your right hand—and swear before this altar, on the gambler's honor you boast of, win or lose, to abide by this game!"

Hugh shrank. He was superstitious. The calculating look had fled. He glanced half fearfully about him—at Harry's white face—at the high altar with its vases of August lilies; at the great rose window, now a mass of white, opaque blotches on which the three black crosses stood out with weird distinctness; at the lurking, unlighted shadows in the corners. He looked longingly at the gold, shining yellow in the candle light. It fascinated him.

He lifted his hand. It was trembling.

"I swear I will!" he said. "I'll stand by the cards, Harry, and for every day you win I'll walk a chalk line, so help me God!"

Harry Sanderson sat down. He emptied one of the bags at his elbow and pushed the box of wafers across the table. He shuffled the cards swiftly and cut.

"Your deal!" he said.

Chapter 9

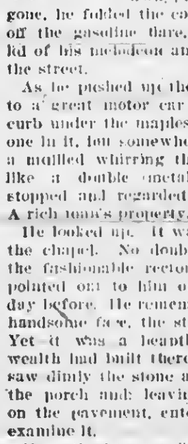
HALLELUJAH JONES had finished his labor for the night. The crowd had grown restive and finally melted away, and, his audience gone, he folded the camp stool, turned off the gasoline flare, shut down the lid of his melodeon and trundled it up the street.

As he pushed up the street he came to a great motor car standing at the curb under the maples. There was no one in it, but somewhere in its interior a muffled whirring throb beat evenly like a double metallic heart. He stopped and regarded it inquisitively. A rich man's property, to be sure!

He looked up. It was at the gate of the chapel. No doubt it belonged to the fashionable rector who had been pointed out to him on the street the day before. He remembered the young, handsome face, the stylish broadcloth. Yet it was a beautiful edifice that wealth had built there for Christ. He saw dimly the stone angel standing in the porch and, leaving his melodeon on the pavement, entered the gate to examine it.

He noticed now a dim flicker that lit one corner of the great rose window. Moving softly over the cropped grass, he approached, tilted out of the hinged panels and peered in. Two men were there, behind the altar railing, seated at the communion table.

Hallelujah Jones started back. There on the table was a bag of coin, cards and counters. They were playing—he heard the fall of the cards on the hard wood, saw the gleam of a gold piece, the smear of melted wax marring the polished oak. The reddish glow of the candle was reflected on the players' faces. They were gambling! At God's holy altar and on Christ's table! Who would dare such a profanation?



Suddenly he gave a smothered cry.

He craned his neck. Suddenly he gave a smothered cry. The player facing him, he recognized—it was the rector himself! He bent forward, gazing with a tense and horrified curiosity.

Five times, ten times, the cards had changed hands, and with every deal Harry lost. The gold disks had slipped steadily across the table. But he had seemed to be looking beyond the ebb and flow of the fortune and the pale face opposite him that gloated over its yellow pile. Though that pile grew larger and larger, Harry's face had never changed. Hugh's was the shaking hand when he discarded, the convulsed features when he scanned his draw, the desperate anxiety when for a moment fortune seemed to waver. He had never in his life had such luck! He swept his winnings into his pockets with a discordant laugh as he noted that of the contents of the opened bag Harry had but one double eagle remaining.

Harry paused an instant. He snapped the little gold cross he wore from its silken tether and set it upright by him on the table.

His hand won, and the next, and the next. Hugh hoarded his gold; he staked the red wafers—each one a day! He had won almost a thousand dollars, but the second bag had not yet been opened, and the vampire intoxication was running molten hot in his veins. The untouched bag drew him as the magnet mountain drew the adventurous Sindbad—he could have snatched it in his eagerness.

"I swear I will!" he said.

But the luck had changed. His red counters diminished, melted. He would soon have to draw on his real winnings. Cold beads of sweat broke on his forehead.

Neither saw the face pressed against the aperture. Neither guessed the wild and terrible thoughts that were raging through the mind of the solitary watcher as he peered and peered.

Scarce knowing what he did, he closed the panel softly and ran across the chapel lawn. On the pavement outside he met a man approaching. It was the bishop. The excited evangelist did not know the man, but his eye caught the ministerial dress, the plain, sturdy piety of the face. In his zeal he saw an instrument to his hand. He grasped the bishop's arm.

"Quick! Quick!" he gasped. "There's devil work doing in there! Come and see!" He fairly pulled him inside the gate.

The puzzled bishop saw the intense excitement of the other's demeanor. He saw the faint glow in the corner of the rose window. Were there thieves after the altar plate?

He shook off the eager hand that was drawing him toward the window. "Not there. Come this way," he said and hurried toward the porch. He tried the chapel door. It was fast. He had a key to this in his pocket. He inserted it with caution, opened the door noiselessly and went in, the street preacher at his heels.

Weed Seeds in Manure.

It is well known that there is considerable risk of introducing new weeds by the purchase of manure and hay and other feeding stuffs. F. L. Oswald of the Maryland experiment station undertook to obtain more definite information on this point, especially as regards dissemination through manure, by studying the effect of the fermentation of manure handled in different ways and of passing through the digestive systems of animals on the vitality of various weed seeds, including seeds of about fifty of the worst weeds found in Maryland.

In experiments in which the manure remained for six months in a barnyard heap and for a short while in piles, as when shipped in carload lots from cities, it was found that in the first case there was no danger and in the second case little danger of distributing live weed seeds. In the experiments in which the weed seeds were fed to yearling steers and the manure handled in various ways it was found that

First.—Where the manure was hauled directly from the stable as a top dressing an average of only 12.8 per cent of the seed fed germinated.

Second.—Where manure was hauled directly from the stable upon the land and plowed under 2.3 per cent of the seeds fed to animals came up.

Third.—Where the droppings remained on the pasture fields unadulterated as they fell an average of only 3.1 per cent of the seeds fed to animals germinated.

The results indicate that in general it is safe to assume that the vitality of weed seeds is destroyed in well rotted manure.

Hospitals For Trees.

"The trees of Paris will delight you," said the traveled man who was seeing off his friend. "Every boulevard and avenue has its two lines of trees. Sheltered from the hot sun, you walk under them in a cool green dusk. That hot and dusty city doesn't easily keep its trees vigorous and fresh. It must have tree hospitals—great nurseries, where, with all sorts of liquid parasite killers and all sorts of stimulating fertilizers, the rundown urban trees are built up again. Continually in Paris you see faded trees being taken up and fresh trees being put down, and fresh and faded trees alike, in those ambulances which we call transplanters, drive continually up and down the sunny streets."

MENDING OF LACE.

How It Can Be Done by Simple Processes.

Lace mending is not such a difficult occupation as many women imagine, for it may be accomplished by any one capable of doing fine needlework who is willing to devote the necessary time. And plenty of time is needed, for such a task cannot be hurried—in fact, it is the time this repairing requires almost as much as the skill necessary that makes the professional mender's charges seem unduly high.

To mend lace, at least the popular Irish crochet, the amateur should follow these simple processes: Take three thicknesses of newspapers, laying a sheet of blue tissue paper on top, then basting the four together. The lace is then laid face downward on tissue paper, which is put there to protect the lace from the printer's ink. Light blue is chosen in preference to white for the reason that the contrast between the blue and the lace helps to make the mending easier.

As a rule with Irish crochet, it is the background that needs repairing, and this is done with a crochet hook and just ordinary sewing cotton, working to accurately the stitches to match. The filling in should be done when possible from motif to motif, even though the ravage should not extend for such a distance. Of course in such a case it will be necessary to cut away threads.

To mend filet lace another process is necessary, for this work must be done on a frame, and there is nothing better for this purpose than the ten cent slate such as school children use. The slate portion is of course removed and the frame covered with flannel. The lace is then basted to it, so the hole will be in the middle, where it can be easily sewed.

How to Wash Fine Blankets.

Many good housewives do not care to risk the laundering of their fine woolen blankets to their servants, and a word might help at this season from a good housewife, who always takes this task upon herself. She first shaves a half bar of yellow soap and pours this into a pint of boiling water. She stirs this until it becomes like a thick jelly and pours it into three buckets of lukewarm water. Into this she puts the blankets and washes them thoroughly. She does not rub soap on the blankets. She puts them through a wringer and in another tub of clear, lukewarm water, then keeps on rinsing in clear lukewarm water until every particle of soap is removed and hangs on the line in the hot sun, taking care to hang them perfectly straight. She leaves them in the sun for several hours—until perfectly dry, then puts them out the next day if necessary.

How to Use Gas Safely

In using the gas lamp or stove which is attached to the pipe by means of a tube, follow an invariable rule when through with the light. Always turn off the cock next to the pipe whence the flow of gas comes. This will allow the gas in the connecting tube to be consumed. Otherwise the tubing might become loosened, and so if the gas is shut off by turning the cock next to the lamp or stove and the other cock is left on the pressure of the gas will be exerted on the tube and a leak, possibly serious, may result. Should the tube become dislodged there will be a flow of gas into the room, and from just such accidents asphyxiations have resulted.

How to Clean Lace.

To clean lace first sew muslin around a glass bottle and roll the lace carefully around it, tacking ends to muslin if necessary. It will improve the lace to touch it lightly with sweet oil while winding around the bottle. If you fill the bottle with cold water it will not burst. Set it with the lace around it in strong suds of cold water and castile soap. Then the top of bottle to kettle and boil for more than half an hour until lace is clean. Rinse with very warm water and set bottle in sun. When lace is dry, remove and lay between sheets of white paper for twenty-four hours.

How to Sew Easily.

A small cake of white soap kept in the machine drawer is a great saver of machine needles and makes sewing easier. When a thick place, such as the crossing of two seams, is reached in stitching, rub the material with the soap, and the needle will pass through it as if by magic without breaking or even bending. This treatment is particularly valuable when one is stitching sheer lawns or mousselines and using a very fine needle.

How to Cure Watery Eyes.

To have the eyes water is not only annoying and distressing, but it is at times exceedingly embarrassing. Do not strain the eyes in any way and do not use them for any trying work at night. A mild eye wash, which will bring relief in most cases, is made of one ounce of pure water and one ounce of distilled witch hazel. Bathe the eyes frequently with this wash, which is especially excellent for eyes irritated by the wind.

How to Clean Gold Lace.

To clean gold lace buy some rock ammonia from a druggist, pound it finely and apply it with a piece of clean flannel to the lace, rubbing briskly. After thorough brushing the lace will look as good as new.

Tarring of Roads.

Road tarring is becoming a habit in the automobile districts of England. The old method of applying with hand brushes is now being abandoned in favor of the use of an apparatus which is nothing more or less than a giant air brush. The tar is in a large tank, and two men pump air into it, while a third goes about the road with a pipe having four outlets through which the air throws the tar in fine spray. This rapidly and thoroughly coats the road. Sand is then sprinkled, and the dust is laid for good.

Grouchy.

"There is a movement on foot," said Mr. Snoope, "to prevent the marriage of weakminded persons. What do you think of it?"

"I think it's rot," answered Mr. Grouch. "Why, who else ever wants to get married?"—Cleveland Leader.

An Easy Stunt.

"I see a premiere danseuse is advertised to dance with five snakes twined about her."

"Should think she would. If a snake got on me I'll bet I'd dance!"—Philadelphia Ledger.

The Want of It.

Charlevoix Resorters' Song.

(Tune—"Henlah Land.")

We've reached the land of beech and pine,
Where northern suns through blue skies shine;
From city's heat a cool retreat,
Where Michigan and Pine Lakes meet.

REFRAIN.

Oh! Charlevoix, sweet Charlevoix,
Blest land where nothing can annoy,
Where friends again each other meet,
And with warm welcome strangers greet,
We sing thy praise with heart-felt joy.
Dear Charlevoix, our Charlevoix.

When nerve and brain cry out for rest,
We fly to thee, O! haven blest;
Here, free from care, from labor free—
We find rest, sweet rest in thee.

Here friends and lovers wander free,
Here children shout with playful glee;
On clear Pine Lake we sail or row,
Or seek the spots where berries grow.

A sweet perfume from Linden bees
Is borne on every passing breeze,
And clover blossoms in the grass
Exhale their fragrance, as we pass.

The waves that lash thy western shore,
Proclaim thy fame with thund'rous roar;
And zephyrs that with wavelets toy,
Murmur thy praise, O! Charlevoix.

South Arm Grange No. 815.

South Arm grange met in regular session Saturday January 9, with Worthy Master Olney in the chair, with an attendance of twenty one. All vacant offices were filled and we proceeded with the work. Our delegate, Brother Knudsen, having informed us that he would meet with us Friday January 22, and that being the night before our regular meeting we resolved to hold our next meeting January 22, instead of the 23rd. There was some discussion as to whether or not the installation should be open but we finally decided to have invitation cards printed and issued to such outsiders as we wish to invite, the cards to be taken up at the door. Brother Ralph Ranney was appointed to see about getting the cards.

After a recess the lecturers hour was carried out with songs, readings, recitations and a discussion, Resolved that our county should adopt local option. It was the general opinion that we should.

Grange closed to meet again the 22nd.

GRADING UP THE HERD.

Every farmer after careful investigation should decide what breed of cows will be best for its particular purpose, and then as far as possible he should breed up to the standard he has in view. Breed for a purpose and then keep steadily at it with a proper idea in view that will not allow of any divergence or mixing up of breeds.

Too much cannot be said of the importance of putting pure bred bulls of well known butter strains at the head of the dairy herd. The milk yield of a cow depends mainly upon her inherent milk yielding capacity. The milk yielding capacity of a herd can be largely increased by careful selection and breeding.

In herds where a large milk yield is desired special attention must be paid to using in the breed only those heifers which have been bred from best cows. The heifers from poor milkers and badly formed cows should on no account be retained, as they inherit the qualities of their mothers.

When we consider that many dairy cows yield only 100 pounds of commercial butter, while others yield up to 400 pounds, the need for grading up will be readily understood. By selecting heifers from deep milking cows and continuing the process for a sufficient length of time the average milk yield will be considerably increased.

The great fault with many dairymen is that they stint the feed. If the best results are to be obtained the cows must be fed well. The original cow was not an ideal dairy animal. She has been made so by selection and feeding. If we neglect these two things we cannot hope to improve the herds.

Breeding from good milkers will invariably produce calves which later on will give a large milk yield. On the other hand, breeding from animals whose parentage is unknown and which are crossbred must at the best be only guesswork—uncertain and unsatisfactory in its results. We may possess cows which are heavy milkers, yet their calves may not possess the same desirable qualities. As a rule, however, it will be found that good milking cows produce equally good milking heifers, provided they have been bred from a suitable bull.

Especial care should be exercised in selecting the class of sire to be used in the herd. He should be pure bred and a descendant from a deep milking strain. This point is of very great importance, but is very often entirely neglected.

It is a mistake to suppose that every pure bred bull is a good dairy animal. The sire influences the milking qualities of all the heifers in the herd. Unless the breeding of the bull is attended to little and uncertain progress can be made in the improvement of the milking capacities of the heifers. Only when both parents are descended from good milking strains can it be expected that the progeny will be good dairy animals.

Many farmers act unwisely in disposing of their great aged bulls just at the time when the owners are able to form an accurate opinion of their values as sires. It is an old and wise saying, "Judge a bull by the heifers he produces."

If the progeny are up to the expectations or beyond them, why dispose of such a sire? The answer is invariably that his heifers are coming in and he must be disposed of. This is a great mistake. It would pay fourfold to retain this proved sire for the old cows and purchase or use a young bull for the heifers. The best plan is to buy the tried sires and judge them through their heifers.

In this matter of grading up the dairy herd one must be guided by local and climatic conditions; also by nature and pastures. He should consider well before making a selection and especially in new districts, for often we find a man breeding in a certain line for years and then finding out he has made a bad choice, with the result that the years have been wasted and he has to make a fresh start.

Winter Hog Feed.

On most farms hogs get very little variety during winter. Corn is the steady diet. Naturally many animals become unthrifty because of this treatment. It is not always possible to have succulent feed, but this occasionally is available. If there is a silo on the farm hogs will eat a moderate amount of this feed. They should also be given a slop made of shorts or corn feed. At least once every two weeks let them have all the rotten wood, soil coal or mortar they desire. This supplies the mineral matter and tends to keep the animals thrifty.

Iceland Out For Fine Roads.

Highway improvement is becoming a live issue in Iceland. It is claimed that with good roads more than 40,000 acres of land could be made profitable for agricultural purposes and that such roads would lead to the development of the rich veins of gold which are known to exist near Reykjavik, the chief seaport.

PRIMARY ELECTION LAW

Senator Dickinson Introduces Administration Bill.

Nominations Mandatory on All Parties—Enrollment in April—Primary in August.

The Dickinson primary election bill, which will be the administration measure, went into the hopper Monday night. The following is a brief summary of its important points: The enrollment day will be on spring election day. The enrollment cards or slips are cut out; the application must be made in person as in regular registration. No change in party enrollment on primary day will be permitted. The nominations of United States senators, governor, lieutenant governor, congressmen, members of the legislature and all county officers are made mandatory in all counties and on all parties. The nominations in cities will be optional, but when the question is submitted for primary nominations such submission will be to the whole electorate and not to a single party, and wherever any party in any city is now operating by direct vote, all parties shall so nominate unless the question is submitted and decided otherwise by the electorate.

Primary election day is changed to the second Tuesday of August. The delegates to county conventions of all parties will be elected on the same day instead of only those in counties under the direct system as under the old law. All candidates will be nominated by pluralities, the 40 per cent clause being eliminated. Recounts shall be made by counties instead of in the state as a whole and on application to the circuit judge, the object being to shorten the time of the contest. All party committees are to be elected. The penalty clause to state appointees doing any political work is eliminated.

FIRE AT BOYNE CITY

Thursday Evening Destroyed Building Occupied by Two Stores.

Loss Is Quite Heavy With Small Insurance—New Building Will be Erected.

The fire demon again invaded the business district of Boyne City, Thursday evening about 7 o'clock an alarm was sounded caused by flames being discovered in the frame building on Lake street, near Ren, occupied by the Hankey Milling Co. and Louis Marks, the clothier. When the fire was first discovered it seemed to be in the center of the building and in the walls that seperates the Hankey company from the clothing store. The fire department had several streams playing on it, but it was a stubborn fight, the flames seemingly being where water was hard to reach. The Hankey Milling Company building being filled with flour, feed, baled hay and straw was pie for the flames as they soon spread to the whole interior of this part of the structure and eats it way into Mark's clothing store. In the Hankey building there were 280 barrels of flour, 15 tons of feed, 60 tons of hay, 7 tons of straw, 250 bushels of wheat, 50 tons of plaster besides stock feed and other material.

The firemen did good work and confined the flames to this structure, and the buildings were soon a total loss. The clothing stock of Louis Marks is a total loss, as what is not ruined by the flames is ruined by smoke and water.

The loss to the Hankey Milling company is about $4,000 on building and stock, and this covered by an insurance of only $1,500. The loss on Louis Marks stock at this time cannot be told, but is almost complete on both building and stock.

Mr. Hankey stated that in the early spring they would build a new brick structure on the site of the building, which will be pleasant news to the business interests to the city. In the meantime they have leased the building two doors south, where the bowling alley was located, and will do business at this stand. Mr. Hankey wishes to express his thanks to the fire department for their work in saving so much of his stock as they did.

HAD NARROW ESCAPE

Miss Elisabeth Putnam at Fire at Benzonia.

East Hall Completely Destroyed Will be Immediately Rebuilt.

East hall, the girls dormitory of Benzonia academy, was completely destroyed by fire early Sunday morning, the twenty girls sleeping in the building escaping in their night clothes. The loss is $10,000, insurance $2,500. The fire was caused by a steam pipe being too near the timber.

Miss Elisabeth Putnam daughter of Rev. and Mrs. H. A. Putnam of this city, teacher in music in the academy, who slept in the building was discovered to be missing after all the other occupants were accounted for and it was too late for anyone to enter the building in safety, so ladders were lashed together and raised to the roof which opened from her window from which she climbed with considerable difficulty owing to the smoke and confusion.

Principal Catton lost all his belongings and most of the teachers and students report the entire loss of clothing, money and jewelry. Miss Putnam however was enabled to save a portion of her belongings, having taken time to dress.

The building was a three story one, and was one of the first buildings erected when the academy was first established. It will immediately be rebuilt, subscriptions already having commenced coming in.

RAILROAD TAXES HIGHER

State Tax Commission Completes Assessment.

Total Valuation is $209,967,000 and Increase of $6,316,000.

The state tax commission has completed its assessed valuation of the railroad properties of the state. There is not much difference from the last assessment. The total now for all railroads in the state is $209,967,000, against $203,651,000 in the last raport, making an increase of $6,316,000. The present valuation of express and car companies is placed at $2,401,250. The last valuation was $1,888,070. This year's assessment shows an increase of $513,180.

There is quite an increase in the Pere Marquette system, being $28,000,000, against $27,150,000 at the last assessment, making an increase of $1,800,000, while the Michigan Central gets a higher assessment of $1,162,500, but the Grand Rapids & Indiana gets a decrease of $100,000 and there is a reduction of $50,000 for the Grand Trunk system. The Lake Shore & Michigan Southern system is boosted $637,000. The Chicago, Milwaukee & St. Paul is increased $300,3000, but there is a decrease in the Chicago & Northwestern of $150,000. The Detroit & Mackinac is raised from $1,000,000 to $1,065,000, an increase of $165,000.

The Ann Arbor railroad is increased from $7,800,000 to $7,931,000, making $31,000 more valuation. The Duluth, South Shore & Atlantic is raised $175,000. The Lake Superior & Ishpeming road is reduced $50,000, while the Manistee & Northwestern is raised $75,000. The Wyandotte Terminal railroad is now placed at $20,000, and even $10,000 increase. There is a reduction of 50,000 on the Cincinnati, Wabash & Michigan road. The balance of the railroads show small changes.

McCLEMENT-SMITH

Popular Charlevoix Teacher Married This Morning

Immediately Left for Clear Lake, Iowa, Where She Will Live in Future

Married, Wednesday, January 20, at seven o'clock a. m. at the home of the bride's parents, Mr. and Mrs. S. H. Smith, Arthur I. McClement, of Clear Lake, Iowa, and Miss Gertrude P. Smith, of Charlevoix, Rev. Dr. R. A. Wright officiating.

About thirty friends and relatives of the bride were present at the ceremony, after which a wedding breakfast was served. Mr. and Mrs. McClement took the train immediatly after breakfast for Clear Lake, Iowa, where they will make their future home. A goodly number of friends were at the depot to see them off and showered them well with rice.

Mrs. McClement has lived in Charlevoix county all her life where for the past ten years she has been one of our most popular school teachers.

Mr. McClement is a well known mechanic in his home city. As an evidence of the high esteem left for them, many beautiful and useful presents were received.

Weight Needed in Drafters.

Slight blemishes do not detract from the selling price of heavy draft horses, and often youngsters are placed on sale green and unbroken. It is weight that brings a premium with drafters, and with due attention to this one quality it is possible to supply horses at a net profit. It is folly to mate a draft horse with a roadster just to get something that can go a little faster. It is not speed or high action that the farmer wants, but rather weight and quality. These qualities are found only in draft stallions of the low down, blocky type, possessed of all the nuits necessary to make up the ideal specimen.—Profesaor F. C. Minkler, New Jersey Experiment Station.

Soft Coal For Hog Ills.

A breeder says. "I have been very fortunate in raising hogs not to lose many by sickness. This season we have had sickness in my neighborhood, and many farmers met with losses. I do not know whether I have struck something that is a preventive or not, but so far it has worked well. I just buy the common soft coal, which I scatter over the ground where they can get at it, and they eat it all the time. I have fed them several tons of coal in this way, and my hogs seem to be perfectly healthy. I believe that if we would look after our hogs a little more carefully and feed them certain things we would meet with fewer losses."

Potatoes For Cattle.

Small potatoes and apples are worth much as food for stock. There is, however, great danger of choking in cattle if either are fed whole, and it is a big job to cut or mush them if a large quantity is to be fed. It is perfectly safe to feed either to hogs or sheep in any kind of feed dish, but not so with cattle. But if two pieces of timber are put up just far enough apart so the animal's neck can be held between them and a hole bored through at such a height that the animal will be prevented from raising the head up to a level with the body there will be no danger of choking.

Circassians owe the length of their beautiful eyelashes to the fact that in childhood they are trimmed regularly once a week.

STOMACH DISTRESS

And Indigestion Misery Ends Five Minutes Later.

Almost Instant Relief From Dyspepsia and Stomach Trouble is Waiting for You.

Every family here ought to keep some Diapepsin in the house, as any one of you may have an attack of indigestion or Stomach trouble at any time, day or night.

This harmless preparation will digest anything you eat and overcome a sour stomach five minutes afterwards.

If your meals don't tempt you, or what little you do eat seems to fill you, or lays like a lump of lead in your stomach, or if you have heartburn, that is a sign of indigestion.

Ask your Pharmacist for a 50-cent case of Pape's Diapepsin and take one triangule after supper to-night. There will be no sour risings, no belching of undigested food mixed with acid, no stomach gas or heartburn, fullness or heavy feeling in the stomach, Nausea Debilitating Headaches Dizziness or Intestinal griping. This will all go, and, besides, there will be no sour food left over in the stomach to poison your breath and nauseous odors.

Pape's Diapepsin is a certain cure for all stomach misery, because it will take hold of your food and digest it just the same as if your stomach wasn't there.

Actual, prompt relief for all your stomach misery is at your Pharmacist, waiting for you.

These large 50-cent cases contain more than sufficient to cure a case of Dyspepsia or Indigestion.

SANITATION OF BARNS.

Rutherford System of Providing Pure Air For Live Stock.

A keen interest is being taken in the subject of ventilation of stock barns in Canada. It is realized that many barns are sadly lacking in provision for anything like a supply of pure air for the animals to breathe. The subject of stable hygiene was introduced at a convention held at Ottawa by Dr. Rutherford, live stock commissioner and veterinary director general for Canada, and a description given of what is known as the Rutherford system of ventilation, says a writer in the Breeder's Gazette, Chicago.

This system consists of outlet pipes or chimneys running from the ceiling to a point a few feet above the roof and U shaped inlets entering the stable beneath the wall. The chimney is furnished with a damper, which may be adjusted by means of cords operated from the floor. The damper is regulated according to the weather and the number of animals in the stable. When the occupants of the stable are few in number the air requires to be changed less frequently than when more are housed, and the damper is closed accordingly. By this system the warmed air rises and escapes by the chimney or flue, causing a suction of fresh air through the U shaped intakes, which are fitted with iron grates at the floor level.

RUTHERFORD SYSTEM OF VENTILATION. [Showing the ventilation system wide open and in operation. A represents the wall of the stable, B, the foundation; C, the floor level; D, the U shaped box which goes down from the outside and comes up on the inside.]

When the damper is closed the inflow of cold air is checked so that the system operates automatically according to necessity and the will of the stable attendant. It is not affected in the slightest degree by change of wind, as owing to the arrangement and the simplicity of its construction its outlets are always outlets and its inlets always inlets. Any system under which these openings exchange or are liable to exchange occupations is uncertain and unreliable. This system is not only automatic in operation, but so simple and inexpensive in construction that its installation in either an old building or in one in course of construction is a very easy matter. The illustrations will assist readers in understanding the system and its operation.

Worth of the Dairy Bull.

No dairy bull should be extensively used until he has attained a very mature age and proved that he is capable of producing profitable progeny. The fact that a male animal is pure bred or registered does not positively prove his worth. The efficacy of his offspring tells the story.

"A case of love at first sight, eh!"

"No, second sight. The first time he saw her he didn't know she was an heiress."—Boston Transcript.

Satan Sanderson

By HALLIE ERMINIE RIVES,
Author of "Hearts Courageous," Etc.

COPYRIGHT, 1908, THE BOBBS-MERRILL COMPANY

What the bishop saw was photographed instantaneously on his mind in fiery, indelible colors. It ate into his soul like hot iron into quivering flesh, searing itself upon his memory. The evangelist of the pave had been horrified, shocked to word and action; the bishop was frozen, inarticulate, impaled. For any evil in Hugh Stires he was prepared—since the forgery. But Hugh's companion now was the man whom he himself had ordained and anointed by the laying on of hands with the chrism of his holy ministry. An irrepressible exclamation burst from his lips.

With the sound both men at the table started to their feet. Hugh, with a single glance behind him, uttering a wild laugh, leaped the railing, dashed through the study and vanished into the night. Harry, as though suddenly turned to stone, stood staring at the accusatory figure, with the eager form of the evangelist behind it.

To the bishop it seemed the attitude of guilt detected.

What was Harry Sanderson thinking as under that speechless regard he mechanically gathered the scattered cards and lifted the little cross and the unopened bag of double eagles from the table? Where was the odd excitement, the strange exaltation, that had possessed him? The spindles in his brain had stilled, and an rigid calm had succeeded as abrupt as the quiet, deadly assurance with which his mind now saw the pit into which his own feet had led him.

He blew out the candle, replaced it carefully in its altar bracket, made shift to wipe the wax from the table and slowly, half blindly and without a word, went into the study.

The bishop came forward, drew the key from the inside of the study door, closed it and locked it from the chapel side. Harry did not turn, but he was actually conscious of every sound. He heard the door shut sharply, the harsh grate of the key in the lock, and the sound came to him like the last sentence—the realization of a soul on whom the gate of the good closes forever.

In the dark silence of the chapel Hallelujah Jones smote his thin hands together approvingly as he followed the bishop to the outer door. There the older man laid his hand on his shoulder.

"Let him that thinketh he standeth," he said, "take heed lest he fall! Let not this knowledge be spread abroad that it make the unrighteous to blaspheme. When you pray for your own soul tonight pray for the soul of that man from whom God's face is turned away!"

Something in the churchless evangelist bowed to the voice of ecclesiastical authority. He went without a word.

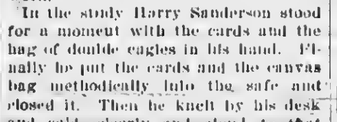
In the study Harry Sanderson stood for a moment with the cards and the bag of double eagles in his hand. Finally he put the cards and the canvas bag methodically into the safe and closed it. Then he knelt by his desk and said, clearly and aloud—to that cold, inner symbol of consciousness in his soul:

"O God, I do not know if thou art, as has been said, a seer of the good that is in the bad, and of the bad that is in the good, and a lover of them both. But I know that I am in a final extremity. I can no longer do my labor consistently before the world and before thee. If I am delivered it must be by some way of thine own that I cannot conceive, for I cannot help myself. Amen."

He rose to his feet, mechanically put on a coat that was lying on a chair—Hugh's coat, but he did not notice this—and bareheaded passed out to the street. The motor car stood there. He took his place in the forward seat and threw on the power.

Barking joyously, Rummy, the brown spaniel, tore out of the gate, but his master did not stop. The little creature pursued the moving car, made a frantic leap to gain his seat, but missed, and the huge armored wheel struck and hurled him to the gutter.

Harry did not hear the sharp yelp of pain. His hand was on the lever, pushing it over, over, to its last notch, and the great mechanism, responding with a leap, sped away, faster and faster, through the night.



Chapter 10

FIVE miles through the dark, under the breathless, expectant stars. The car was on the broad curve now where the road bent to the bluff above the river to pass the skeleton railroad bridge. But Harry knew neither place nor time. He was conscious only of motion—swift, swallow-like irresistible—this and the racing pictures in his brain stenciled on the blur of night that closed around him. These pictures came and went—the last revel of the saints when he was Satan Sanderson, Hugh sneering at his calling, Jessica facing him with unabashed eyes, Hallelujah Jones preaching on the street corner.

Something in Harry's brain seemed to snap. A tiny shutter, like that of a camera, fell down. His hands dropped from the steering wheel, and, swaying in his seat, he began to sing in a voice made high and uneven by the speed of the car:

"Palms of victory!
Crowns of glory!
Palms of victory I shall wear!"

He sang but the three lines, for suddenly the car left the road, the inflated tires rebounded from the steel ridge of the railroad track, the forward axle caught on iron signal post, and the great motor car, its shattered lamp jingling like a gong, its pistons thrusting in midair, reared on two wheels, hurling its occupant out like a pebble thrown from a sling, half turned and, leaving a trail of sparks like the tail of a rocket behind it, plunged heavily over the rim of the bluff into the river.

The forward axle caught an iron signal post.

A moment later the deep black waters of "the hole" had closed above the mass of scrolled steel. The swift current had smoothed away every trace of the strange monster it had engulfed, and there by the side of the track, huddled against the broken signal post, his clothing plastered with mud and grime, motionless and with a nasty cut on the temple, lay Harry Sanderson.

A long, saturating peace, a deep and drenching darkness, had folded him. Dully at first, at length more insistently and sharply, a rhythmic pulsing sound began to annoy the quietude. K-track, k-track, k-track—it grew louder; it grew more momentous and material; it irritated the calm that had wrapped the intimate universe. As though from an immeasurable distance he heard a low, continuous roar and now and again through the roar nearer voices.

Harry stood staring at the accusatory figure.

Harry awoke. His mind awoke, but his eyes did not open at once, for the gentle swaying that cradled him was pleasant, and the muffled clack and hum soothed him like opium. He opened his eyes. It was daylight. He was lying on dusty boards that rattled and vibrated beneath him, the floor of an empty freight car in motion. A small brown dog, an abject, muddied and shivering morsel, was snuggled close to his side. It whined as if with joy to see his eyes opened, and its stubby tail beat the floor.

Harry turned his head. Two men in dingy garments were seated on the door a little distance away thumbing a decrepit pack of cards over an empty box. He could see both side faces, one weather beaten and good humored, the other crafty—knights of the road.

The sudden movement had sent a momentary twinge to his temple. He put up his hand. It touched a coarse handkerchief that had been bound tightly about it. The corner hung down. It was soiled and stiff with blood. What was he doing there? Where was he? Who was he?

It came to him with a start that he actually for the moment did not know who he was—that he had ridiculously slipped the leash of his identity. He smiled at his predicament. He would lie quietly for a few moments, and it would come. Of course it would come!

Yet it did not come, though he lay many moments, the fingers of his mind fumbling for the latch of the closed door. He had waked perfectly well, all save the slight cut on his temple, and that was clearly superficial, a mere scratch. Not a trouble or anxiety marred his soul. His mind was as clear and light as a lark's. Body and brain together felt as if they had never had a serious ache in the world. But all that had preceded his awakening was gone from him as completely as though it had had no existence.

Stealthily he rose to a sitting posture and, with a frown of humorous perplexity, took a swift and silent inventory. He scanned his clothing. His coat was threadbare and, with mud, oil and coal dust, was in a more disreputable state. His wristbands were grimy, and one cuff-link had been torn away. He had no hat.

He bethought himself of his pockets and went through them methodically one by one. They yielded several dollars in coin, a penknife and a tiny gold cross, but not a letter, not a scrap of paper, nothing to serve him. The gleam of a ring on his finger caught his eye. He rubbed away the dirt and carefully examined it, wondering if the stone was real. His hand was slightly cut and swollen, and the circlet would not come off, but by shifting it slightly he could see the white depression made by long wear. The setting was an odd one, formed of the twisted letters H. S. Those naturally should be his initials, but there he stopped. He repeated to himself all the names he could think of, beginning with S, but they told him nothing.

He looked himself over again carefully, reflectively. He put out his hand and laid it on the spaniel's head.

Its rough tongue licked his fingers. It held up one fore paw meekly and lamely. He drew the feverish, dirty little creature into his lap and examined the limp member. It was broken.

"Poor, little beggar!" said he under his breath. "So you've been knocked out too?" With his knife he cut a piece from the lining of his coat and with a splinter of wood from the floor he set the fractured bone and wrapped the leg tightly. The dog submitted without a whimper, and when he set it down it lay quietly beside him watching him with affectionate canine solicitude.

"I wonder who we are, you and I?" muttered Harry Sanderson whimsically. "I wonder!"

The players looked around. One of them nodded approvingly.

"Right as a trivet!" he said. "I made a pretty good job of that cut of yours. Hurt you much?"

"No," said Harry. "I'm obliged to you for the attention."

"Foolish to walk on a railroad track," the other went on. "By your looks you've been on the road long enough to know better. We stopped to tank there, and we picked you up, you and your four legged mate. Must have been a bit spiffy, eh?"

He winked and took a flask from his pocket. "Have a hair of the dog that bit you?" he said.

He drank thirstily.

Harry took the flask and, wiping the top on his sleeve, uncorked it. Something in the penetrating odor of the contents seemed to cleave through fair mental wastes to an intimate, though mysterious, goal. He put it to his lips and drank thirstily.

As the burning liquid scorched his throat a recrudescence of old impulses surged up through the crust of more modern usage. The Harry Sanderson of the new, remorseful, temperate life, of chastened impulses, of rote and rule and reformed habit—the rector of St. James—had been lost on that wild night ride. The man who had awakened in the freight car was the Satan Sanderson of four years before.

Chapter 11

SINCE that tragical wedding day at the white house in the aspens Jessica had passed through a confusion of experiences. She had always lived much in herself, and to her natural reserve her blindness had added. As a result her knowledge both of herself and of life had been superficial. The first bitter shock of her catastrophe seemed to burn up in her the very capacity for further poignant suffering, and she went through the motions of life apathetically.

Change of scene and the declining health of David Stires occupied fortunately much of her waking thoughts. After the first few months of travel he failed steadily. His citric acid moods were forgotten, his harsh tempers put aside. Hour after hour he lay in his chair, gazing out from the wide sun parlor of the sanitarium on the crest of Smoky mountain, whither their journeying had finally brought them. He had never spoken of Hugh.

In time her fiercer pain had dulled, and her imagination, naturally so unfortunate, had begun to seize upon her surroundings. In the summer season the sanitarium had few guests, and for this she was thankful. Dr. Brent, his head, rallying her on her paleness, drove her out of doors with good natured severity, and when she was not with David Stires she walked or rode for hours at a time over the mountain trails. Breathing in the crisp air of altitude, her spirits grew more buoyant. She fed the squirrels, listened to the pert chirp of the whisky jack and the whirring drum of the partridge or sat on a hidden elevation which she named "The Knoll," facing across the shallow valley to the south.

The knob overlooked a little grassy shelf a few hundred feet below, where stood a miner's cabin, with weed grown gravel heaps near by, in front of which a tree bore the legend painted is what we give you—no bluff. Would you rather wear clothes that are chopped out and put together by machinery and of the same pattern as 25 to 100 other fellows can buy or wear those made by legitimately by hand throughout by a real tailor?

Don't be bluffed with your eyes wide open into believing that the "make believe tailor" gives you anything but a "guess fit" and cheap made clothes.

Why look as if you had joined some uniform brigade when you can come to us and select an exclusive pattern for yourself, something 50 other fellows can't buy?

Give us a call and we will demonstrate to you what real tailoring is.

Republican State Convention Call.

Grand Rapids, Mich. Jan. 11, 1909.

To the Republican Electors of the State of Michigan:

The state convention of the Republicans of Michigan is hereby called to meet in the City of Grand Rapids on Friday, February 12, 1909, at eleven o'clock in the forenoon, for the purpose of nominating two candidates for the office of Justice of the Supreme Court, two candidates for the office of Regent of the University, one candidate for the office of Superintendent of Public Instruction; one candidate for the office of member of the State Board of Education, and six candidates for the office of member of State Board of Agriculture, and for the transaction of such other business as may properly come before the convention.

In accordance with the provisions of law and the action of the Republican State Central Committee, every county will be entitled to one delegate for each two hundred and fifty of the total vote cast therein for the Republican candidate for Secretary of State at the last election and one additional delegate for a majority of 125 votes or more.

Under the resolutions of 1858, no delegate will be entitled to a seat in the convention who does not reside in the county he proposes to represent.

The delegates from the several counties in each Congressional District are requested to meet in district caucus at ten o'clock a. m. on the day of the state convention, and select officers as follows, to present to the state convention for confirmation:

One Vice President.
One Assistant Secretary.
One member of the committee on "Credentials."
One member of the committee on "Permanent Organization and Order of Business."
One member of the committee on "Resolutions."

By order of the Republican State Central Committee.

GERRIT J. DIEKEMA, Chairman.
DENNIS E. ALWARD, Secretary.

Apportionment of Delegates.

The following is the apportionment of delegates to the several counties on the basis of the total vote cast for the Republican candidate for secretary of state at the last election, viz: one delegate for each two hundred and fifty votes and one additional delegate for a majority of one hundred and twenty-six votes or more:

Antrim	5	Charlevoix	10
Clare	5	Grand Traverse	11
Crockot	17	Isabella	13

Agent of Property—What? Don't see it? Why, man alive, you had to come down the terrace in order to get here!—Puck.

TREATMENT OF CROUP.

How to Relieve Congestion Quickly and Avoid Choking.

It is usually at night that croup develops and may be caused by some exposure or reason which the mother cannot fathom. The symptoms usually are unmistakable, being a hard, dry cough and the utmost difficulty in breathing, causing the little sufferer to show extreme pain. This state yields almost immediately to hot applications and simple medicines and so may be averted without a physician unless the croup seems to be too severe. In that case a doctor should be sent for at once.

Croup is a gathering of mucus, the result of a cold, and a dose of castor oil should be given as soon as it can be swallowed, says the Washington Star. If there has been no action on the liver it is well to give douche of warm, soapy water, but both of these may be delayed until heat is applied.

For this treatment first wring some flannels in water as hot as the baby's skin can stand without burning and put them over the throat, constantly changing, so that the heat may not grow less. The baby should be left in the bed and warmly covered, and a vapor inhalation should be fixed and ready for use at the earliest moment.

If a child shows a disposition to croup—and some babies have it for years—it is well to keep a croup kettle in the house, for the steam inhalation is so much easier given with it. Lacking that, however, a very fair substitute may be made by putting a large towel or sheet over the top of the bed to form a tent or covering over the head and directing into this one nose of the kettle of boiling water. This kettle should be on a gas or alcohol stove by the bed, that the steam may be kept up, and, of course, one must be careful it does not overturn. Another thing to guard against is the infant being burned by the steam. The latter will do this if it strikes him directly, but not if it goes by him, at the same time filling the tent. Any effort he may make to get away from this steam breathing, to which in pain and the strangeness of it he may object, must be prevented, for the steam will soften the mucus quicker than anything else.

Should this not relieve the child quickly a few drops of syrup of ipecac may be given every fifteen minutes until the baby vomits, and no time should be lost in getting a physician. Until he arrives, however, the mother's effort should be to relieve the congestion and prevent choking.

An old fashioned application for croup is goose oil, used because of its penetrating quality. At the beginning of an attack this is rubbed quickly and thoroughly into the throat and chest, and then heat is applied to drive it in. A hot water bag will serve for this purpose, putting a flannel between it and the skin.

Croup except in extreme cases, is not a thing to cause anxiety if one works quickly and has plenty of hot things at hand.

How to Cure a Boil.

Melt 5 cents' worth of beeswax, into this stir one tablespoonful of sugar and as much laundry soap as beeswax. Add one tablespoonful of cold, sweet cream. Spread on cloth, apply to boil and put on fresh every morning until the core is drawn out.

Traffic on the great lakes fell off greatly the past season. There have been transported through the St. Mary's ship canals in 1908 41,200,000 net tons of freight. This was a loss of 11 per cent compared with the record-breaking traffic of 58,217,211 tons the preceding season. The commerce showed a slump every month this year, until at the close of navigation the falling off amounts to approximately 17,000,000 tons. The canal traffic footed up 51,551,030 tons in 1906 and 44,270,880 tons in 1905.

During the past season sixteen vessels ten steamers and six schooners—passed out of existence on the lakes. The boats that were total losses were valued at $631,000. They had a carrying capacity of 26,250 tons a trip, and figuring on twenty cargoes a season, their carrying capacity for a season would be 525,000 tons. Eight of the vessels stranded and were pounded to pieces, five steamers were destroyed by fire, two were lost in collisions, and one steamer foundered. Only two of the vessels that were lost were of steel.

Tuesday, January 12, occurred the annual meeting of the stockholders of the Farmers Mutual Fire Insurance company, at the company's offices in the Hankey block Petoskey The meeting was called to order by President E. B. Ward, with a good attendance of members present. Various matters of interest for the welfare of the company were discussed in the morning. In the afternoon session, nine directors were elected as follows: H. B. Hipp, Jacob Kahler, Peter Chimmer, Franklin Keiser, R. S. Shapton, D. D. Goodrich, J. K. Detwiller, Edward W. Barr and N. J. Newsou.

MAKE THIS YOURSELF

Says Many Persons Here Can be Made Happy Again.

Tells How Any One Can Prepare Simple Home-Made Mixture, Said to Overcome Rheumatism.

There is so much Rheumatism here in our neighborhood now that the following advice will be highly appreciated by those who suffer:

Get from any good pharmacy one-half ounce Fluid Extract Dandelion, one ounce Compound Kargon, three ounces of Compound Syrup Sarsaparilla. Shake these well in a bottle and take in teaspoonful dose after each meal and at bedtime; also drink plenty of good water.

It is claimed that there are few victims of this dread and torturous disease who will fail to find ready relief in this simple home-made mixture, and in most cases a permanent cure is the result.

This simple recipe is said to strengthen and cleanse the eliminative tissues of the Kidneys so that they can filter and strain from the blood and system the poison, acids and waste matter, which cause not only Rheumatism, but numerous other diseases. Every man or woman who feels that their kidneys are not healthy and active, or who suffers from any urinary trouble whatever, should not hesitate to to make up this mixture, as it is certain to do much good, and may save you from much misery and suffering after while.

Our home druggists say they will either supply the ingredients or mix the prescription ready to take if our readers ask them.

Bego Johnson and Charles Duverney, the two young men who were arrested December 16 at Elk Rapids and taken to Grand Rapids, charged with sending black hand letters to a mill foreman, were released Wednesday from the county jail under bonds of $1,000 each. The accused are about 20 years of age and it is believed that the act was suggested to their minds by the over-indulgence in yellow covered literature. The boys are held to the March term of the grand jury.

FOR AGED PEOPLE

Old Folks Should be Careful in Their Selection of Regulative Medicine.

With advance age comes inactive bowel movement and sluggish liver. Nature is unable to perform her proper functions and requires assistance. Otherwise, there is constant suffering from constipation and its attendant evils. Old folks should never use physic that is harsh and irritating.

We have a safe, dependable and altogether local remedy that is particularly adapted to the requirements of aged people and persons of weak constitutions who suffer from constipation or other bowel disorder. We are so certain that it will cure these complaints and give absolute satisfaction in every particular that we offer them with our personal guarantee that they shall cost the user nothing if they fail to substantiate our claims. This remedy is called Rexall Orderlies.

Rexall Orderlies have a soothing healing, strengthening, tonic and regulative action upon the dry, relax muscular coat of the bowel. They produce a natural, successive contraction and relaxation of the muscular fibres of the bowel walls, generating a wave-like motion which forces their contents onward and outward; thus simulating nature in perfect bowel movement. They also remove all irritation, dryness, soreness and weakness. They tone up and strengthen the nerves and muscles and restore the bowels and associate organs to more vigorous and healthy activity. They may be taken at any time without inconvenience, do not cause any griping, nausea, diarrhea, excessive looseness, flatulency or other disagreeable effect. Try Rexall Orderlies on our guarantee. 36 tablets 25c., and 12 tablets 10c. The Ivy Drug Store, A. B. Fleischer, proprietor.

Kicking A Goal

By LITTELL M'CLUNG.

Copyrighted, 1908, by Associated Literary Press

Though it was only an hour before the great football game between Clinton and Darnall, their conversation was not of the gridiron as they walked down Main street bound for Clinton oval.

"There's only one thing that keeps me from becoming engaged to you right now, Thornton," said the girl after a serious pause.

"You'll have to tell me, Leta; I can't guess it," answered the stalwart quarterback of the Clinton eleven.

"Just this," she said. "I am not altogether sure that you really need me in your life. You are a strong, self reliant boy, capable of fighting your own way over the obstacles that will confront you."

"More than all else put together I want to know that without my encouragement you would be accomplishing less—that I will always be an inspiration to you, no matter what your aims may be."

For a moment the young man did not reply. Then he looked at his companion, his gaze sincere.

"Leta, you're right," he agreed quietly. "That's the way I want you to feel about it. Deep down in my heart I know that you would always inspire me to strive for the best in life. But I must convince you of this, and I'll do it, too, dear girl, if I get the chance!"

"Maybe you will, Thornton," she replied, "and I hope that you will more than you can guess. Why—why not begin at the game today?"

"That's what I intend to do, Leta!" was his prompt response. "I expect to play as I never played before, just because you are wearing Clinton's colors and wearing my pennant. It's a pretty one, isn't it?

"The gold and brown stripes harmonize beautifully with that bright brown gown you are wearing. Your ticket calls for a seat back on the north goal, and I know I'll see you clearly despite the crowds."

"It certainly is fine," she declared, "that little me may be an inspiration to a Clinton boy to play at his best! But it seems almost a pity that you are not one of the halfbacks or in the line, though I know everything depends on the quarterback. He gives the signals and delivers the ball, doesn't he?"

"I know what you mean, Leta," he said. "You would like to see me in a position where I could run with the ball instead of handing it out to somebody else?"

The girl nodded.

"Well, that's because I weigh only 145 instead of 200 pounds," he continued. "After all, it takes sheer weight in the line, and that naturally slides me into the quarterback's place.

"But you mustn't forget that Clinton depends upon me to kick the goals, and a goal kicked or missed often wins or loses a big game like this."

They were now on the college grounds amid shouting hundreds and fluttering flags and pennants. Thornton assisted Leta to her seat high up in that part of the semicircular grand stand that stretched around behind the north goal.

"I hope Clinton gets the south end of the field," he said as he started off toward the clubhouse.

"Why?" she asked.

"Because then I'll be able to see the orange and brown pennant that's drawing me north toward Darnall's goal!" he said earnestly.

Soon the rival elevens trotted out on the field, and from the thousand tongued grand stand rose a mighty shout, while pennants, ribbons, handkerchiefs and flags mingled in a waving, variegated mass.

It was the great wind-up game of the year, and there was a chance for any player to win a glory crown by making the deciding touchdown. Both elevens, it was evident, were steeled for the contest.

But, as fate would have it, Clinton got the north end of the field, and a savage quarterback waited for the umpire's signal with his back to the girl in orange who was waving a pennant for him.

But despite this disappointment he gathered his strength for the charge, and as the shrill whistle struck his ears he leaped forward straight for the ball that lay on the line twenty yards in front of him. Biff! The oval went whirling through the air in a sixty yard paraboly, with the whole Clinton team in pursuit.

The ball landed in the arms of Darnall's fullback, and the big fellow came back up the field in a series of lunges. But before a dozen yells had split the air he was down, with every Clinton man piling over him.

Then the shoulder to shoulder battle began. In three downs Darnall lost the ball. Then Thornton's opportunity came. To test Darnall's line he gave the ball at the risk of having his own neck twisted a series of center rush signals.

Three times the heavy backs charged over him, and he felt his breath going fast as Darnall hurled back the plungers. End runs were tried with but little better success. Seeing that line rushes were hopeless, he gave the signal for a kick, and Clinton's fullback sent the ball far down the field.

But Darnall hurled it back with another kick. There were more close formation plays, followed by two more long distance kicks, while the air was filled with the cries of the spectators and the sharp, quick shriek of the umpire's whistle.

The time of the first half was almost up when suddenly out of a scrimmage rolled the ball. For a second nobody, excepting Clinton's quarterback knew what had become of it.

As it bounded carelessly along Thornton at one sweep seized it. Simultaneously he heard a shout on the side line, "Only forty seconds left!"

Directly in front of him, not twenty yards distant, was Darnall's goal. Even a halfway drop kick might win the game. Thornton dropped the ball to the ground and swung his right foot. A great cheer went up, which died away suddenly in a groan. The ball flew high, but it didn't go within fifty feet of either post.

"Time's up!" yelled the umpire.

Thornton felt that all Clinton was disappointed beyond expression and deeply ashamed of the showing he had made after the college had boasted of his prowess as a drop kicker. He remained in dejected seclusion during the intermission.

But when the whistle sounded again he was like another man. Clinton had the south goal this time, and clearly the quarterback saw a girl in orange swinging a pennant in the grand stand. Already the throngs had forgotten his duke in the hope of victory in the second half.

At the kick-off Thornton sent the pigskin seventy yards down the field and then plunged into the game with ferocious energy. He determined to redeem himself or perish in the attempt.

Back and forth over the field surged the teams, while thousands shouted encouragement.

Neither eleven seemed able to break down the defense of the other until toward the end of the half, when Clinton began to come up the field steadily.

Thornton, his head clear as a bell, was playing at frightful pace, giving Darnall no time to catch its breath after each attack. But thirty yards from the goal line Darnall braced itself heroically and stood like a stone wall.

"Only one more minute to play!" called the umpire, and the crowds took up the shout.

Thornton realized that in so short a time line plunges would be futile. There was only one hope of victory, another drop kick for a goal. While only twenty yards away, the goal posts were off to the left at an oblique angle.

There was about one chance in a dozen of putting the ball between them, but Thornton took it. He stood back of the line ready to call the signal, and the Darnall eleven, seeing it was to be kick, got ready to plunge through and break up the play.

Then suddenly the quarterback, looking directly between the goal posts, saw Leta in the grand stand in an attitude of breathless expectancy, and he knew more than the game depended upon his quickness and skill.

He stepped back a few yards, and with his eye riveted on the figure in orange he gave the signal in clear, sharp tones, "Three, double two, eleven!"

The ball struck his outstretched hands, and as he dropped it he shot out his right foot. The next second a big Darnall guard leaped over the line and struck Thornton head-on, sending him reeling senseless twenty feet from the spot where he was hit.

But the big man was half a second too late, for Thornton's toe had caught the ball squarely, and it went flying straight as a bullet between the goal posts and up into the grand stand, falling almost at Leta's feet!

A wild, deafening yell of joy broke over the field, but the quarterback did not hear it. Ten minutes later, when he came to, a girl was bathing his forehead, and he caught the glow of her bright brown dress. The crowd fell back respectfully.

"Don't worry, Thornton, dear boy," she whispered. "I saw your looking at me when you made that wonderful kick, and I know now how much I mean to you!"

Same Odd Animals.

Many curious animals haunt the marshy parts of South America north of the pampas. Frogs, big and ferocious (the ceratophyrs), given to making vicious springs when closely approached; the capybara, a cavy "contented with the bulk of a sheep," the huge coypu rat and the swarthy, pig-like tapir are frequently seen.

Along the forest margins troops of peccaries are often met with, occasionally the jaguar, sometimes the puma, likewise that toothless curiosity, the great ant bear, long in claw, long nosed and remarkably long tongued. Very plentiful, too, are those "little knights in scaly armor," the quaint, waddling armadilloes. Long tood jacanas pace about upon the floating leaves.

A familiar object is the great jabiru, a stork with a preference for the desolate lagoons, where it may often be observed statuesque on one leg and wrapped in prospection.—Edinburgh Scotsman.

Strenuous Methods of Healing.

Papuan medicine men are regarded with great respect by the natives. Those I have met certainly seemed energetic and hard working. They sit close to the patient, massaging the seat of pain with much vigor, and, while they are thus rubbing, make a noise with their lips rather like that which a groom makes when rubbing down a horse. The process is a tiring one, and the medicine man stops at intervals to drink hot water in which taro has been boiled. His object is to extract some mysterious foreign substance from the sick man's body, and if he succeeds in this he receives a fee; otherwise he gets nothing. "No cure, no pay," is apparently the Papuan sufferer's motto.—Wide World Magazine.

Does Your Watch Movement

need attention? If it does not keep correct time there's something wrong. When in good running condition the balance wheel should make about 18,000 vibrations an hour and requires less than one-tenth of a drop of oil to make it operate smoothly. But it needs that little badly. The least increase of friction on the bearings alters the motion. If there is anything wrong with your watch, let me examine it. If you decide to leave it, I'll guarantee to put it in good running condition for a most reasonable price.

UNITED STATES COURT OF CLAIMS

The Publishers of Webster's International Dictionary allege that it "is, in fact, the popular Unabridged, thoroughly re-edited in every detail, and vastly enriched in every part, with the purpose of adapting it to meet the larger and severer requirements of another generation."

We are of the opinion that this allegation most clearly and accurately describes the work that has been accomplished and the result that has been reached. The Dictionary, as it now stands, has been thoroughly re-edited in every detail, has been corrected to every part, and is admirably adapted to meet the larger and severer requirements of a generation which demands more of popular philological knowledge than any generation that the world has ever contained.

It is perhaps needless to add that we refer to the dictionary in our judicial work as of the highest authority in accuracy of definition; and that in the future as in the past it will be the source of constant reference.

roughly on a board, "The Little Paymaster Claim."

Her interest had opened eagerly to these scenes. The solitudes soothed, and the life of the community below, frankly primitive and uncomplicated, attracted her. Between the town of Smoky Mountain and the expensive sanitarium on the ridge a great social gulf was fixed. The latter's patrons for the most part came and went by the narrow gauge road that linked with northern junction. The settlement far below was only a feature of the panorama for which they paid so well. Even Dr. Brent, who had perched this place of healing where his patients could breathe air fresh from the Pacific and cooled by the snow peaks, knew it chiefly through two of its citizens—Mrs. Halloran, the capable, bustling wife of the proprietor of the Mountain Valley House, the town's single hostelry, who brewed old fashioned blackberry wine and cordials for his patients, and Tom Felder, a young lawyer whom he had known on the coast before ill health had sent him to hang out his shingle in a more genial altitude.

The latter sometimes came for a chat with the physician, and on one of these calls Jessica and he had met. She had liked his keen, good humored face and waving, slightly graying hair. She had met him once since on the mountain road, and he had walked with her and told her quaint stories of the townspeople. He had taken her to Mrs. Halloran, whose heart she had won by praise of her cherry cordial.

"It brings back my boyhood," David Stires said to her one afternoon, tapping the bottle by his wheel chair. "Somehow this has the old taste."

"It is nearly gone," she said. "I'll get another bottle. I am going for a ride now. I think it does you good."

"Before you go," he said, "fetch my writing case, and I will dictate a letter."

She brought and opened it with a trouble at her heart, for the request showed his increasing weakness. Until today the few letters he had written had been done with his own hand. Thinking of this as she waited, her fingers nervously plucked at the inside of the leather cover. The morocco flap fell and disclosed a slip of paper. It was a canceled bank draft. It bore Hugh's name, and across its face in David Stires' crabbed hand, written large, was the venemous word "Forgery."

The room swam before her eyes. Only by a fierce effort could she compel her pen to trace the dictated words. Hugh's misdeed, evil as it was, had been to her but an abstract crime. Now it suddenly lay bare before her, a concrete expression of coarse thievery, a living symbol of crafty simulation. Scarce knowing why she did it, she drew the draft covertly from its receptacle and slipped it into her bosom.

The evidence of Hugh's sin! That paper must remain, as the sin that made it remained, the sign manual of her dishonor and loss. The man whose hand had penned its lying signature was the man she had thought she loved. By that act he had thrust himself from her forever. Yet he lived. Somewhere in the world he walked in shame and degradation beyond the pale of honorable living, and she was his wife! She was his wife! Though she called herself Jessica Holme, yet in the law his name and fame were hers.

"Look at that steady hand now, an' her hair as red as glory?" said Mrs. Halloran, gazing admiringly from the doorstep where she had been chatting with Tom Felder. "Ye needn't stare yer gray eyes out, though, or she'll stop at the jooiry shop to buy ye a ring—to shame ye fer jest hankerin' and sayin' nothin'!"

Felder laughed as he crossed the street, raising his felt hat gallantly to the approaching rider. Mrs. Halloran was a privileged character. It was not Michael Halloran who kept the Mountain Valley House popular! The old woman hurried to the curb and led the horse as Jessica dismounted.

"How did ye guess I made some more this day?" she exclaimed. "Sure, if ye drink it yerself, my deerie, them cheeks is all th' trademark I need!" She led the way into the little carpeted side room, by courtesy denominated "the parlor." "I'll go an' put it up in two shakes," she said. "Sit ye down an' I'll not be ten minutes." So saying, she hustled away.

Left alone, Jessica gazed abstractedly about her. Her mind was still full of the painful reflections of her ride. A door opened from the room into the office. It was ajar. She stepped close and looked in.

A group of miners lounged in the space before the front windows—familiarly referred to by its habitues as "the amen corner"—chatting and watching the passersby.

Suddenly she clapped her hand to her mouth to stifle a cry. A name had been spoken—the name that was in her thought—the name of Hugh Stires. She leaned forward, listening breathlessly.

"I wonder where the young blackleg's been," said one, peering through the windows. "He'd better have stayed away for good, I'm thinking. What does he want to come back for, to a place where there aren't three men who will take a drink with him?"

Jessica looked about her an instant wildly, guiltily. She could not be mistaken in the name. Was Hugh here, whither by the veriest accident she had come—here in this very town that she had gazed down upon every day for weeks? Was he? No, no; it could not be! She had not heard aright. But she had an overwhelming desire to satisfy herself with her own eyes. From where she stood she could not see the street. She bethought herself of the upper balcony.

Swiftly she crossed to the hall door, threw it open and ran hastily up the stair.

Chapter 12

If the man who had been the subject of the observations Jessica had heard had been less absorbed as he walked leisurely along on the opposite side of the street he would have noticed the look of dislike in the eyes of those he passed. They drew away from him, and one spoke—to no one in particular and with an oath of offensive and fervid. But weather beaten, tanned, indifferently clad and with a small brown dog following him, the newcomer passed along, oblivious to the sidelong scrutiny. He did not stare about him after the manner of a stranger, though so far as he knew he had never been in the place before.

But Harry Sanderson now was not the man who had ridden into oblivion in the motor car. The rector of St. James' was in a strange eclipse. Mentally and externally he had reverted to the old Satan Sanderson of the brilliant flashing originality, of the curt risk and daring. The deeply human and sensitive side that had developed during his divinity years was in abeyance. It showed itself only in the affection he bestowed on the little nameless dog that followed him like a brown, shaggy shadow.

He was like that old self of his, and yet if he had but known it he was wonderfully like some one else, too—some one who had belonged to the long ago and garbled past that still eluded him: some one who had been a part also of the life of this very town till a little over a month before, when he had left it with dread dogging his footsteps!

Curious coincidences had wrought together for this likeness. In the past weeks Harry had grown perceptibly thinner. A spare beard was now on his chin, and the fiery sun that had darkened his cheeks to sallow had lightened his brown hair a shade. The cut on his brow had healed to the semblance of a thin red birthmark.

Fate—or God—was doing strange things for Harry Sanderson!

A Perfect Chicken Pie.

Cut into pieces one chicken. Boil in enough water until tender, adding, when half done, one teaspoonful salt. Take out the chicken, keep warm and thicken the liquid with one tablespoonful each of flour and butter rubbed together, add salt and pepper to taste and boil five minutes. Take one quart of flour, two teaspoonfuls of baking powder, a little salt and one cup of butter and mix as for biscuit. Take half, roll a fourth of an inch and line a dish, leaving an inch over the sides to turn over the upper crust. Put in the chicken, pour over gravy, cover with the upper crust, with a large hole in the center for steam to escape, wet the edge and fold over the upper crust and press firmly together. Spread soft butter over the top and bake about two hours in a moderate oven.—Boston Post.

"Chance."

When you talk of chance you are only confessing ignorance. The very spin of the coin is governed by the nerve, muscle or manipulation of the thumb and brain that spin it. The only chance about it is your ignorance of the forces that lift, twist and catch the coin. If you could calculate the physical and mental forces between the halfpenny's leap and return you might buy the world. But you can't. And it's just that bit of blindness that we have to call chance.—London Chronicle

Chinese and Europeans.

Europe knew next to nothing of China or its people prior to the conquests of the famous Genghis Khan. The commotion raised by that monster made Europeans somewhat acquainted with "Far Cathay," as China was then called. It was about the year 1300, or possibly a trifle earlier, that the first Chinese made their appearance in Europe. The first commercial intercourse between Europe and China dates from about the year 1320.—New York American.

PRAIRIE SCHOONER BARN.

A Farmer's Original and Practical Plan For a Horse Home.

An agriculturist in Dowagiac, Mich., has made plans for a prairie schooner barn, and he states that the barn has proved satisfactory to him. He built his ten years ago. He calls it a prairie schooner barn because it is mostly roof and has no beam or mortise in its makeup and ordinary farmer help can do all of the work. The barn is forty feet long by sixty feet wide, and the arches (which represent the bows of the prairie schooner or mover's wagon) are made of inch boards six inches wide and of any length and six boards deep, each board bent to shape as it is nailed to the others, using plenty of nails and giving plenty of lap over each joint. The arches form a half circle, and in building them the owner drew a half circle on the ground and set posts a few feet apart (perhaps ten) on the outside of the circle, being careful to get them perpendicular and three or more feet high, so several could be made before any had to be moved. Fourteen arches in all were used. These were placed about three feet apart on the side walls, four feet high by two feet thick. These arches, or rafters, were covered with roof boards and shingles, except the top being too flat for shingles, metal roofing was used. Six round posts are used in each end extending from stone wall one foot high to arches, on which the girders and siding are nailed. The floor is paved with field stone about twelve inches deep, except ander the horses, where eight inches deep was filled in with soft sand, and that covered with wooden blocks on end four inches long. The stone is covered with a hard, smooth clay. Both floors have given entire satisfaction. Stables are on each side of the barn next to the wall, but with eight foot driveway back of the stalls, so one can drive through with a wagon in cleaning the stable.

More Money In Live Stock Than Grain.

The value of farm animals is increasing rapidly, suggesting that farmers of the west are going more and more into general farming, not depending so much on raising grain for market. The statement is made by the American Cultivator. The value of farm animals is placed at about $5,000,000,000, or one-fifth of the entire value of farm property. The value of receipts at leading market centers for about 50,000,000 head of cattle, horses, hogs and mules will total well over a billion dollars, this sum of the leading markets only, and probably nearly as much more live stock is sold at the smaller markets, as it is figured that about two-fifths of the farm live stock goes to market during one year. Of the annual income from live stock, cattle make up about five-eighths, hogs one-fourth and the balance sheep, horses and mules. The great iron and steel industry is surpassed in value of exports by the shipments of meat and dairy products. The tendency of all lines of animal products is toward increase, while the country is becoming less and less an exporter of grain. The farmers are wisely securing a double profit by turning their grain into the home market and selling it as a finished product in the form of meat, butter and cheese. The United States has more dairy cows (22,241,445) than any other country in the world, more horses, 23,000,532; more mules, 4,056,399; more swine, 57,976,361, not except British India; more cattle, 73,246,573.

HAY TEA FOR CALVES.

A Beverage That Keeps the Youngsters Exceptionally Healthy.

After milk, hay tea is a beverage that young calves are very fond of, and it suits them capitally. The idea of using it did not originate with me; I learned it from an old cow man who was most successful in rearing calves, and he attributes much of his easy success to the hay tea.

The hay is put into a tank or cask, boiling hot water is poured over it and the steam is shut in until it cools down. It is then stirred, the hay removed and the tea left. The liquid seems a little thicker than when put in and is a rich brown color. It has an agreeable aroma and is inviting. It is not given as a substitute for milk, but as an addition or when milk is discontinued and meal takes its place, often in a liquid form. The meal may be mixed with the tea instead of water.

Calves often show an indifference to meal mixed with water, but I never found them fastidious with the tea

Hindoo Idiot.

When Hindoo children are born their fond mothers hang bells around their necks, believing that if the child is an idiot the sound of the bells will soothe it and make it happy. Should the child be sane, the bells will drive away the evil spirits that have caused the idiocy.

The Spot For Him.

One of the comedians of a Boston company went out with a fishing party and soon began to suffer from thirst and evident failure with the hook. Finally one of the crowd took pity on the sufferer and fastened a bottle of beer to his fishing line while he was on a voyage of exploration. When the actor returned he found his line rather heavy and started to haul in what he thought was the biggest fish of the day. Gleeful over his changed luck, he shouted to the captain: "Hey, captain, this is the place! Anchor right here! We're sailing over a brewery!"

Pictures in the Grange

"There, I like that!" The speaker was Dr. G. A. Waterman, formerly teacher of Veterinary Science at Michigan Agricultural College. He was looking over some of the farm topic outlines contained in the Lecturer's Bulletin. The thing that pleased him was the suggestion that Lecturers encourage the use of pictures in their grange work.

"The thing we ought to do," continued Dr. Waterman, "is to line the sides of the grange halls with pictures of farm animals." Every farm home, too, ought to have some pictures on its walls of the finest-best known horses, cattle, sheep and pigs. The children of those homes and granges have a right to know the best of these by this means.

Then the speaker reached across his table and opened the handsomely illustrated number of the Breeders' Gazette. "Every grange," he said, "could use this number of the Gazette to splendid advantage. It is worth five times the annual subscription in value to any farm home where there are children, for the pictures alone."—State Grange Lecturer's Bulletin.

Peninsula Grange No. 706.

Peninsula grange met in regular session Saturday evening, January 16, and was called to order by the Worthy Master with thirty members present. The following officers were installed for the ensuing year, Brother Knudsen of Ironton, acting as installing officer.

Master—Fred Heller.
Overseer—Joe Kenney.
Lecturer—Eva Heller.
Steward—Fred Crowell.
Ass't Steward—Ray Hatt.
Chaplain—Mrs. Pearson.
Treasurer—Martin Rhinhing.
Secretary—Eva Heller.
Gate-Keeper—Frank Shepard
Ceres—Hattie Gunsolus.
Pomona—Winifred Cliffe.
Flora—Mary Gunsolus.
L. A. S.—Mabyn Cliffe.

Brother Knudsen gave a very lengthy and interesting report of the State grange after which the grange retired to the dining room where a bountiful supper was spread.

Marion Center Grange No. 956.

The ladies auxiliary has elected the following officers for 1909.

President, Belle Withers.
Vice-president, Minnie Smith.
Secretary, Lizzie Black.
Treasurer, Josephine Ingalls.

The finance committee made the following report for 1908.

Amount on hand January 6, 1908 $30.17.
Taken in in various ways $137.53.
Total $168.00.
Paid on building fund $100.00.
Other expenses, $56.63.
Balance on hand $11.37.

Barnard Grange No. 986.

Barnard Grange met in regular session January 13, Worthy Master S. Godbold in the chair and all the other officers in their respective places. Four applications received and committees appointed on said applications.

Recess declared for the preparation for the installation of officers for the ensuing year. After recess Brother E. B. Ward took the Master's chair, and introduced Brother S. Godbold as installing officer, with Sister Effie Willis as assistant.

The following officers were installed:

Master—Allan Bolhous.
Overseer—George Dougherty.
Lecturer—Libbie Shapton.
Steward—James Willis.
Ass't Steward—Clarence Beattie.
Chaplain—Albert Beattie.
Treasurer—Henry Gornell.
Secretary—Edmund Simpton.
Gate Keeper—Dana Spayd.
Ceres—Jennie Beattie.
Pomona—Bertha Heise.
Flora—Maggie Godbold.
Ass't Steward—Effie Willis.
Director—S. Godbold.

After installation the Grangers proceeded to the basement, where the ladies had the tables loaded down with good things. After tuning up the inner body, grange was called to order and Brother E. B. Ward gave a talk and lined out the grange work for the ensuing year. A rising vote of thanks was given Brother Ward, also Brother S. Godbold for his report given of the State Grange.

Total present, 11. Dues received $3.50, Fees received, $1.00.

Grange closed in due form to meet the 27 of January.

From Eastport

Saturday evening the Sir Knights of Uriah Tent and the Ladies of Lelia Hive installed the officers named below, about 125 members and guests being present. Among the latter were Mrs. D. G. Tillotson, of Charlevoix, Mr. and Mrs. Bughee of Norwood, and a number from Central Lake.

William N. Sweet acted as installing officer for the Sir Knights, Ella Tillotson, of Charlevoix, deputy great commander, doing the same for the ladies. Dwight Arnold and Clara Kincaid did the honors as master and mistress at arms, while H. L. Dawson and Mary Robertson were flag bearers.

After the ceremonies there was a short program of recitations and vocal and instrumental music.

An elegant supper was served, the tables eliciting many praises for the ladies, demonstrating the truth of the oft-repeated saying, "The Lady Bees always have fine suppers."

Mrs. Tillotson as deputy made many friends during the evening and many praises were heard on all sides both of her, personally, and of her work. The hive has the promise of several new members as a result of her visit and the order is to be congratulated on having a deputy with such charming personality.

Yawning Fish.

The mouth of the turbot is twisted to one side, rather as if it had belonged to a round fish which some one had accidentally trod on and squashed half flat. The yawn begins at the lips, which open as if to suck in water. Then the jaws become distended, and it is seen that this is going to be a real, genuine fish's yawn. But the yawn goes on, works through the back of its head, distending the plates of the skull, and comes out at the gills which open, show the red inside and are inflated for a moment, and then, with a kind of stretching shiver of its back, the fish deflates out again.—London Mail.

Originality Needed.

To revive an old style of building, no matter how well it may be done, does nothing to advance the art of building. It would at the best be but a copy of an old work. Painters copy old masters for the purpose of study, but copying pictures will never make a painter's reputation. Something new must be achieved, some original work executed, before any advance in art is possible. So it is with architecture.—Country House.

CLEANING CORSETS.

How Amateurs Can Wash and Freshen Them Up.

If one wishes to keep one's corsets clean and fresh this can only be done by frequent washing. The majority of cheaper corsets cannot be washed owing to the cheap steel or iron stiffening used in their manufacture. When these corsets are washed the metal forms iron mold stains in the fabric and makes them look ugly. It is therefore necessary that corsets should be of a fairly good quality or at least that the stiffening agent used in their manufacture is of a substance that will not oxidize when wet and form stains such as iron mold on the fabric.

The method of washing is to moisten corsets by placing them in warm soap lather; then straighten them on a board and brush them thoroughly with a soft brush, using plenty of soap and water, dipping them occasionally into the water to remove the loosened dirt.

When quite clean rinse them thoroughly and, if required stiff, dip them into boiling water starch. The degree of starch used depends entirely upon the stiffness required. Some people prefer their corsets to be soft, in which case no stiffness need be given.

The corsets should then be dried in the open air if possible, and when only slightly damped they ought to be pressed with an iron. This makes them smooth and more comfortable to wear.

How to Use Green Peppers.

In the last few years peppers have been growing in favor as a vegetable and as a salad. For the latter it is excellent chopped up to give a flavoring to tomatoes and mixed in with fresh cabbage served with French dressing. For more elaborate effect use the green peppers whole, stuffed with chopped sweetbreads, and serve on hearts of lettuce. Wash and cut off the tops of the peppers, carefully remove the seeds and set on the ice to chill. Boil the sweetbreads and season them when still hot with salt, pepper and plenty of butter. If a small piece of onion is cut in the water in which they are boiled the flat taste to which many persons object, in using sweetbreads as salad is removed. When cold cut in dice about a half inch square and mix thoroughly with a highly seasoned mayonnaise. Fill the peppers with the sweetbreads and put a teaspoonful of mayonnaise on top of each one.

How to Wash Pongee.

As the majority of women are wearing pongee in one form or another, it is well to know how to wash a frock, a coat or a shirt waist of it. This method has been given by a laundress:

Warm soapsuds should be prepared in a large tub and the pongee put into them and gently washed out with the hands until quite clean. It should be hung in the sun or the air until it is quite dry and then ironed. It should be ironed on the wrong side so that the right surface will not appear glossy.

If the pongee is embroidered in colors it is wise to experiment with a piece of it before putting in water. If the color is affected in any way the garment should be washed in gasoline.

How to Sweeten Strong Butter.

Housekeepers often find that butter bought for cooking is quite strong. The Germans have a method of sweetening it which is efficacious. It is as follows:

Put ten pounds of butter into a porcelain kettle and boil steadily over a good hot stove fire until the sediment in the pan is of a pale amber color. This will be in about five hours. Great care must be used for fear of scorching. Strain the butter while hot into clean, small jars, not squeezing the cloth. When cold cover with oiled paper and keep in a cool place from the air. This process imparts to the worst kind of butter a palatable, nutty flavor. It is better than ever for gingerbread or for any kind of plain cake.

How to Make Tomato Relish.

To one peck of firm tomatoes peeled and chopped fine and placed in a sieve to drain add one cupful of chopped onions, two cupfuls of chopped celery, one cupful of white mustard seeds, one fourth cupful of sugar, three red peppers chopped fine, one teaspoonful of black pepper, cinnamon and mace, one quart of vinegar and salt to taste. Mix together and put in air tight jars. Tomatoes must not be scalded, but peeled cold, as they must be firm; also be sure to drain all the water from them. This is a tasty relish for cold meats and one that will keep.

How to Cure a Headache.

A sheet made into a roll and put under the back of the neck will often relieve a severe headache when the pillow has fallen to be comfortable. If the ache continues to be stubborn place a hot water bag at the patient's feet for a few minutes, if she is too ill to sit up, and put her feet in hot water. Then let the patient rest in a darkened room while a hot water bag at the base of the brain. The quiet and warmth will prove effective, and the patient will soon feel well again.

How to Clean Gold Ornaments.

Gold ornaments ornamented with gems should be washed in warm soapsuds. Gold link chains may be cleaned by placing them in a bottle half full of warm soapsuds mixed with a little prepared chalk. Leave for a few hours and shake. Pour the lather off and rinse the chain in clean, cold water and dry it thoroughly.

Bedding For Hogs.

Hogs take cold readily if obliged to sleep on damp bedding. Bedding in which dust collects is also bad, as this irritates the membranes of the nostrils and throat. Fattening hogs if given plenty of good, dry bedding will repay one in added pounds of pork.

FOLLY OF BAD ROADS.

Cost Farmers Yearly Over Fifty-two Million Dollars.

VALUE OF MODEL HIGHWAYS

More Than a Billion and a Half In Gain Would Be Saved—Value of Road Built Near Greenville, Miss., at Low Rate.

When the annual appropriation bill of the department of agriculture was under discussion last April Representative Benjamin Humphreys of Greenville, Miss., made the epigrammatic statement that "no road can cost the farmers as much as a poor one." That touched the very kernel of road economics, for careful research and exhaustive study have proved, says the New York American, that the poor roads of the nation place a total and a hill climbing tax of not less than a quarter of a billion dollars a year on those who use them.

The representative's sparkling little sentence was in answer to a query by Representative Sims as to the cost of building the unique burnt clay roads of the south, a system evolved by the experts of the office of public roads of the United States department of agriculture at an almost incalculable benefit to the cotton growers of the south.

Mr. Humphreys had explained in detail the skillful methods adopted by Engineer Spoon, who had been ordered by Director Logan Waller Page of the office of public roads to go to the delta district of Mississippi and make a study of conditions. He laid logs along stretches of impassable thoroughfares which had as a basis the sticky "gumbo" clay of the south, burnt them to such purpose that the clay was changed entirely in character and then supervised the construction of a road that for hauling purposes is little short of the splendid macadam roads of the north and east.

"It depends entirely upon the character of the country through which the road passes," said Mr. Humphreys when asked what it all cost. "If it be wooded so that fuel can be bought for, say, $1.25 a cord, the road can be made for $1,500 a mile. I may say that it costs from one half to one fifth as much as a macadam road costs, and it is as easily and as cheaply maintained.

"In a country where the people have never gone into the building of good roads the thought of paying $2,000 a mile seems prohibitive. Where the experiment is once made, however, we all know that the people, and especially the farmers, who usually at first are most violently opposed to the undertaking, demand that the roads be constructed and are most willing to bear the tax."

In explaining how easily the burden of taxation would be borne, even if the authorities of his county decided to expend a half million in the construction of a perfect system of high class roads, Mr. Humphreys said: "If the farmer, instead of hauling six bales of cotton with two mules, as could be done with ease last winter over the burnt clay road near Greenville (the one built as a model by Engineer Spoon of Director Page's office), could haul but two, he would be taxed for a bad road at a higher rate than anybody was ever taxed for a good road, not counting the wear and tear on mules and wagons.

"I have seen seed cotton in the pens in July which had been picked after the rains had begun to fall in the previous winter and which had not been hauled to the railroad where the gin was located because the roads were too bad to travel. Think of the tax that man was paying, and that, too, for a road he could not travel!"

Mr. Humphreys, who has taken a great interest in the splendid work being done by Director Page and who is apparently thoroughly familiar with the experiments and scientific advancements being made by that scholarly road expert, named a number of the publications issued by the office and told of the vast benefits the farmers of the country were receiving through their distribution. He referred especially to the efficacy of the split log drag as a road builder and maintainer and read letters from men who had attained the most gratifying results from the use of this simple but effective device.

Last year the 2,000,000 miles of poor roads in the United States cost a vast fortune to the farmers and incidentally another to the city men, the added cost to the farmers of hauling farm products over the well nigh impassable roads being in the end paid by the men who consume them.

Statistics gathered from the leading countries of Europe prove that the cost of hauling over the American roads is far higher than in any other country, the average in France, Germany and England being 12 cents a ton mile last year to a cost of 25 cents here. That difference of 13 cents is the unnecessary tax burden the American farmer is forced to bear because state and county authorities have long been blind to the benefits which would follow an awakening to road importance.

As the average length of the haul of all American farm products is 24 miles. It will be seen that every ton hauled cost the farmer who hauled it $3.22 more than the hauling of a ton of similar products would cost the farmers of England, France or Germany. Last year nearly 80,000,000,000 pounds of farm products were hauled over the country roads. Reduce that vast weight to tons, charge it $3.22 a ton, and it proves an annual loss to the farmer of $572,400,000.

And the saving of that sum would be a trifle of a fraction of the benefits that would come from an immediate construction of perfect roads, for it is but a portion of the weight annually hauled over these roads, the statistics of the department of commerce and labor after liberal deductions placing the quantity at approximately 250,000,000 tons. The saving in the handling of that stupendous bulk would be $3,750,000,000 annually.

It has been ascertained also that the construction of model highways in a rural community brings an immediate increase in the value of the property which such roads traverse. There are 800,000,000 acres of farm lands in the United States at the present time. Statistics show that the improved road increase in farm values is from $2 to $50 an acre. Were all the acres to benefit even the lowest amount the gain would be $1,600,000,000, which might be saved in hauling, and the total would be amply large enough to gridiron the length and breadth of the continent with macadam roads as fine as those which have given the fame and wealth to France—the land of perfect highways.

GOOD ROAD SUGGESTION.

Kansas Man Says Put State Agricultural College In Charge.

Several articles have appeared in the papers recently on the subject of good roads, and always with the thought of a lot of new officers and commissions. Why duplicate officers all the time? Instead of creating new commissions and a new set of officers the sensible and economical thing to do would be to grant the Agricultural college funds to be used for this specific purpose, writes J. K. Miller of Manhattan, Kan., to the Kansas City Star. Plans have been furnished free to county commissioners, township trustees and road supervisors. Special meetings have been held in many counties, and the subject of good roads has been placed on the programs of hundreds of farmers' institutes.

A bulletin prepared for members of farmers' institutes in Kansas covers the whole subject of roadmaking, dirt roads, macadamized roads, bridges, culverts, concrete, stone, iron, wooden, etc. All we need now is a few thousand dollars a year to employ a special highway engineer to work with the county engineers and commissioners and others, prepare plans and go out to the different communities that want improved roads and help start the work. The entire expense could be met by a small state license on automobiles, as they tear up the roads more than ten times the number of wagons.

EFFECT OF GOOD ROADS.

Much Easier to Haul Cotton Now In Lee County, Ga.

A sight was witnessed at Leesburg, Ga., the other day that would have been impossible a few years ago. Two mules from five miles in the country came into town with five bales of cotton. Several years ago the particular road traveled was in places an almost bottomless sand bed.

The convicts have been at work on the road for about four years, and, while the roads lack much yet of being what they should be, still the difference is great and markedly noticeable when former times are compared. The hardest part of the pull was after the team hit the streets of Leesburg. Lee county has about thirty convicts at work steadily on her roads. It is hoped that she will soon have some of the best roads in the state.

Shale Rock For a Park Road.

About a mile and a half of driveway in North park, Springfield, Ill., was built in 1907 and surfaced with shale at a cost of 105 cents per square yard. The shale was spread eight inches thick and compressed to six inches by rolling. It was hauled from mines, one a mile and a half away and another two miles. Hauling from the former cost 40 cents and from the latter 60 cents per cubic yard, two yards being hauled at a load. The sod cut from the line of the road, 4,648 square feet in area, was used for sodding the sides of the cuts and fills at a cost of 0.3 cents per square yard.

VOL. 26. NUMBER 4 — CHARLEVOIX, MICHIGAN, WEDNESDAY, JANUARY 27, 1909 — PRICE $1.50 PER YEAR

MICHIGAN REPUBLICAN EDITORIAL ASS'N

Met In Lansing Thursday and Friday of Last Week.

MARSHALL L. COOK NEW PRESIDENT

By a Two-Thirds Vote Asked for Primary on All Officers.

Industrial Training Schools—Publicity in Expenditure of Public Funds and Postoffice Rulings Indorsed.

Last week, the Michigan Republican editorial association held one of the most profitable and pleasant meetings in the history of the association.

Thursday evening, the meeting was called to order in the convention hall of the Hotel Downey, by President McCall, who, after congratulating the members on their attendance from all parts of the state, called on M. L. Cook, of, the Hastings Banner, who read a paper on Industrial Training Schools. This paper was pronounced by all present the best paper ever read before a meeting of the association, and steps were taken to give it a wide publicity. Mr. Cook's plan contemplates that where any school district in the state erects buildings and secures the necessary tools to carry on a course in manual training, one third of the primary school fund can be used for the purpose of paying teachers, equal privileges to be given to every child of school age in the county. This plan met the hearty endorsement of all, who considered that the adoption of this plan would place Michigan, where she has always been, the leader in the progress of education.

President Strom, of the Indiana association, explained what had been accomplished in Indiana for the Republican party and how the association and state committee worked together in that state, also how the adoption of publicity measures had been the means of the saving of vast sums of money to the tax payers of the state.

Friday morning, Mr. Strom, who is a special agent of the post-office department, explained the new postal regulations, in regard to the expiration of subscriptions, and Ex-senator Vaughn spoke on reforestation. In the afternoon, Senator Dickinson explained the primary election bill which he has introduced and in the main it met the approval of the editors, however, by a two thirds vote they expressed their belief that it should cover all offices, from United States senator to coroner, also, for consideration, the view was raised to have the United States Senator named at the fall election, rather than at the August primary.

Senator Foster spoke on purposed legislation, explaining several measures. The committee on resolutions commended the plan outlined in Mr. Cook's paper to the consideration of the law-makers and educators of the state; asked for the enactment of a law providing for the publication of reports of all officials having the care of public funds and the publishing of notices of the letting of all public contracts, indorsing the ruling of the post-office department in regard to the expiration of subscriptions and the establishing of closer relations with the state central committee.

Election of officers resulted as follows;

President, M. L. Cook, Hastings.

Vice Presideat, W. H. Berkey, Cassopolis.

Secretary, Fred Sherman, Port Huron.

Treasurer, George Barnes, Howell.

WILL ATTACK PETITIONS

The Plan of Liquor Dealer's Association.

Test Case Will be Made in Calhoun County—Will Interest Twenty-eight Counties.

The State Liquor Dealer's association has begun the battle with the local option cohorts of the state. The onslaught is legal, through the county courts. Calhoun will be the scene of the first conflict, with action in Washtenaw, Ionia and Berrien and probably others to follow.

To Marshall came Fred A. Baker and William C. Manchester, Detroit lawyers and counsel for the association. In the circuit court there they obtained a mandamus calling the board of supervisors to court February 2. The validity of the local option petition in pursuance of which the supervisors have voted to put the local option question up to the people in April, will be attacked.

It will be the contention of the liquor dealers that the supervisors cannot submit the question of local option to the electors because they have not verified the signatures on the petition.

"We hold that the affidavits of those who secured the signatures was not sufficient to warrant such action," is the statement of the association lawyers. "The names should have been verified from the poll lists or the registration lists. This was not done."

It is said that in the event of an adverse decision here the association lawyers will carry the matter to Lansing.

The fate of the local option petitions in 28 counties hangs on the decision of the proceedings brought in that section of the state. These counties are Emmet, Charlevoix, Benzie, Kalkaaka, Alcona, Iosco, Clare, Newaygo, Mecosta, Isabella, Huron, Montcalm, Tuscola, Sanilac, Ottawa, Ionia, Genesee, Lapeer, Allegan, Eaton, Livingston, Calhoun, Jackson, Washtenaw, Berrien, Branch, Hillsdale and Monroe. It is understood here that the practice has been in all these counties, as in Calhoun, to accept the affidavits on the petition as conclusive evidence of the signatures.

WILL INTEREST HUNTERS

Revision of Game Laws Proposed by State Game Warden.

Bird Hunters to Be Limited to Fifty Birds During Season—Other Changes.

A new measure to supplant the present patchwork game and fish laws of the state will soon be outlined for the legislature by State Game and Fish Warden Pierce.

According to Warden Pierce, the present bird law, which limits the number of birds in the possession of any one person at any one time to 50, falls short of the purpose for which it was designed. Market hunters, he says, are able to kill as many as 500 partridges in a season without violating the law. The birds are so valuable, selling for $1 each in Detroit, that the market hunters can well afford to pay the expenses of a man sent out to the woods from Detroit to carry the birds to market. Whenever the maximum number of 50 has been reached they are sent to the market and the slaughter goes on.

Warden Pierce proposes to limit the number of birds to be killed by one hunter in a season to 50. This number, he believes, is as many as the average sportsman desires to kill in a season, and will tend to stop the wholesale market shooting.

The deer law, says the warden, is much more effective than the bird law, and violations are not frequent. The requirement that deer shipped from the woods must be tagged minimizes the possibility of hunters killing more than the stipulated two deer a season. Practically the only violations are where the deer are eaten in the woods. There is some sentiment in favor of further limiting the number to one deer a season, and prohibiting the killing entirely of deer without horns.

Another condition that Warden Pierce will take cognizance of in framing his law is the fact that the season for birds in the upper peninsula is later, because of the colder weather, than in the lower. Senator Fowle of the Soo says that U. P. partridges are not matured when the season opens October 1, and hopes to see the opening postponed a month in that region.

The matter of a general fish law is more intricate than the game law. At present there are almost as many fish laws in the state as there are townships. Every little freshet in which a member of the finny tribe resides has its individual act. It is the desire of Warden Pierce to supplant these numerous local acts with a general law covering the entire state, which will be no small undertaking.

JOURNEY HAS BEGUN

Captain Campbell Left on Long Voyage Last Night.

Will Only Make Two Stops Enroute—Wireless Will Keep Them Informed.

Captain Weaver returned Monday night, from New York, where he accompanied Captain Campbell, stopping at Toledo on his way home to attend the tugmen's convention. On their arrival at New York they found the St. Croix, which is a fine wooden boat, 212 feet long, in dry dock at Hoboken, New Jersey. They also saw the Republic while there.

Captain Campbell expected to leave last night. Donald shipped as wheelsman. Their first stopping place will be at Newport News to coal. The next stop will be at Corwell, which is one-half way around for coal, after which they will make no more stops until they reach Seattle. Before starting a wireless telegraph was installed on board.

PLEASANT HOUSE PARTY

Held at Home of Mrs. J. P. Partridge the Past Few Days.

The home of Mrs. J. P. Partridge has been the scene of a very pleasant house party, lasting from Friday night until Monday of this week. A crowd of young people chaperoned by Mrs. Partridge and Mr. and Mrs. Joe Howard, and consisting of the Misses Mattie Bedford, Marion Harris, Merle Felts, Mary Kirachner, Bernice Sherman, Addie Holly, Lula Jackson and Flora Caldwell. Messrs. Lewis, Hines, Emrey, Levinson, Felts, Vandermade and Barney were participants.

On Sunday morning the young men took it upon themselves to get the breakfast, the table being very artistically set in lumber-camp style. A large turkey dinner was served by the young ladies at 6 p. m., Mrs. H. C. Cooper being a guest, and from what we can hear each demonstrated their ability to get up and serve a meal in proper shape.

DRAW INCREASED SALARIES

State Officials Did for the First Time on January 15.

On the 1st and 15th of each month the employes of the state of Michigan receive their salaries. January 5th the following officers received an increase in pay under the provisions of the new constitution: Governor, attorney general, secretary of state, treasurer, auditor general and land commissioner. The governor and attorney general each receive $5,000 a year and the others $2,500. This is a raise from $4,000 for governor and from $800 for all of the others except auditor general. The attorney general has held that all other state officers receive the salary fixed under the old constitution until a new salary is provided by the legislature.

FRUIT GROWERS WILL ORGANIZE

Meeting Called at Bellaire Friday February 12.

GROWING INDUSTRY IN THIS REGION

Ladies' Auxiliary Also Will be Organized.

Charles S. Gulle, Register of Deeds of Antrim County Father of Movement—Will Mean Much to This Section.

A meeting of fruit growers and others interested has been called to meet at the court house in Bellaire, on Friday, February 12, 1909, for the purpose of forming a fruit growers association, for the development of the intermediate valley as a fruit producing region. At the same time and place it is expected that an auxiliary association will be organized by the ladies, to be called the Horticultural Society or "Outdoor Art Society" to work toward the beautifying with trees and shrubs of the homes and roadways of the section.

There is a considerable quantity of fruit growers in the valley now and many young orchards being contemplated, but few of the farmers are making the specialty of the fruit business that it is thought the location, soil and climatic conditions warrant. The growers too have have been victimized in the past by jobbers in fruit trees, many of which were not true to name, and the result has been more or less dissatisfaction and discouragement. Then methods of harvesting the fruit have been primitive and injurious to the crop. A lack of systematic spraying and care of the orchards has operated to injure the quality of the product. This organization it is hoped will to an extent correct these evils, as well as furnish opportunity to exchange ideas and develop up-to-date methods, and seek to better marketing facilities and opportunities.

The organization will be the direct result of agitation started through local papers by Charles S. Gulle, register of deeds of Antrim county, and a fruit grower himself in a small way, and has met with a hearty response from all sources.

VIOLET IN THE ICE

Was Caught While Making Trip Friday.

So Far All Efforts to Release Her Have Been Fruitless.

The fish tug Violet, which has been carrying the Beaver Island mail since the Beaver laid up for the season, left here Friday for St. James with five sacks of mail but was caught in the drift ice four miles out from Cross Village, with the crew consisting of Captain Ed. Martin, Engineer Barney Martin and helper Charles Cross, on board. The tugs Parmelee and McCann were sent to the rescue but were unable to reach the imprisoned tug.

Tuesday, Captain Martin made his way over the ice and was able to take some provisions out. Captain Martin reported that they had been reduced to two cans of tomatoes found among the freight, which, while they didn't go very far, tasted mighty good.

Today the tug Alice C. from Manistique, attempted to get the tug out but on account of the heavy wind, was forced to abandon the effort. Captain Martin is at Cross Village, the two other members of the crew being left aboard.

Masquerade Charity Ball.

A masquerade charity ball will be held at the Charlevoix Theater, Thursday evening February 4, under the auspices at A. T. Hoxie Tent K. O. T. M. M. Every cent taken in above necessary expenses will be used for charitable purposes. The committee having the matter in charge will accept any thing that can be used in their work of relief for tickets. Dan Durance, S. M. Rose, C. E. See, Archie Allcock and Andrew Ross are the members of the committee.

Last Saturday night the Modern Woodman installed their new officers for the ensuing year. Refreshments were served in abundance and all enjoyed it. Crackers and cheese being the main diet.

Sleighing is all gone in this locality and left hundreds of cords of wood in the woods cut and ready for hauling. We are in hopes we will get more sleighing before spring opens up, so as to enable the wood haulers to finish the supply of wood for the kilns and supply the mills with sufficient logs so they will have work for this coming season without closing down for the want of sufficient supply.

GROW HAIR ON BALD HEADS

Bald Headed People May Get a New Chance In Life.

In these days when youth is the moving factor in business; when a man makes his mark at thirty five and is ready to retire at forty-five; when business houses pension the man we call middle age" rather than allow his lagging influence to intrude upon the commercial rush, a bald head is almost fatal to any man's hopes. The following must therefore prove interesting to people who are losing their hair or who are bald.

Resorcin is one of the latest and most effective germ killers discovered by science, and in connection with Beta Napthol, which is both germicidal and antiseptic, a combination is formed which destroys the germ which rob the hair of its nutriment, and also creates a clean and healthy condition of the scalp, which prevents the development of new germs.

Pilocarpin is a well known agent for restoring the hair to its natural color, where the loss of color has been due to a disease of the scalp. Yet, it is not a coloring matter or dye.

This combination of curatives mixed with alcohol as a stimulant perfects the most effective remedy for hair and scalp troubles.

The famous Rexall "93" Hair Tonic is chiefly composed of Resorcin, Beta Napthol and Pilocarpin. It makes the scalp healthy, nourishes the hair, stimulates the follicles. Where the head is already bare, it enters the follicles, revitalizes the roots, supplies nourishment and stimulates a new growth.

We want you to try a few bottles of Rexall "93" Hair tonic, on our personal guarantee that the trial will not cost you a penny if it does not give you absolute satisfaction. That's proof of our faith in this remedy and it should indisputably demonstrate that we know what we are talking about when we say that Rexall "93" Hair Tonic will grow hair on bald heads, except of course, where baldness has been of such long duration that the roots of the hair are entirely dead, the follicles closed and grown over, and the scalp is glazed.

Remember, we are basing our statements upon what has already been accomplished by the use of Rexall "93" Hair tonic, and we have the right to assume that what it has done to hundreds of others it will do for you. In any event you cannot lose anything by giving it a trial on our liberal guarantee. Two sizes 50c and $1.00. Ivy Drug Store. A. R. Fleischer, proprietor.

How to Keep Cut Fruit Fresh.

Often a housewife does not wish to use the whole of a fruit or vegetable at once, and in such cases as these the problem arises as to how the fruit can be kept fresh after it has been cut. Often a watermelon, pineapple or cucumber is too large for one meal, and one wishes to know how to keep the remainder fresh. This can be done by cutting the amount you wish to use straight across one end without first peeling it and then standing the remainder of the fruit flat down on a china plate or enameled dish of sufficient size that no air can penetrate between the dish and the fruit. The fruit should be stood on the cut end. Never use a tin dish for standing it on.

How to Keep Food at Its Best.

Green vegetables should be put in the icebox as soon as they are delivered. Salad greens should be thrown into water or wrapped in a damp cloth and then in newspaper and left in the air if they are not to be used immediately. Proper receptacles of glass or tin should be provided for the cereals, and they should be emptied where they belong at once and closely covered to prevent insects getting in them. Coffee should go at once into an air tight canister or it will lose its aroma. Salt, soap and cheese should be kept in a dry place, and olive oil should be kept cool.

How to Kill Worms in Flowerpots.

If your plants in flowerpots seem inclined to decay, try sticking half a dozen matches in the earth around them, heads down. The sulphur in them will kill the worms that probably are eating away the roots.

Neighborhood Notes

Some time ago a fellow named E. A. Kenyon sold a lot of old junk to W. J. Lewis of Boyne City got his money for it and when another man came along and proved ownership Lewis was forced to dig up the second time. He put Sheriff McWain on the case with the result that Kenyon was located and arrested at Paw Paw. McWain went and got him and he is now in the county jail for 90 days by virtue of Judge Hammond's decree. He plead guilty to the charge.

O. C. Marfin of Pleasantview was instantly killed about two miles from Harbor Springs last Thursday morning. He was employed by the Harbor Springs Lumber Co., to haul logs to their mill, and was on his way to town with a load, and in attempting to turn out the road, the top log became loose and started to roll off, causing the whole load to tip over with him underneath. The remains were brought to town and an inquest held. He leaves a wife and several children.

The effort being made to change the trout fishing season to be open from May 15 to September 15 instead of a month earlier as now, is of vast importance to this section, because of the impetus it might give to the resort traffic, the present season beginning too early to secure our early visitors the best sport and closing just in the height of both the fishing and resort seasons. The streams must perforce be annually restocked to maintain the fishing and it seems that the greatest measure of benefit can only be secured by changing the open season as is being attempted Central Lake Torch.

Articles of association for the Traverse City Iron Works have been filed with the county clerk at Traverse City, by three organizers of the company, Benjamin Thirlby, William F. Calkins and Lawrence DeZoeta. The company has a capital stock of $100,000, $90,000 of this being common and $10,000 being preferred stock.

Plans for an extensive improvement and enlargement of the plant of the Traverse City Iron Works are under way, and in a short time the old building of the company will be lowered to the ground and a new building will be erected that will be much larger and be better equipped in every way to carry on the work of the company. For five years the company has been manufacturing gas producers, and with their limited capacity, but with the new building it will be arranged so that this part of the work can be carried on in an extensive way. The plant has also been engaged in the manufacture of gas producer engines and will go into this manufacture extensively.

David King, a canadian, was picked up by a party of wood choppers about two miles north of Eckerman. The man was evidently in a drunken stupor from which he was aroused with the greatest difficult.

Besides his legs, all of the fingers of the right hand and two of the left were found to be frozen and will have to be amputated.

A purse was made up and he will be sent to a hospital in the Soo for medical attendance.

King had been working in the woods near Eckerman all winter and had evidently come to town to celebrate.

He is 40 years of age and single and has relatives near Ontario, Canada. King will be a cripple and utterly helpless for the remainder of his life.

The Land of the Mother-in-law.

In China the mother-in-law's position in the family admits of no doubt. She rules her son's wife. "A short time ago when in Canton an illustration of this was forcibly brought home to me," writes Frederick S. Isham, author of "The Lady of the Mount," from the far east. "A wife was found murdered. The husband was accused and would have been convicted and had his head taken off when—most obviously—his mother, the mother-in-law in the case, came forward. 'I did it myself,' she said calmly. 'The woman had a bad temper and answered back, so I punished her.' The judge acquitted the son and, in accordance with Chinese law, inflicted a merely nominal fine on the mother-in-law. She and the son left the court with a look on their faces which seemed to say, 'There had been much ado about little.'"

SICK PEOPLE
SHOULD INVESTIGATE

I Know the Diseases of Both Sexes Like an Open Book. I have Been Curing Them for 49 Years. In fact, My Entire Life Has Been Devoted to Curing Where Others Have Failed.

I Have Changed Hundreds Upon Hundreds of Nervous Wrecks Into Fine, Strong Men and Women. I Accept No Case I Cannot Cure.

I ESPECIALLY invite all discouraged and dissatisfied ones who have been treated without a cure to write me fully and frankly about their case. It will cost you nothing to write me, and I will gladly tell you your condition, truthfully, honestly—accepting no case that I cannot cure—holding out no false promises. I have spent my whole life in the study and cure of chronic diseases, and my study and investigation have been blessed by the discovery of many new and marvelous methods of treating disease. Forty-nine years ago I graduated from the Western Homeopathic Medical College of Cleveland, O., for two years, Head Physician at the Alma Sanitarium, Alma, Mich. I have spent many long years as a specialist, treating chronic diseases of all kinds with wonderful success, and am now owner of one of the largest sanitariums in the country, giving my entire time to the treatment of Nervous Diseases of both sexes. I cure the worst forms of Epilepsy, St. Vitus Dance, Paralysis, etc.

Dr. Andrew B. Spinney
Specialist in Chronic Diseases.

My long experience in diagnosing cases and my understandings of the different diseases that I treat enable me to almost every case to prescribe by mail a perfect, thorough cure. All correspondence in plain envelopes and sacredly confidential.

I CURE NERVOUS TROUBLES—Wasting Away, Loss of Vitality in Both Sexes. Whether from excesses or overwork, I promptly and positively cure, no matter of how long standing.

I CURE BLOOD POISON—I cure Blood Poison in the first, second and third stages—driving the poison from the system, the taint from the blood; curing pimples, copper spots, sores in the mouth, tumors and ulcers.

I CURE FITS—Epilepsy, St. Vitus Dance, Paralysis, etc., by striking direct at the cause, restoring the diseased nerves to perfect health.

I CURE PILES—in 30 days to stay cured and to never return.

I CURE CONSUMPTION, the Great White Plague, in the first and second stages. Have made a special study of this disease for fifty years. Have cured hundreds given up by home Doctors. Those I cannot treat at home by seeing or by mail, I will take to my Sanitarium, where best of medical skill, nursing and private rooms are given, for Ten Dollars a week.

I GUARANTEE TO CURE, to stay cured, liquor, morphine, cocaine, nicotine or cigarette habits. Most cases treated at home.

Call and see me or write to either Sanitarium as below.

No matter what disease you are suffering from, write me fully today. I will answer at once and my advice, which costs you nothing, may be worth hundreds of dollars—life itself—to you. If I cannot cure you I will tell you so. WRITE TODAY.

Faithfully yours,

In the nomad weeks of wind and sun, as the tissues of the brain grew slowly back to a state of normal action, the mind seized again and again upon the bitter question of his identity. It had obtruded into clicking leagues on steel rails, into miles afoot by fruit hung lanes, on white Pacific shell roads under cedar branches, on busy highways. It had stalked into days of labor in hop fields, work with hand and foot that brought dreamless sleep and generous wage; into nights of less savory experience in city purlieus, where a self forgotten man gamed and drank recklessly, audaciously, forbiddingly. Who was he? From what equation of life had he been eliminated? Had he loved anything or anybody? Had he a friend, any friend, in the world?

The man of no memories gave no heed to the men on the street, who looked at him askance. He sauntered along unconsciously, his hands thrust deep in his pockets. With a casual glance at the hotel across the way he entered a saloon, where a score of patrons were standing at the bar or shaking dice noisily at the tables ranged against the wall. The bartender nodded to his greeting, the slightest possible nod. The dog which had followed him into the place leaped up against him, its fore paws on his knee.

"Brandy, if you please," said the new arrival, and poured indolently from the bottle set before him.

The conversation in the room had chilled. To its occupants the man who had entered was no stranger. He was Hugh Stires, returned unwelcome to a place from which he had lately vanished. Moreover, what they felt for him was not alone the crude hatred which the honest toiler feels for the trickster who gains a living by devious knaveries. There was an uglier suspicion afloat of Hugh Stires! A blue shirted miner called gruffly for his score, threw down the silver and went out, slamming the swing door.

The newcomer regarded none of them. He poured his glass slowly full, sipped from it and, holding it in his hand, turned and glanced deliberately about the place. He looked at everybody in the room, suddenly sensible of the hostile atmosphere, with what seemed a careless amusement. Then he raised his glass.

"Will you join me, gentlemen?" he said.

There was but one response. A soiled, shambling figure, blear, white haired and hesitating, with a battered violin under its arm, slouched from a corner and grasped eagerly for the bottle the bartender contemptuously pushed toward him. No one else moved.

The new arrival looked smilingly at the soiled figure beside him, a fragment of flotsam tossed on the tide of failure. "I erred in my general salutation," he said. "Gentility is, after all, less a habit than an instinct." He lifted his glass to the castaway. "I drink to the health of the only other gentleman present," he said, and tossed the drink off.

He looked smilingly at the soiled figure beside him.

A snort and a truculent shuffle came from the standing men. Their faces were dark. Tom Felder, the lawyer, entered the saloon just in time to see "Big" Devlin, the owner of the corner dance hall, rise from a table, rolling up flannel sleeves slung tattooed arms. He saw him stride forward and, with a well directed shove, send the shambling inebriate reeling across the floor.

"Two curs at the bar are enough at a time!" quoth Devlin.

Then the lawyer saw an extraordinary thing. The emptied glass rang sharply on the bar, the arm that held it straightened, the lithe form behind it seemed to expand, and the big bulk of Devlin went backward through the doorway and collapsed in a sprawling heap on the pavement.

"For my part," said an even, infuriate voice from the threshold, "I prefer but one."

The face the roomful saw now as they pushed to the outer air and which turned on the flocking crowd bore anything but the stinking look they had been used to see on the face of Hugh Stires. The smile that meant danger played over it. There were both calculation and savagery in it. It was the look of the man to whom all risks are alike, to whom nothing counts. In the instant confusion every one there recognized the element of hardihood dumfounded. Here was one who, as Barney McGinn, the freighter, said afterward, "hadn't the sand of a sick coyote," bearding a bully and the most formidable antagonist the town afforded.

The prostrate man was on his feet in an instant, wiping the blood from a cleft lip, and peeled off his vest with a vile epithet.

"That is incidentally a venturesome word to select from your vocabulary," said the even voice, a sort of detonation in it. "You will feel like apologizing presently."

Devlin came on with a bull-like rush. The lawyer's eye, shrewdly gaging the situation, gave the slighter man short shrift, and for several intense seconds every breath stopped. Those seconds called up from some mysterious covert all the skill and strength of the old hard hitting Satan Sanderson, all the science of parry and feint learned in those bluff college bouts with the gloves with Gentleman Jim.

It was a short, sharp contest. Not a blow broke the guard of the man whose back was to the doorway. On the other hand, Devlin's face was puffed and bleeding. When for a breath he drew back, gulping, a sudden gluit of doubt and fear had slipped beneath the blood and sweat.

The end came quickly. Harry stepped to meet him, there was a series of swift passes—then one, two lightning-like blows, and Devlin went down white and stunned in the dust of the roadway.

So high was the tension and so instantaneous the close that for a moment the crowd was noiseless, the spell still upon them. In that moment Tom Felder came hastily forward, for, though sharing the general dislike, admiration was strong in him, and, knowing the temper of the bystanders, he expected trouble.

Staring in a kind of strained and horrified expectancy.

The man who had administered Devlin's punishment, however, did not see his approach. He was looking somewhere above their heads—at the upper balcony of the hotel opposite—staring in a kind of strained and horrified expectancy at a girl who leaned forward, her hands clinching the balustrade, her eyes fixed on his face. There was something in that face, in that intense look, that seemed to cleave the gray veil that swathed Harry Sanderson's past.

Only an instant the gaze hung between them. It served as a distraction, for other eyes had raced to the balcony.

The clamoring voices were suddenly hushed, for there was not wanting in the crowd that instinctive regard for the proprieties which belongs to communities where gentlewomen are few. In that instant Felder put his hand on the arm of the staring man and drew him to the door of the hotel.

"Inside, quickly!" he said under his breath, for a rumble from the crowd told him the girl had left the balcony above. He pushed the other through the doorway and turned for a second on the threshold.

"Whatever private feelings you may have," he said in a tone that all heard, "don't disgrace the town. Fair play, no matter who he is! McGinn, I should think you, at least, were big enough to settle your grudges without the help of a crowd."

Chapter 13

THE man whose part the lawyer had taken had yielded to his touch almost dazedly as the girl disappeared.

"That was a close squeak," said Felder to him. "Do you realize that? In five minutes more you'd have been handled a sight worse than you handled your man, let me tell you!"

The man of no memories smiled, the same smile that had infuriated the barroom—and yet somehow it was more difficult to smile now.

"Is it possible," he asked, "that through an unlucky error I have trounced the local archbishop?"

Felder looked at him narrowly. Beneath the sarcasm he distinguished unfamiliarity, aloofness, a genuine astonishment. The appearance of the person of Hugh Stires of the qualities of nerve and courage had surprised him out of his usual indifference. The "tinhorn gambler" had fought like a man. His present sang froid was as singular. Had he been an absolute stranger in the town he might have acted and spoken no differently. Felder's smooth shaven, earnest face was puzzled as he answered curtly:

"You've trounced a man who will remember it a long time."

"Ah!" said the man addressed easily. "He has a better memory than I, then!"

He gazed over the heads of the silent roomful to the simmering street, where Devlin, with the aid of a supporting arm, was staggering into the saloon in which his humiliation had begun. "They seem agitated," he said. The feeling of embarrassment was passing; the old daring was lifting. His glance, scanning the room, set itself on a shabby, clear figure in the background apologetic, yet keenly and pridefully interested. A whimsical light was in his eye. He crossed to him and, reaching out his hand, drew the violin from under his arm.

"Music hath charms to soothe the savage breast," he said, and, opening the door, he tucked the instrument under his chin and began to play.

What absolute contempt of danger, what lunacy prompting possessed, can scarcely be imagined. Felder looked for a quick end to the folly, but he saw the men in the street even as they moved forward waver and pause. With almost the first note it had come to them that they were hearing music such as the squeaking fiddles of the dance halls never knew. Those on the opposite pavement crossed over, and men far down the street stood still to listen.

More than the adept's cunning that had at first tingled in his fingers at sight of the instrument was in Harry Sanderson's playing. The violin had been the single passion which the old Satan Sanderson had carried with him into the new career. The impulse to "soothe the savage breast" had been a flare of the old character he had been relieving, but the music, begun in bravado, swept him almost instantly beyond its bounds. He had never been an indifferent performer. Now he was playing as he had never played in his life, with inspiration and abandon. There was a diabolism in it. He had forgotten the fight, the crowd, his own mocking mood. He had forgotten where he was. He was afloat on a fluctuant tide of melody that was carrying him back, back, into the far-away past toward all that he had loved and lost.

"It's 'Home, Sweet Home,'" said Barney McGinn. "No, it's 'Annie Laurie.' No, it's—hanged if I know what it is!"

The player himself could not have told him. He was in a kind of tranced dream. The self made music was calling with a sweet insistence to buried things that were stirring from a long sleep. It sent a gulp into the throat of more than one standing moveless in the street. It brought a suspicious moisture to Tom Felder's eyes. It drew Mrs. Halloran from the kitchen, wiping her hands on her apron. It called to a girl who crouched in the upper hall with her miserable face buried in her hands, drew her down the stair to the office door, her eyes wide with a breathless wonder, her face glistening with feeling.

From the balcony Jessica had witnessed the fight without understanding its meaning. A fascination she could not gainsay had glued her eyes to the struggle. It was he—it was the face she knew, seen but once for a single moment in the hour of her marriage, but stamped indelibly upon her memory. It was no longer smooth shaven, and it was changed, evilly changed. But it was the same. There was recklessness and mockery in it and yet strength, not weakness. Shunned and despised as he might be—the chief actor, as it seemed to her, in a cheap and desperate barroom affray, a coarse affair of fisticuffs in the public street—yet there was something intrepid in his bearing, something splendid in his victory.

To Jessica, standing with hands close clasped, the music seemed the agony of remorse for a past fall, the cry of a forlorn soul, knowing itself cast out, appealing to its good angel for pity and pardon. Hugh had often played to her, lightly, carelessly, as he did all things. She had deemed it only one of his many clever, amateurish accomplishments. Now it struck her with a pang that there had been in him a deeper side that she had not guessed. Since her wedding day she had thought of her marriage as a loathed bond; from which his false pretense had absolved her. Now a doubt of her own position assailed her. Had loneliness and outlawry driven him into the career that had made him shunned even in this rough town, a course which she, had she been faithful to her vow "for better, for worse," might have turned to his redemption? God forgave, but she had not forgiven. Smarting tears scorched her eyelids.

For Harry Sanderson the music was the imprisoned memory, crying out strongly in the first tongue it had found. The slumbering qualities that had stirred uneasily at sight of the face on the balcony awoke. Who he was and had been he knew no more than before, but the new writhing self consciousness, starting from its sleep with almost a sense of shock, became conscious of the gaping crowd, the dusty street, the red sunset and of himself at the end of a vulgar brawl sawing a violin in silly braggadocio in a hotel doorway.

The music faltered and broke off. The bow dropped at his feet. He picked it up fumblingly and turned back into the office as a man entered from a rear door. The newcomer was Michael Halloran, the hotel's proprieis what we give you—no bluff. Would you rather wear clothes that are chopped out and put together by machinery and of the same pattern as 25 to 100 other fellows can buy or wear those made by legitimately by hand throughout by a real tailor?

Don't be bluffed with your eyes wide open into believing that the "make believe tailor" gives you anything but a "guess fit" and cheap made clothes.

Why look as if you had joined some uniform brigade when you can come to us and select an exclusive pattern for yourself, something 50 other fellows can't buy?

Give us a call and we will demonstrate to you what real tailoring is.

Suits $15.00 to $35.00

Republican State Convention Call.

Grand Rapids, Mich., Jan. 11, 1909.

To the Republican Electors of the State of Michigan:

The state convention of the Republicans of Michigan is hereby called to meet in the City of Grand Rapids on Friday, February 12, 1909, at eleven o'clock in the forenoon for the purpose of nominating two candidates for the office of Justice of the Supreme Court, two candidates for the office of Regent of the University, one candidate for the office of Superintendent of Public Instruction; one candidate for the office of member of the State Board of Education, and six candidates for the office of member of State Board of Agriculture, and for the transaction of such other business as may properly come before the convention.

In accordance with the provisions of law and the action of the Republican State Central Committee, every county will be entitled to one delegate for each two hundred and fifty of the total vote cast therein for the Republican candidate for Secretary of State at the last election and one additional delegate for a majority of 125 votes or more.

Under the resolutions of 1858, no delegate will be entitled to a seat in the convention who does not reside in the county he proposes to represent.

The delegates from the several counties in each Congressional District are requested to meet in district caucus at ten o'clock a. m., on the day of the state convention, and select officers as follows, to present to the state convention for confirmation:

One Vice President.
One Assistant Secretary.
One member of the committee on "Credentials."
One member of the committee on "Permanent Organization and Order of Business."
One member of the committee on "Resolutions."

By order of the Republican State Central Committee.

GERRIT J. DOEKAMA, Chairman.
DENNIS E. ALWARD, Secretary.

Apportionment of Delegates.

The following is the apportionment of delegates to the several counties on the basis of the total vote cast for the Republican candidate for secretary of state at the last election, viz: one delegate for each two hundred and fifty votes and one additional delegate for a moiety of one hundred and twenty-six votes or more.

THE problem of what to do with the rapidly increasing primary school fund, which, under the constitution, can only be used for the payment of teacher's wages is becoming a live question in Michigan, a vast sum accumulating in many districts, for which there is no use and laying idle. M. L. Cook of Hastings, seems to have solved the problem in a happy manner by advocating the establishment of industrial training schools, so, in the future, boys and girls will go forth to fight the battle of life with mind and hand both trained, able to conquer and hold, for the United States, the markets of the world. Michigan has from the earliest times led its sister states in educational progress and we believe a study of this proposition will again make her a pioneer in the advancement of education along this new line.

DURING the meeting of the editorial association the editor of this paper made inquiry of the members present from dry counties, as to the effect on business local option had had in their counties. Without an exception the verdict was that business was never better, bills were being paid more promptly or were not being run, and if the question were again submitted, after the year's trial, greatly increased majorities for prohibition would be the result.

The Feast of Dolls.

The feast of the dolls is the greatest of all the little Japanese girl festivals. In the storehouse, where are kept all the family treasures, there are boxes filled with dolls which have come down from the grandmothers and great-grandmothers. Each new bride takes her dolls when she goes to her father-in-law's house, and she keeps the feast each year till her eldest daughter is old enough to take it up.

VERY PROFITABLE INSTITUTE

Was Held Monday—A. P. Gray Entertaining Speaker.

The farmer's institute, held at the Court House Monday, was very well attended, the farmers of Charlevoix, realizing the value of these meetings. The state speaker, A. P. Gray of Old Mission, was thoroughly at home on the subject of fruit, and gave many good pointers on this growing industry in our county. The discussions were at all times very animated and taken all in all it was one of the best one day institutes ever held in the city.

SHOES AND STOCKINGS.

A Way by Which Their Lasting Qualities May Be Increased.

While your shoes are new or before the soles are much worn apply with a small brush several coats of linseed oil, letting it dry in well each time before reapplying. The oil acts much the same on the leather as it does on wood, and if the applications of oil are repeated frequently the sole may be preserved intact indefinitely.

It sounds unreasonable to talk of preserving hosiery to any appreciable extent, but it may be done. The oftener hosiery is washed the longer it will last. By washing I do not necessarily mean the ordinary laundry method, which is calculated to fade and rot the fiber. Really, to preserve hosiery it must have personal supervision. Stockings should never be worn longer than one day. They should then be rinsed in lukewarm water with a few drops of ammonia in it, dried and worn without ironing. This repeated wetting of the fiber keeps it so firm and strong that it will not break at the points of greatest distension. This treatment applies to cotton, lisle thread and silk hosiery. If you will treat your new hose this way from the beginning, you need darn but very little. Of course in time all hosiery, however expensive or strong, will succumb to wear, but the above method of treatment will double the lasting qualities.—New York World.

THE LETTER THAT KILLETH.

Trifling Errors That Have Had Big Results In Court.

It is on record that Lord Denman established great reputation at the bar by securing an acquittal in a famous case on the ground that a certain drm described in the indictment as "proprietors of a silk and cotton lace manufactory" should have been described as "proprietors of a silk and of a cotton lace manufactory," it having been ascertained that they made both silk and cotton lace.

In 1827 a judge quashed an inquisition for murder because it was referred to the jurors as "on their oaths" instead of "on their oath."

In yet another case the judge held that the omission of the word "ewe" was sufficient to invalidate a conviction because the word "ewe" as well as "sheep" was used in the statute.

In 1811 Lord Cardigan was indicted for firing on Captain Tucker in a duel. He was acquitted because the captain's Christian names were wrongly entered in the indictment.

In another case about the same period a legal document was invalidated because the letters A. D. were used instead of the words "In the year of our Lord." Westminster Review.

IN FIVE MINUTES

All Your Indigestion and Stomach Misery Will End.

Eat Your Favorite Foods Without Fear of Dyspepsia or an Upset Stomach Resulting.

Take your sour stomach or maybe you call it Indigestion, Dyspepsia, Gastritis or Catarrh or Stomach; it doesn't matter—take your stomach trouble right with you to your Pharmacist and ask him to open a 50-cent case of Pape's Diapepsin and let you eat one 22-grain Triangule and see if within five minutes there is left any trace of your stomach misery.

The correct name for your trouble is Food Fermentation—food souring; the Digestive organs become weak, there is lack of gastric juice; your food is only half digested, and you become affected with loss of appetite, pressure and fulness after eating, vomiting, nausea, heartburn, grippings in bowels, tenderness in the pit of stomach, bad taste in month, constipation, pain in limbs, sleeplessness, belching of gas, biliousness, sick headache, nervousness, dizziness and many other similar symptoms.

If your appetite is fickle, and nothing tempts you, or you belch gas or if you feel bloated after eating, or your food lies like a lump of lead on your stomach, you can make up your mind that at the bottom of all this there is but one cause—fermetation of undigested food.

Prove to yourself, after your next meal, that your stomach is as good as any; that there is nothing really wrong. Stop this fermentation and begin eating what you want without fear of discomfort or misery.

Almost instant relief is waiting for you. It is merely a matter of how soon you take a little Diapepsin.

As Flint is Mr. Gnudry's home city, it will be an additional pleasure for him to help win that city the pennant. —Petoskey News.

Senator Ming has introduced a bill providing that no prospective saloonist be allowed a license without first applying to the township board or municipal council setting forth the location of the building where the bar is to be kept, and also providing the recommendation of at least six reputable citizens to the effect that said applicant is a fit person to conduct such a business. The bill also provides that the local authorities shall have the right to set the limits of a saloon district and may impose a license of not more than $500 in addition to the state license of $500.

The East Jordan Board of Trade have been considering a proposition from Judge Willis Brown of Salt Lake City to establish a boy city near here during the summer months. As the proposition was too big for us to handle alone our neighboring city of Charlevoix was let in on the plan. This week Supt. H. H. Fuller of this city and Judge Mayne of Charlevoix were at Detroit in consultation with the gentleman behind the project. Just what the outcome will be is not known but it seems that the two towns could handle the proposition nicely. East Jordan Herald.

THE PARLAND-NEWHALL COMPANY

Will Appear at Charlevoix Theater Thursday January 28.

The Parland-Newhall Co., which will appear at the Charlevoix Theater, Thursday evening, January 28, as the next number of the Citizen's Lecture Course, are heralded where ever they have appeared as one the very best organizations now before the public.

The association has worked hard to give to the people of this city a series of high-class entertainments and if you wish them continued another season, now is the time to show your appreciation of their efforts. Give them a full house Thursday night.

Does Your Watch Movement

need attention? If it does not keep correct time there's something wrong. When in good running condition the balance wheel should make about 18,000 vibrations an hour and requires less than one-tenth of a drop of oil to make it operate smoothly. But it needs that little badly. The least increase of friction on the bearings alters the motion. If there is anything wrong with your watch, let me examine it. If you decide to leave it, I'll guarantee to put it in good running condition for a most reasonable price.

tor, short, thickset and surly. Asleep in his room, he had neither seen the fracas nor heard the playing. He saw instantly, however, that something unusual was forward and, blinking on the threshold, caught sight of the man who was handing the violin back to its owner. He clinched his fist, with a scowl, and started toward him.

His wife caught his arm.

"Oh, Michael, Michael!" she cried. "Say nothing, lad! Ye should have heard him play!"

"Play!" he exclaimed. "Let him go fiddle to his side partner, Prendergast, and the other riffraff he's run with the year past!" He turned blackly to Harry. "Take yourself from this house, Hugh Stires!" he said. "Whether all's true that's said of you I don't say, but you'll not come here!"

Harry had turned very white. With the spoken name—a name how familiar!—his eyes had fallen to the ring on his finger—the ring with the initials H. S. A sudden comprehension had darted to his mind. A score of circumstances that had seemed odd stood out now in a baleful light. The looks of dislike in the barroom, the attitude of the street, this angry diatribe, all smacked of acquaintance, and not alone acquaintance, but obloquy. His name was Hugh Stires! He belonged to this very town! And he was a man hated, despised, forbidden entrance to an uncouth hostelry, an unwelcome visitant even in a barroom. He turned to Felder and said in a low voice to him, not to the hotel keeper or to the roomful:

"When I entered this town today I did not know my name or that I had ever set foot in it before. I was struck by a train a month ago and remember nothing beyond that time. It seems that the town knows me better than I know myself."

He turned quietly and walked out of the door. Pavement and street were a hubbub of excited talk. The groups parted as he came out, and he passed between them with eyes straight before him.

As he turned down the street a fragment of quartz thrown with deliberate and venomous aim flew from the saloon doorway. It grazed his head, knocking off his hat.

Tom Felder had seen the flying missile, and he leaped to the center of the street with rage in his heart. "If I find out who threw that," he said, "I'll send him up for it, so help me God!"

Harry stooped and picked up his hat and as he put it on again turned a moment toward the crowd. Then he walked on down the middle of the street, his eyes glaring, his face white, into the dusky blue of the falling twilight.

Chapter 14

THE scene in the hotel office had left Jessica in a state of mental distraction in which reason was in abeyance. In the confusion she had slipped into the little sitting room unnoticed, feeling a sense almost of physical sickness, to sit in the half light, listening to the diminishing noises of the spilling crowd. She was wind swept, storm tossed, in the grip of primal emotions. The surprise had shocked her, and the strange appeal of the violin had disturbed her equipoise.

The significant words of awakening spoken in the office had come to her distinctly. In their light she had read the piteous puzzle of that gaze that had held her motionless on the balcony. Hugh had forgotten the past—all of it, his crime, his penalty. In forgetting the past he had forgotten even her, his wife. Yet in some mysterious way her face had been familiar to him. It had touched for an instant the spring of the befogged memory.

As she spurred through the transient twilight, past the selvage of the town, and into the somber mountain slope, she struck the horse sharply with her crop. He who had entrapped her, who had married her under the shadow of a criminal act, who had broken her future with his, when his whole bright life had crashed down in black ruin—could such a one look as he had looked at her? Could he make such music that had wrung her heart?

All at once the horse shied violently, almost unseating her. A man was lying by the side of the road, tossing and muttering to himself. She forced the unwilling animal closer and, leaning from the saddle, saw who it was. In a moment she was off and beside the prostrate form, a spasm of dread clutching at her throat at sight of the nerveless limbs, the chalky pallor of the brow, the fever spots in the cheeks.

A wave of pity swept over her. He was ill and alone. He could not be left there. He must have shelter. She looked fearfully about her. What could she do? In that town, whose intolerance and dislike she had seen so actively demonstrated, was there no one who would care for him? She turned her head, listening to a nearing sound—footsteps were plodding up the road. She waited, and presently a pedestrian emerged from the half dark and came toward her.

He bent over the form she showed him.

"It's Stires," he said with a chuckle. "I heard he'd come back." The chuckle turned to a cough, and he shook his head. "This is sad! You could never believe how I have labored with the boy, but"—he turned out his hands—"you see, there is the temptation. It is his unhappy weakness."

Jessica remembered the yellow, smirky face now. She had passed him on the day Tom Felder had walked with her from the Mountain Valley House; and the lawyer had told her he lived in the cabin just below the Knob, where she so often sat. She felt a quiver of repulsion.

"He is not intoxicated," she said coldly. "He is ill. You know him, then?"

"Know him!" he echoed and laughed—a dry, cackling laugh. "I ought to. And I guess he knows me." He shook the inert arm. "Get up, Hugh!" he said. "It's Prendergast!"

There flashed through her mind the phrase of the surly hotel keeper, "His side partner, Prendergast!" Could it be? Had Hugh really lived in the cabin on which she had so often peered down during those past weeks? And with this chosen crony!

She touched Prendergast's arm. "He is ill, I say," she repeated. "He must be cared for at once. Your cabin is on the hillside, isn't it?"

"His cabin," he corrected. "A rough place, but it has sheltered us both. I am but guide, philosopher and friend."

She bit her lips. "Lift him on my horse," she said. She stooped and put her hands under the twitching shoulders. "I will help you. I am quite strong."

CONTINUED NEXT WEEK.

"It's Stires."

Why Not?

Detroit brewers are willing to decrease the number of saloons in that city by 200, in order to head off the prohibition wave which threatens the existence of all the saloons. If the brewers really appreciated the sentiment against saloons in this country, they would understand that their Detroit proposition really strengthens the argument of the prohibitionists.

If the closing of 200 saloons is a good thing for society, wouldn't the closing of all the saloons in Detroit be much better?

If a saloon is a helpful factor in a community, why not increase the number by 200 rather than rob Detroit of the beneficient influence of that number?—Kansas City Star.

An Admirable Poster

Dr. A. K. Chambers, Medical Officer of Health, of Glasgow, has prepared a most excellent poster from which we quote the following:

"Alcohol is not a food.

"It is not a source of muscular vigor or dexterity, but the reverse.

"It may produce temporary exhilaration but depression soon follows.

"Its continued use impairs the productive power of the skilled artisan.

"Its continued use, whether in the form of beer, wine, or spirits, even though never to the extent of producing drunkenness, results in chronic poisoning.

"It weakens the natural forces which resist disease.

"It increases the risk of consumption.

"It increases liability to disease, adds to its severity, and retards recovery.

"It perverts the moral nature, affects the judgment, and impairs the memory.

"It deadens sensibility to miserable surroundings, and destroys all desire for improvement.

It is increasing the proportion of men and women who are being confined in lunatic asylum.

"It shortens life. The death rate of abstainers is little more than half that of the whole male population living between the ages of 25 and 65."

These statements were recently submitted to parliament by the committee on Physical Deterioration.

Quite Accurate.

A two foot rule was given to a laborer in a shipyard to measure an iron plate. The laborer, not being well up in the use of the rule, after spending a considerable time over his task, returned. "Now," asked the plater, "what size is the plate?"

"Well," replied the man, with a grin of satisfaction, "it's the size of your rule, and two thumbs over, with this piece of brick, and this trifle of pantile, the breadth of my hand, and my arm from here to there, har a finger."—Omaha World-Herald.

Courier Grange Column

Five Hundred Charlevoix County Patrons Will go to Traverse City in 1909

South Arm Grange No. 815.

South Arm Grange met Friday evening, January 22. This was in place of our regular meeting, but no business was transacted, the evening being given over to the installation of officers by Brother Knudsen of Ironton grange.

After installation we listened to an account of the proceedings of the state grange, which was read by Brother John Knudsen, and Brother Peter Knudsen. Supper was then served to about 60 persons. Everybody did justice to the good things, several old members trying to break some long standing records. After playing games for some time we dispersed.

Grange meets again in two weeks. Practice meeting of the degree team next Saturday evening, January 30.

Maple Grove Grange No. 1255.

Maple Grove Grange opened in regular session January 16 with Worthy Master E. E. Strond in the chair.

Three applications were received and two candidates were initiated into the first and second degrees. Motion was made to have a social, date and kind to be left to the committee to decide upon.

Members present 30.—receipts of evening $5.—Grange closed in due form to meet again February 2.

DEFERRED NEWS.

Maple Grove Grange 1253 met in regular session January 5, Worthy Master A. Wooden in the chair. Brother S. Godbold installed the following officers for the ensuing year:

Master—E. E. Strond.
Overseer—F. J. Bartholomew.
Lecturer—Wert Smith.
Steward—Robert Minier.
Asst. Steward—Ney Smith.
Chaplain—Lillian—Bartholomew.
Treasurer—Platt Webster.
Secretary—David Smith.
Gatekeeper—Harry Gilbert.
Ceres—Sue Bain.
Pomona—Mrs. H. Gilbert.
Flora—Mayme Scroggie.
L. A. S.—Mrs. E. E. Strond.
Insurance Director—H. Tillotson.

Marion Center Grange No. 956.

Marion Center Grange met in regular session January 20, with all officers present. After the usual order of business, recess was declared for the purpose of arranging for the installing of officers.

After recess Brother Godbold, assisted by Sister Willis, installed the following officers:

Master—E. B. Ward.
Overseer—William Pankett.
Steward—James Cook.
Lecturer—William Withers.
Chaplain—Mrs. Henry Black.
Asst. Steward—Wm. Meggison.
Secretary—George Meggison.
Treasurer—Henry Black, Sr.
L. A. S.—Rachael Meggison.
Ceres—Mary Pankett.
Pomona—Edith Meggison.
Flora—Maud Cook.

The lecturer then gave a good program and Brother Godbold gave an excellent report of the state grange meeting, for which a rising vote of thanks was given. Several of the visiting members gave short speeches, there being 18 visiting members present and over 40 members, the total attendance being 60. The ladies invited all present to the basement, where the spread was very gratifying.

Grange closed in form to meet again in two weeks.

Wilson Grange No. 719

Wilson Grange met in regular session January 23, with an attendance of about 30 members and 5 visitors.

After the business session, in which preparations were made to accommodate a large Pomona meeting in February, and in which one candidate was instructed in the third and fourth degrees, Brother Peter Knudson of Ironton, installed a full quota of officers as heretofore published in this column. Brother Knudson also read a very concise and comprehensive report of the proceedings of state grange.

A very excellent program was followed by a very much more excellent supper and it was a late hour when the "glims were doused" in Wilson grange hall.

Pomona will meet with us February 11, and we hope it will be the largest Pomona meeting of the year. We urgently invite all patrons to come and enjoy the good things that are being prepared both for the physical and intellectual man.

The correspondent neglected to make any report of last meeting. The chief thing of interest was an address for the prohibition question followed by a very lively, but one sided discussion on the same. Wilson grange is almost unanimously in favor of prohibition, and we are negotiating with leaders of the movement in an effort toward having the campaign carried into the farming districts.

Wilson grange is going to send, "To Traverse next December, for every patron on our roll three quarters of one member."

Don't forget Pomona February 11th.

Ironton Grange No. 707.

Ironton grange held an open meeting January 5, for installation officers. Brother Peter Knudsen, our state delegate, installing officer. Then we got the new annual word, meeting was then closed with a song. After meeting refreshments were served. Brother John Knudsen then announced there would be a box social the following Friday night.

Our next meeting was held January 19, with a good attendance, and one visitor from South Arm.

The Lecturer's program opened with a song by Brother H. E. Coblentz, which interested and pleased the members very much. Brother Peter Knudsen then gave the report of the State Grange. Next the steward spoke of our duties as officers, then followed a song by John Knudsen and a reading by Will Walker. Most of the members then gave a quotation which closed the lecturer's program.

The follow committees were then appointed: Finance Committee, Ole Lyngklip, Peter Nasson and Frank Hammond. The Executive Committee, Peter Knudsen, Harry Coblentz, and Everett Orvis. The Woman's Work Committee, Mrs. Harry Mitchell, Jennie Knudsen, and Mrs. Lyngklip.

The grange then closed with song to meet again in two weeks.

Resolution, It is with deep sorrow and regret we have to record the sudden removal from our midst of Brother Fred Lyngklip. "He was a true Granger." And we the officers and members of Ironton Grange 707 P. of H. extend our heartfelt sympathy to Sister Karen Lyngklip and her family in their great loss."

It was further resolved that our charter should be craped for 30 days.

Woman's World

THE LATEST RECRUIT.

Mme. Melba, the Famous Singer, Joins Ranks of Suffragettes.

Mme. Nellie Melba is the last distinguished recruit to the suffragette army. The famous singer became enthusiastic over the cause at the great rally of the woman's rights party held recently at Carnegie hall, New York city. At this meeting Mrs. Philip Snowden of England made a wonderful and rousing speech that completely won over Mme. Melba to the cause. Mrs. George Gould and Mrs. Clarence Mackay both figured prominently in the movement.

Mme. Melba is a very interesting personality aside from her great gift of song. She is one of the richest prima donnas—probably the richest, barring Patti—in the world. Every time she sings at the Manhattan Opera House, New York, Mme. Melba receives $4,000. The highest price ever paid a singer for a single performance was given this songstress in her native city of Melbourne, Australia, the sum being $13,000.

Mme. Melba's jewels alone are worth a king's ransom, and she is the owner of a superb pearl necklace that belonged to Marie Antoinette. This fortunate lady is very generous, and one of her pleasures in life is helping struggling genius, especially those endowed with musical talents. Mme. Melba has a magnificent home in London, and for nine weeks when this establishment was open recently her secretary, Miss Murphy, said the expenses were $50,000. During the opera season in America it costs the diva $1,000 a week to run her apartment. Her worst personal extravagances are flowers and special messengers. Nothing very alarmingly rash in this expenditure, certainly. Mme. Melba, as everybody knows, owes her professional name to the happy inspiration of her teacher, Mme. Marchesi. When the training of her beautiful voice was reaching completion, a question arose as to the name under which the young Australian was to make her debut. Nellie Mitchell, her maiden name, or Mrs. Armstrong, her married appellation, being obviously impossible for a prima donna. After various suggestions had been considered and dismissed Mme. Marchesi exclaimed: "Why not pay a compliment to your native city, Melbourne, by calling yourself after it? Melba would make a capital name." The proposal was adopted.

They Camp Out to Grow Skinny.

But, oh, how many women suffer to follow the directoire fashion! "Reduction" classes now are as common in social circles as classes in bridge. Certain teachers take groups of women into the Adirondacks in relays of twenty for a course of six weeks. Those who wish to don the sheath gown when the season opens are getting rid of flesh at the rate of eight or ten pounds a week. They live in a lodge, and their day begins at 7 a. m., when they have black coffee, black bread and a salad or fruit. With knapsacks on backs they walk and climb as rapidly as possible until noon, when they again eat a meager cold luncheon. Then they rest for two hours and walk again until 6. The evening meal is hearty, but devoid of sweet or fattening things. In the evening those who are in earnest go through additional physical exercises. All retire at 10. Hundreds of fashionable women are going through this work. They even chop wood, skip rope and jump over chairs and boxes. They seem to think the sheath gown worth the pains taken to fit oneself for wearing it.

To Improve the Mouth.

All of us cannot have good looking mouths, but we could make more of what nature gave us than we do.

The expression of the mouth can be utterly changed by mannerisms which if taken in time can be easily overcome.

Mothers can play an important part in mouth formation. Children should not be allowed to form habits that ruin the contour of the lips.

The childish trick of holding the lips apart causes them to sag loosely and in time gives a vacant look to the face. Often this habit is formed through imperfect breathing, and it can be caused by adenoids or slight catarrh.

Another bad habit for the mouth is a fretful look that so often is seen in children. The drooping corners are hard to raise in later years, but whenever noticed in little ones the habit should be corrected.

Biting the lips is even worse, as it soon thickens them and makes them coarse looking as well as subjects them easily to chapping. This ugly trick can often be overcome in children by rubbing the lips with something bitter, as aloes.

Sucking the thumb or fingers is even more fatal for a beautiful mouth, and mothers should do everything to overcome this fault.

Sometimes children make ugly faces, and because older people laugh they keep it up until the mouth is twisted from its shape or the disfiguring motions have become involuntary.

Too great care cannot be taken of the first teeth. If they are neglected the second teeth invariably come in badly, and the good shape of the mouth is ruined.

A Dresden Shepherders Debutante.

Naturally, with so many "lords" blooming in social centers, "lady" gowns are coming from Paris and elsewhere. Young Mrs. Joseph Leiter has a pretty young sister among the debutantes of Washington. The girl is Dorothy Williams, One of the gowns that Mrs. Joe brought over for her sister is so pretty that other girls may feel justified in using it for a hint. The skirt is of flowered net over the palest sort of soft silk, the shade known as peachbloom, and the lines are long and clinging. Around the decollete bodice is a trimming of pink satin formed into tiny moss rosebuds placed closely together. The same motive is seen on the high satin girdle. At the end of the streamers are loops or rosebuds hanging after the manner of lilies of the valley in bridal bouquets. Satin bands for the hair, pink satin slippers and a great fan made of rosebud satin make the girl who wears the costume look as if she had stepped out of a group of Dresden shepherdesses.

Shun the "Misunderstood" Man.

To be a soul mate means to feel the highest and purest kind of love a love all unselfish and free from all that is base. But there is nothing high or pure in the friendship of the man who urges you to defy the laws of convention.

Never listen to the man who comes whining to you that you "understand him so much better than his wife does."

The chances are that his unfortunate wife understands him only too well and has a thorough contempt for him.

Somewhere in the world you probably have a soul mate, and he is to be hoped that he will find you, but if he comes in the guise of a married man send him about his business. Do not allow yourself to become "friends" with him. Such friendship is never desirable.

Young Woman a Leading Economist.

At twenty-four years Anna Pritchett of Louisville will have the distinction of occupying the chair of economics in Wellesley. She went to Wellesley last fall and is the youngest professor in the history of the college. She also ranks with the youngest successful scholars who ever have held so important a post, and leading experts in economics class her as a brilliant woman. She has surpassed all students with whom she has studied. Her election to the chair in Wellesley is due to merit alone and is another proof that in the realm of higher scholarship women have the ability to stand on a common footing with men.

Successful Tea Room.

The first tea room in Los Angeles was opened something less than a year ago by two young college women, Miss Mildred Morris of Columbia and Miss Harriet Morris of Smith. In the first six months they had more than 15,000 paying customers. They have had to enlarge their quarters and have added to their business in several ways.

In Case of Fire.

If the alcohol lamp under the chafing dish comes to grief and sets the table cover on fire, as so frequently happens, suffocate the flames by covering them with flour. This is better than water or blankets or any of the other linens seized upon to extinguish a sudden fire and not only quicker but less injurious than water.

SHAKE IT IN BOTTLE

Noted Authority Gives a Simple Prescription.

Tells the Readers of This Paper How to Prepare the Mixture at Home and Other Advice.

Now is the time when the doctor gets busy, and the patent medicine manufacturers reap the harvest, unless great care is taken to dress warmly and keep the feet dry. This is the advice of an old eminent authority, who says that Rheumatism and Kidney trouble weather is here, and also tells what to do in case of an attack.

Get from any good prescription pharmacy one-half ounce Fluid Extract Dandelion, one ounce Compound Kargon, three ounces Compound Syrup Sarsaparilla. Mix by shaking in a bottle and take a teaspoonful after meals and at bedtime.

Just try this simple home-made mixture at the first sign of Rheumatism, or if your back aches or you feel that the kidneys are not acting just right. This is said to be a splendid kidney regulator, and almost certain remedy for all forms of Rheumatism, which is caused by uric acid in the blood, which the kidneys fail to filter out. Any one can easily prepare this at home and at small cost.

Druggists in this town and vicinity, when shown the prescription, stated that they can either supply these ingredients, or, if your readers prefer, they will compound the mixture for them.

"Seventy-five per cent of all crimes, 35 per cent of the poverty and 65 per cent of the juvenile delinquency cases in the United States are caused by liquor."

In prohibition states three times as many homes have been bought by workingmen within the past year as during any year preceding the introduction of prohibition; in these states divorce cases are fewer, churches are more thriving and the number of children placed in orphan asylums is constantly on the decrease."

"The saloon is a substitute for family ties, home, education, art, literature, science and decency; all that is right. What we need is not a substitute for the saloon, but common sense."

Pleasant to Take

Young people have a proverbial disregard for extra wraps or rubbers, hence many of them have a cough most of the time.

This isn't right. Because the superabundant vitality of youth will throw off diseases which would kill older people, is no reason that coughs and colds among children should be neglected. The boy or girl who contracts a cough needs and should be given it without delay. This medicine is pleasant to take and is guaranteed to break up at once and ultimately cure the most stubborn cough. Mothers write us grateful letters, telling of the wonderful properties of this Syrup. It is a splendid medicine—soothing and healing to young and old. Try it! Large bottles only 50c.

Rexall
Cherry Juice Cough Syrup

ANNUAL ROUND-UP FARMERS' INSTITUTE

Held at East Jordan Last Week—Great Success.

OLD OFFICERS WERE ALL RE-ELECTED

Meeting Next Year Will be Held at Charlevoix.

Program as Advertised Carried Out in Full Professor Ketchum of Hastings Taking Professor Grawn's Place.

The Farmer's Institute held at East Jordan last week Tuesday and Wednesday, was an interesting and educational meeting. The farmers were out in good numbers but the citizens of East Jordan seemed to realize only at the closing session that there was anything of interest going on. The Institute opened with Pres., Wm. Mears of Boyne Falls, Jno. A. Newville sec'y and H. L. Olney local manager, in their respective places. The first subject "Sandy Loams, how to handle them" by A. P. Gray of Traverse City, was full of foterest and the audience showed they were interested. He brought in and discussed the subject of "Fertilizers, commercial and home made" in the same speech. He likened the commercial to baby food, it helped to start the seed but the home product was the stand by. Fertility is one of the great objects of farming.

"Corn Culture" was the next subject and this was handled very ably and interestingly by A. L. Hopkins of Bear Lake. He was alive to his subject and had a faculty of giving it out to his hearers, as he did on other subjects during the institute. He would get your attention so close, and then in a few minutes bring laughter that would let up the strain a little. He said raising beans takes 47 per cent of the fertility from the ground, potatoes six per cent, 25 bushel of beans taking more fertility than 200 bushel potatoes. He gave a number of good suggestions as to raising these as well as corn, the subject he was handling.

Prof. Ketchum of Hastings followed with the subject, "Teaching Agriculture in schools, more particularly in the rural schools," to keep the boys and girls in touch with the farm, because farming has become a scientific subject in all its parts. He held the audience with his inspiration on the subject, and left a lasting and helpful impression, closing with a short poem "My Work" by Henry Van Dyke.

The evening session opened with a few fitting remarks by the president and then A. P. Gray read a paper on "Making the Boy Worth his Weight in Gold." He told how he came to take that subject and make a study of it, quoting from Emerson, "To make a good man we should begin two hundred years before he was born." Cultivate virtue by leading him in the right. Don't prohibit anything until you are obliged to, for as soon as you begin to prohibit they begin to do wrong. It's much better to allure them than to drive. Education does not end with the individual, but every one educated helps others. Uneducated are a detriment to the community. Let the boy once distrust the love and tenderness of his parents, and the last result of his yearning affection, as far as the world goes—is utterly gone. He is on the sure road to a bitter fate. His heart will take on a hard iron covering that will flash out plenty of fire lo his after contact with the world, but it will never, never melt. It was a grand subject and ably handled.

"Good Roads" was discussed by R. A. Brintnell, and he ought to be interested—and is—as he uses the highway freely in carrying Uncle Sam's treasures—the mail. Good roads are something everbody uses. The road laws of Michigon are far in advance of auy other atote. Inefficiency and short sightedness is the reason the laws are better than the roads. The non-enforcement of the law is the fact that the American people put too much politics in it. Good roads are essential to good farms. Discussion by Mr. Hopkins of Bear Lake helped to corrobrate what the speaker said and the subject was an exceedingly interesting feature of the evening.

"The American Schools" by Prof. Ketchum of Hastings, was then taken into consideration and this subject is always of interest to all, and he made it especially so. He gave a few statistics to open with. It costs four hundred million dollars for the nation and ten million for state to run the schools. He paid a glowing tribute to our university and to the American teachers for the good habits, morals, skill, knowledge and patriotism they teach. His closing thought was let us stand by the flag. He recited a poem "Life's Mission."

WILL MEET NEXT TUESDAY

The Board of Supervisors in Adjourned Session.

Next Tuesday the board of supervisors will meet in adjourned session. Several important matters were left over from the last session and will be acted upon at this time.

Probably the most interest will be centered in the petitions for a special election for the submission of the local option question, although the matter of changing the boundaries of the differeot townships and the fixing of the salary of the sheriff are very important questions which will come before the board.

COMPROMISE MEASURES

Are Introduced in the House of Representatives.

By Request of the Brewery Interests by Representative Ormsbee.

The brewery interests of the state have caused some compromise liquor measures to be introduced in the house. In them the liquor men are offering something which they hope will satisfy a good many of those who believe the liquor laws should be changed. The bills were introduced by Representative Ormsbee of Flint, who frankly confessed he didn't know much about them, suspected they originated from the liquor interests side of the fight and was merely introducing them by request. The liquor regulation bill is a substitute for the general liquor law of the state and in addition to the re-enactment of certain of its clauses and sections and the introdction of the new features mentioned, calls for the repeal of the old law.

Following is a synopsis of the brewing bills:

Extends local option to cities, villages and townships.

Petitions calling local elections must be signed in election booths under supervision of election inspectors.

Power to search places where it is suspected that liquor is illegally sold conferred.

More severe penalties than in present local option law.

Retail saloons are to be licensed, not taxed, so as to better regulate them.

Satoonkeeper must be a citizen. Two convictions forever disbars him from entering the liquor business in Michigan.

All licenses for one year, expiring April 30, unless soonar revoked.

Penalties for violation, geoerally speaking are more severe than in present laws.

Home rule provided by allowing local boards to regulate opening and closing hours.

No saloon in townships, village or city with less than five hundred people unless there when act takes effect, and no saloon can be forced in district with less than one thousand people. Under no circumstances can licenses be granted for more than one saloon to 500 people.

No new saloon within 300 feet of church or school house.

No liquor signs on saloon.

A RADICAL CHANGE

Purposed Change of Law in Regard to Rural Schools.

Advocated by State Superintendent Wright—Unit System.

A bill of vital concern to every rural school district in the state will be introduced early in the session. It is a bill of the state superintendent of public instruction to do away with all school boards and create one board in all townships to govern all the schools in a township.

It is the so-called township unit system. Superintendent Wright, of the educational department, has this to say of the system:

"Of the 713,080 children of school age in the state nearly one-half live on farms. The country school as now organized does not offer to children the advantage of city and village schools. The district system was founded a good many years ago, and while it may have been wise and effective far our forefathers, it is neither wise nor effective in this generation.

"In the older farming communities the multiplication of districts and the changes that have come about through time in the number of children in the district have given rise to some peculiar conditions. There are several districts in the state with only two children of school age on the census list; many with three, four and five each; and in Oakland county there is one district in which there is not a single child of school age. In the township of Cambria, six miles square, in Hillsdale county, there are 11 school districts and ten one-room country schools.

"In the state there are more than 1,000 districts out of the total 7,261 which have 15 children of school age on the census list. There is, then, a large fraction of the total number of school children in the state who do not have as good school advantages as do the others. That is to say, children living in the country do not have equal school opportunities with those living in the city.

"Then, too, country people pay large sums for tuition. For instance, in Kalamazoo county last year the county people paid nearly $3,000 in tuition to cities.

"These are some of the advantages which came with the township unit system: First, better and more economical business administration; second, high school privileges near at home; third, better teachers, because there would be fewer and, therefore, better; fourth, expert supervision; fifth, the elimination of small weak schools and the bringing together of the children in centers."

COURT PROCEEDINGS

Boyne City Couple Are Convicted of Adultery.

Case of People vs. Chaloupka on Trial—Others Matters.

Circuit Court assembled in regular February session Monday. In the afternoon the case of the people vs. Silvy A. Crocker and Martha Leubke, adultery, was tried, Hon. L. F. Knowles appearing for the defense and Prosecutor Nicholas, for the people. A verdict of guilty was brought in by the jury.

Tuesday the case of the people vs Frank Chaloupka, violation of the liquor law, was taken up, nearly all day being consumed in securing a jury. A. L. Fitch represents the people as special prosecuting attorney, A. H. Nicholas appearing in behalf of the defendant. Every phase of the case is being hotly contested and the large crowd present shows the interest taken in the outcome. The following cases have been disposed of.

People vs. Mr. and Mrs. Eli Clark, continued and prisoners were let go on their own regonizance.

TO STOP LIQUOR SHIPMENT

New Bill Protects "Dry" Territory All Over United States.

Representative Langley of Kentucky, will introduce in congress Monday, the inter-state liquor shipment bill prepared by the Anti-Saloon League of America, to obviate the objection of unconstitutionality urged against the Littlefield bill.

The objection to the Littlefield bill was that it made interstate shipments of liquor subject to state laws immediately upon crossing the boundary, which was claimed by its opponents to be an attempted delegation of congressional power, and therefore unconstitutional.

The new measure provides for direct exercise of congressional power by itself prohibiting the shipment or transportation of liquor to any state, territory or district of the United States where such shipment could not legally be made within that district. It is designed to protect both prohibition states and dry territory within local option states.

IN EMMET COUNTY

Local Option and Anti-Saloon Forces Organize for the Fight.

Senator Dickinson the Principal Speaker at Meeting Held Monday.

The anti-saloon league and local option forces of Emmet county held an all day session at the First M. E. church in Petoskey Monday, and many of the more prominent workers from over the county were present and the forenoon was taken up with committee work and election of officers.

The main event of the afternoon was a short address by State Senator Dickinson of Eaton county, father of the Dickinson bill, otherwise known as the search and seizure bill now before the legislature. Mr. Dickinson was introduced to the audience of more than fifty people as the "mouthpiece of the governor."

The most distinctive thing about Senator Dickinson is his extreme mildness of manner and speech, and the difference between himself and other representatives of the cause who have been here, and his address, while full of matter and good logic, was absolutely free from billingsgate or abuse of any kind, and at the outset, he advised his hearers to absolutely refrain from abuse in their campaign, saying that if they could not bring argument, to at least eschew abuse, for they were fighting a cause, not men.

He also advised them to keep the question as far as possible out of the spring political election so far as it might become an issue between candidates, for every man has his friends and by making this question an issue in politics, it might lose the cause a vote.

He told his hearers that there was no law on the statute books of Michigan, and that it would be unconstitutional to try to make any law that would prohibit people from bringing liquors into the state for their own use, and there was no use talking on that line.

Mr. Dickinson made a favorable impression on all who heard him for his fairness and mildness.

CHILD BURNED AT GAYLORD

Mother Seriously Injured While Attempting Its Rescue.

In a fire which destroyed the home of Mr. and Mrs. Ernest Wannga Monday night a daughter of the couple, six years old, was burned to death. The parents and two other children escaped.

Mrs. Wannga was awakened by the crying of one of the children and discovered that the interior of the house was ablaze. Escape by the door was impossible so her husband raised a window on the second floor and leaped to the ground while his wife remained to rescue the children. Two of the children were passed out to him, but the third could not be reached. Mrs. Wannga was terribly burned before the children, who were sleeping in a room separate from their parents, were rescued, and may not survive. She was literally roasted from her waist to her shoulders and is inconsolable over the loss of the little girl.

TO BE VOTED UPON IN APRIL

The County Road System Will be Submitted.

DOES CHARLEVOIX COUNTY WANT IT

Means a Radical Change in the Highway System.

Courier Invites a Discussion of the Question—Paper Read at Grand Traverse Farmer's Institute.

A fact which must not be lost sight of in the greater interest which has been aroused by the probable submission of the local option question to this county next April is the fact that at its October session the board of supervisors voted to submit to the people the question of the adoption of County road system, being compelled to do so by the required number of petitions being filed. As this is a question of vast importance to the tax payers of the county we desire to have both sides fairly represented and invite communications on the subject. To show what the law contemplates we publish, in this issue a paper read at the Grand Traverse county farmer's institute, where a vote will also be had next spring, by Hon. D. H. McMullin, an advocate of the system, and hope to publish something on the other side next week.

The board, however, by a nearly unanimous vote expressed their belief and hope that the proposition would fail to carry. As representatives of the people of the various townships and wards they probably expressed the sentiments of their constituents, the filing of the petitions however would indicate that there is either a desire for the system, or else the petitions were signed without due consideration.

"The county road system which will be submitted to the people of Grand Traverse county next April calls for careful consideration. No one should vote on this question without giving in the careful consideration that a move of the kind demands.

"It seems to be the history of this movement for better roads, that in counties where the county road system has been adopted the farmers have generally been no favorable to such system, while the people of the city have voted for the change. But wherever the system has been in operation long enough to give results there are not more enthusiastic admirers of its workings than those same farmers who were opposed to the adoption.

"If next April a majority of the votes cast are favorable to the adoption of the county road system the board of supervisors must determine how many commissioners there will be, but not more than three. It will then become the duty of the board of supervisors to appoint commissioners to hold office, until the following April, when their successors will be elected.

"According to the county road law the commissioners must meet before the first day of October and outline a plan for the succeeding years, said plans being subject to the approval of the board of supervisors. If the recommendations of the commissioners are not satisfactory to the supervisors, the supervisors have power to veto such recommendations. Thus it is that the commissioners outline a course satisfactory to the supervisors or fail to get the money asked for. If the recommendations of the commissioners are satisfactory to the supervisors then the tax asked for is spread, but this tax cannot be in excess to two mills on the dollar of assessed valuation.

"Brother farmer it looks to me as if this county road system is a good proposition for the people of the county. The incorporated cities and villages pay about 34 per cent of the total of county tax and the townships about 66 per cent. As individuals, nearly every one of us would jump at the chance of playing a game where we got a dollar for each 66 cents invested. If then it is a good thing for an individual, why not for the people of the country?"

The Jig Saw Puzzle is the latest craze. Try this one. Mount the accompanying picture on thick brown paper, cardboard or a thin piece of wood, carefully cut out the pieces with a pair of shears in case the mount is of paper or with a jig saw in case the mount is of wood, and fit the pieces together. You will then discover what a joyous thing it is to be lionized in darkest Africa.

Echoes from the Two Heart.

The light snow is making the wolves ravenous as the deer have not gone into yards yet, but are running at large.

The night of the sixteenth a number of them came very close to camp. In the morning, Billy Dougherty examined the tracks and says he is sure they are the same wolves that put Joe Shores up a pine stub on his way out to Newberry last winter. They headed southeast when they left and no doubt will be heard of in the vicinity of Bay Springs. Hunters say that all the wolves are heading in that direction.

MISERY IN STOMACH

And Indigestion Vanishes Five Minutes Later.

Eat Your Favorite Foods Without Fear of Dyspepsia or an Upset Stomach Resulting.

Why not start now—today, and forever rid yourself of Stomach trouble and indigestion? A dieted stomach gets the blues and grumbles. Give it a good eat, then take Pape's Diapepsin to start the digestive juices working. There will be no dyspepsia or belching of Gas or eructations of undigestive food; no feeling like a lump of lead in the stomach or heartburn, sick headache and Dizziness, and your food will not ferment and poison your breath with nauseous odors.

Pape's Diapepsin costs only 50 cents for a large case at any drug store here, and will relieve the most obstinate case of Indigestion and Upset Stomach in five minutes.

There is nothing else better to take Gas from Stomach and cleanse the stomach and intestines, and besides, one triangule will digest and prepare for assimiliation into the blood all your food the same as a sound, healthy stomach would do it.

When Diapepsin works, your stomach rests, gets itself in order, cleans up and then you feel like eating when you come to the table, and what you eat will do you good.

Absolute relief from all Stomach Misery is waiting for you as soon as you decide to begin taking Diapepsin. Tell your druggist that you want Pape's Diapepsin, because you want to be thoroughly cured of indigestion.

Power of a King.

The king of England possesses great power theoretically. Strictly and legally speaking, the whole of the mineral wealth of the empire is his majesty's property, as is also, for that matter, every acre of ground that covers and contains it. He could empty every jail in Britain by a stroke of his pen and keep all empty so long as he chose to go on exercising to the full his prerogative of pardon. A word from him and the present parliament would cease to be. It is as the supreme head of the navy and army, however, that his autocratic power is most apparent. He can order one or both to make war. He can dress his soldiers and his sailors as he pleases, arm them how he likes. He could disband every regiment and send to the scrap heap every ship. Sometimes, too, he wields this power up to a certain point. He abolished, for instance, the office of commander in chief. By the simple expedient of a royal warrant he instituted a sweeping reformation in the war office. Queen Victoria by a like method abolished the sale and purchase of officers' commissions, an even more drastic step.

A CLASH WITH TURNER.

Retort of the Print Seller Who Longed to See the Artist.

Turner, happening one day to pass a printshop, noticed in the window a copy of one of the engravings from his famous "Liber Studiorum." The print was in a very dirty, ragged state. Entering the shop, Turner asked to see the master and when the man came forward proceeded at once to blame him in no measured terms for having neglected so valuable a print and for having allowed it to become so disfigured. The man protested that it was no fault of his, as he did but offer the engraving for sale in the same state in which he had bought it from some other dealer.

This did not satisfy Turner, however, and he and the man continued arguing for some time.

At last the print seller lost all patience.

"Perhaps, sir," he said, "when you have quite finished what you have to say you will kindly tell me what you have to do with this engraving and what business is it of yours whether the print is clean or dirty."

"This is what I have to do with it," answered the enraged artist—"it was I who drew the original of that print. My name is Turner, and I did every line of that engraving with my own hand. Now do you wonder that I am angry at seeing my work in so disgraceful a state?"

"Indeed, sir!" replied the print seller. "So you are the great artist himself! All my life long it has been my wish that I might some day have the good fortune to see Mr. Turner. Now that I have seen him I sincerely hope that I may never see him again."

REGULATING BALLOONS.

France Made the First Laws Governing Aerial Traffic.

In 1871, when French balloons from beleaguered Paris were dropping on the "sacred soil" of Prussia, a royal decree declared them confiscate as contraband of war. And on the conclusion of peace a measure was passed through the German reichstag which forbade under penalty of death any future similar aerial violation of German territory during time of war.

So long ago as 1830, again, balloon ascents were made illegal in Turkey, so far as regards Constantinople and forty miles around, and in 1872 the prohibition was extended to include the entire Turkish empire. To France, however, belongs the distinction of having made the first laws for the regulation of aerial traffic. In 1784 it was solemnly decreed that nobody should be permitted to go up in a balloon "or any other kind of aerostatic machine" which was worked by burning spirits of wine or any other means of making a fire.

Later, in 1811, it was enacted in France that henceforth no balloon, whether free or captive, should be permitted to ascend with any species of furnace or stove, that no one should be allowed to ascend in a balloon unless he carried a parachute and that ascents were not to be begun later than one hour before sunset nor earlier than an hour after sunrise. Furthermore, no ascents whatever were to be undertaken during the garnering of the harvest nor for six weeks prior thereto.

The First New Woman.

"We new women are really not so new as we think we are," said one of them. "In the thirteenth century there were lots of us. Can anything 700 years old be new? The University of Bologna had for professor of jurisprudence Novella d'Andria. She was no more new than beautiful. Her charms were so overpowering that the trustees made her lecture behind a curtain. When she lectured openly the students, their minds wholly occupied with her beauty, could not attend to what she said. Madonna Manzolina was professor of anatomy, Matilda Tromboni taught languages and Marie Magnosi held the chair of mathematics. This university was by no means a second rate one. On the contrary, it was perhaps the leading university of Europe. It had 10,000 students."

Called For the Author.

The Friars, an organization of theatrical press agents, dined a manager more conspicuous for his shrewdness than for his culture. When the menu had been properly discussed the guest of honor amazed his hosts by making a speech notable not only for its grace and wit, but for some show of erudition. He sat down at last amid loud applause, when Augustus Thomas, at the same time joining the handclapping, shouted: "Author! Author!"—New York Tribune.

Emotional England.

Ours is a nation of sentiment. We are probably more sentimental in a tearful way than any other country in Europe. The strongest man in England can weep when he hears a hymn that used to be played on the organ of the village church when he was a boy, but there is not much depth in the tears. They are not very salt.—London Ladies' Field.

A True Heroine.

"What is your idea of a heroine, John?" asked the wife of his bosom as she looked up from the novel she was reading.

"A heroine, my dear," answered John, "is a woman who could talk back, but doesn't."—Chicago News.

SICK PEOPLE
SHOULD INVESTIGATE

I Know the Diseases of Both Sexes Like an Open Book. I have Been Curing Them for 49 Years. In fact, My Entire Life Has Been Devoted to Curing Where Others Have Failed.

I Have Changed Hundreds Upon Hundreds of Nervous Wrecks Into Fine, Strong Men and Women. I Accept No Case I Cannot Cure.

I ESPECIALLY invite all discouraged and dissatisfied ones who have been treated without a cure to write me fully and frankly about their case. It will cost you nothing to write me, and I will gladly tell you your condition, truthfully, honestly—accepting no case that I cannot cure—holding out no false promises. I have spent my whole life in the study and cure of chronic diseases, and my study and investigation have been blessed by the discovery of many new and marvelous methods of treating disease. Forty-nine years ago I graduated from the Western Homeopathic Medical College of Cleveland, O., for two years, Head Physician at the Alma Sanitarium, Alma, Mich. I have spent many long years as a specialist, treating chronic diseases of all kinds with wonderful success, and am now owner of one of the largest sanitariums in the country, giving my entire time to the treatment of Nervous Diseases of both sexes. I cure the worst forms of Epilepsy, St. Vitus Dance, Paralysis, etc.

Dr. Andrew B. Spinney
Specialist in Chronic Diseases

My long experience in diagnosing cases and my understandings of the different diseases that I treat enable me in almost every case to prescribe by mail a perfect, thorough cure. All correspondence in plain envelopes and sacredly confidential.

I CURE NERVOUS TROUBLES—Wasting Away, Loss of Vitality in Both Sexes. Whether from excesses or overwork, I promptly and positively cure, no matter of how long standing.

I CURE BLOOD POISON—I cure Blood Poison in the first, second and third stages—driving the poison from the system, the taint from the blood; curing pimples, copper spots, sores in the mouth, tumors and ulcers.

I CURE FITS—Epilepsy, St. Vitus Dance, Paralysis, etc., by striking direct at the cause, restoring the diseased nerves to perfect health.

I CURE PILES—in 30 days to stay cured and to never return.

I CURE CONSUMPTION, the Great White Plague, in the first and second stages. Have made a special study of this disease for fifty years. Have cured hundreds given up by home Doctors. Those I cannot treat at home by seeing or by mail, I will take to my Sanitarium, where best of medical skill, nursing and private rooms are given, for Ten Dollars a week.

I GUARANTEE TO CURE, to stay cured, liquor, morphine, cocaine, nicotine or cigarette habits. Most cases treated at home.

Call and see me or write to either Sanitarium as below.

No matter what disease you are suffering from, write me fully today. I will answer at once and my advice, which costs you nothing, may be worth hundreds of dollars—life itself—to you. If I cannot cure you I will tell you so. WRITE TODAY.

Faithfully yours,

CHAPTER XIV—Continued.

With her aid he lifted the swaying form on to the saddle and supported it, while Jessica led the way.

"Here is the cutoff," he said presently. "Ah, you know it!" for she had turned into the side path that led along the hill, under the gray, snake-like flume—the shortest route to the grassy shelf on which the cabin stood.

The byway was steep and rugged, and rhododendron clumps caught at her ankles, and once she heard a snake slip over the dry rustle of leaves, but she went on rapidly, dragging at the bridle, turning back now and then anxiously to urge the horse to greater speed. She scarcely heard the offensively honeyed compliments which Prendergast offered to her courage.

It seemed an eternity they climbed. In reality it was scarcely twenty minutes before they reached the grassy knoll and the cabin, whose crazy swinging door stood wide to the night air. She tied the horse, went in and at Prendergast's direction found matches and lit a candle. The bare, two room interior it revealed was unkempt and disordered. Rough bunks, a table and a couple of hewn chairs were almost its only furniture. The window was broken and the roof admitted sun and rain. Prendergast laid the man they had brought on one of the bunks and threw over him a shabby blanket.

"My dear young lady," he said, "you are a good Samaritan. How shall we thank you, my poor friend here and I?"

Jessica had taken money from her pocket, and now she held it out to him. "He must have a doctor," she said. "You must fetch one."

The yellow eyes fastened on the bill, even while his gesture protested. "You shame me!" he exclaimed. "And yet you are right. It is for him." He folded it and put it into his pocket. "As soon as I have built a fire I will go for our local medico. He will not always come at the call of the luckless miner. All are not so charitable as you."

He untied her horse and extended a hand, but she mounted without his help. "He will thank you one day, this friend of mine," he said, "far better than I can do."

"It is not at all necessary to tell him," she replied frigidly. "The sick are always to be helped in every circumstance."

She gave her horse the rein as she spoke and turned him up the steep path that climbed back of the cabin, past the Knob, and so by a narrow trail to the mountain road.

August Prendergast stood listening to the dulling hoof beats a moment, then re-entered the cabin. The man on the bunk had lifted to a sitting position. His eyes were open, dazed and staring.

"That's right," the older man said. "You're coming round. How does it feel to be back in the old shebang? Can't guess how you got here, can you? You were towed on horseback by a beauty, Hughey, my boy—a rip staving beauty! I'll tell you about it in the morning if you're good."

The man he addressed made no answer. His eyes were on the other, industrious and bewildered.

"Is heard about the row," went on Prendergast. "They didn't think it was in you, and neither did I." He looked at him cunningly. "Neither did Morgan, eh, eh? You're a clever one, Hugh, but the lost memory racket won't stand you in anything. You hadn't any call to get scared in the first place. I don't tell all I know."

He shoved the candle nearer on the table. "There's a queer look in your face, Hugh!" he said, with a clumsy attempt at kindness. "That rock they threw must have hurt you. Feel sort of dizzy, eh? Never mind, I'll show you a sight for sore eyes. You went off without your share of the last swag, but I've saved it for you. Prendergast wouldn't cheat a pal!"

From a cranny in the clay chinked wall he took a chamois skin bag. It contained a quantity of gold dust and small nuggets, which he poured into a miner's scales on the table and proceeded to divide in two portions. This accomplished, he emptied one of the portions on to a paper and pushed it out.

"That's yours," he said.

Harry's eyes were on his with a piercing intensity now, as though they looked through him to a vast distance beyond. He was staring through a gray mist at something far off, but significant, that eluded his direct vision. The board table, the yellow gold, the flickering candlelight, recalled something horrifying, in some other world, in some other life, millions of ages ago.

He lurched to his feet, overturning the table. The gold dust rattled to the floor.

"Your deal!" he said. Then, with a vague laugh, he fell sidewise upon the bunk.

August Prendergast stared at him with a look of amazement on his yellow face. "He's crazy as a chicken!" he said.

He sat watching him awhile, then rose and kindled a fire on the unswept hearth. From a litter of cans and dented utensils in a corner he proceeded to cook himself supper, after which he carefully brushed up the scattered gold dust and returned it all to its hiding place. Lastly he rummaged on a shelf and found a vial. This proved to be empty, however, and he set it on the table.

"I guess you'll do well enough without any pain killer," he said to himself. "Doctors are expensive. Anyway, I'll be back by midnight."

He threw more wood on the fire, blew out the candle and, closing the door behind him, set off down the trail to the town, where a faro bank soon acquired the hill Jessica had given him.

Chapter 15

IT was pitch dark when Jessica reached the sanitarium, though she went like a whirlwind, the chill damp smell of the dewy balsams in her nostrils, the dust rising ghostlike behind the rapid hoofs. She found David Stires anxious and peevish over her late coming.

She felt a relief when the old man grew tired and was wheeled to his bedroom.

Left alone, her reflections returned. She began to be tortured. She tried to read. The printed characters swam beyond her comprehension. At length she drew a hood over her head and stole out on to the wide porch.

It was only 9 o'clock, and along the gravel paths that wound among the shrubbery a few dim forms were strolling. She caught the scent of a cigar and the sound of a woman's laugh. The air was crisp and bracing, with a promise of frost and painted leaves. She gazed down across the dark gulches toward the town, a straggling design pricked in blinding yellow points. Halfway between, folded in the darkness, lay the green shelf and the cabin to which her thought recurred with a kind of compulsion.

There was no moon, but the stars were glowing like tiny green gill coals, and the yellow road lay plain and clear. With a sudden determination she drew her light cloak closely about her, stepped down, sped across the grass to a footpath and so to the road. As she ran on down the curving stretch under the trees the crackling slip of bank paper that lay in her bosom seemed to burn her flesh. She was stealing away to gaze upon the outcast who had shamed and humbled her—going, she knew not why, with burning cheek and hammering heart.

She slipped through the side trail to the cabin with a choking sensation. She stole to the window and peered in. In the firelight she could see the form on the bunk, tossing and muttering. Otherwise the place was empty. She lifted the latch softly and entered.

The strained anxiety of Jessica's look relaxed as she gazed about her. She saw the vial on the table. The doctor had been there, then. If he were in serious case, Prendergast would be with him. She threw back her head, drew one of the chairs to the side of the bunk and sat down, her eyes fixed on his face. The weakness and helplessness of his posture struck through and through her. Two sides of her were struggling in a chaotic combat for mastery.

"I hate you! I hate you!" she said under her breath, clinching her cold hand. "I must hate you! You stole my love and put it under your feet! You have disgraced my present and ruined my future! What if you have forgotten the past, your crime? Does that make you the less guilty or me the less wretched?"

But within a silent voice within her gave the lie to her vehemence. Some element of her character that had been rigid and intact was crumbling down. An old sweet something that a dreadful infill had ground and crushed and annihilated was rising whole and undefiled, superior to any petty distinction, regardless of all that lifted combative in her inheritance, not to be gainsaid or denied.

She leaned closer, listening to the incoherent words and broken phrases borne on the turbid channels of fever. But she could not link them together into meaning. Only one name he spoke clearly over and over again—the name Hugh Stires—repeated with the dreary monotony of a child conning a lesson. She noted the mark across his brow. Before her marriage, in her blindness, she had used to wonder what it was like. It was not in the least disfiguring. It gave a touch of the extraordinary. It was so small she did not wonder that in that ecstatic moment of her bride's kiss she had not seen it.

Slowly, half fearfully, she stretched out her hand and laid it on his. As if at the touch the mutterings ceased. The eyes opened, and a confused, troubled look crept to them. Then they closed again, and the look faded out into a peace that reconciled.

A thrill ran through her, the sense of moral power of the weak over the strong, of the feminine over the masculine.

A rising flush stained her cheeks. With a sudden impulse and with a guilty backward glance she bent and touched her lips to his forehead.

She drew back quickly, her face flooded with color, caught her breath, then, drawing her hood over her head, went swiftly to the door and was lost in the darkness.

* * * * * * *

When toward midnight the fever ebbed, Sanderson had fallen into a deep sleep of exhaustion, from which he opened his eyes next morning upon the figure of Prendergast sitting, pipe in mouth, in the sunny doorway.

He lifted himself on his elbow. That crafty face had been inexplicably woven with the delirious fantasies of his fever. Where and when had he known it? Then in a great tide welled over him the memory of his last conscious hours—the scene in the saloon, the fight, the music, the sudden appalling discovery of his name and repute. He remembered the sickening wave of self disgust, the fierce agony of resentment that had beat in his every vein as he walked up the darkening street. He remembered the thrown quartz. No doubt another missile had struck home or he had been set upon, kicked and pommeled into insensibility. This old man—a miner probably, for there were picks and shovels in the corner—had succored him. He had been ill, there was lassitude in every limb, and shadowy recollections tantalized him. He retained a dim consciousness of a woman's face—the face he had seen on the balcony—leaning near him, bringing into a painful disorder a sense of grateful coolness, of fragrance and of rest.

As he stared again at the seated figure, the grim fact reared like a grisly specter, deriding, thrusting its haggard presence upon him. In this little community, which apparently he had forsaken, and to which he had by chance returned, he stood a rogue and a scoundrel, a thing to point the finger at and to avoid. The question that had burned his brain to fire flamed up again. The town despised him. What had been his career? How had he become a pariah? And by what miracle had he been so altered as to look upon himself with loathing?

"I'm going to cook you some breakfast."

He lifted himself upright, dropping his feet to the floor. At the movement the man on the doorstep rose quickly and came forward.

"You're better, Hugh," he said. "Take it easy though. Don't get up just yet—I'm going to cook you some breakfast." He turned to the hearth, kicked the smoldering log ends together and set a saucepan on them. "You'll be stronger when you've got something between your ribs," he added.

She bent and touched her lips to his forehead.

"How long have I been lying here?" asked Harry.

"Only since last night. You've had a fever."

"Where is my dog?"

"Dog?" said the other. "I never knew you had one."

Harry's lips set bitterly. It had fared more hardly, then, than he. It had been a ready object for the crowd to wreak their hatred upon, because it belonged to him—because it was Hugh Stires' dog!

"Is this your cabin, my friend?"

The figure bending over the hearth straightened itself with a jerk, and the blinking yellow eyes looked hard at him. Prendergast came close to the bunk.

"That's the game you played in the town," he said, with a surly sneer. "It's all right for those that take it in, but you needn't try to bamboozle me, pretending you don't know your own claim and cabin! I'm no such fool!"

A dull flush came to Harry's brow. Here was a page from that iniquitous past that faced him. His own cabin! And his own claim! Well, why not?

"You are mistaken," he said calmly. "I am not pretending. I cannot remember you."

Prendergast laughed in an ugly, derisive way. "I suppose you've forgotten the half year we've lived here together and the gold dust we've gathered in now and again—slipped in all, have you?"

Harry stood up. The motion brought a temporary dizziness, but it passed. He walked to the door and gazed out on the pleasant green of the hillside. On a tree near by was nailed a rough, weather beaten board on which was

MONEY IN ITSELF IS OF NO VALUE

Your savings are of some worth only when employed as a means to some end. Money in the bank on interest serves a double use—you can apply the interest to secure the comforts of life; the principle serves as a reserve fund in case of misfortune or necessity. We advise no one to save for the sake of money alone. An account with us will be a means to enjoy future days.

Real Tailoring

is what we give you—no bluff. Would you rather wear clothes that are chopped out and put together by machinery and of the same pattern as 25 to 100 other fellows can buy or wear those made by legitimately by hand throughout by a real tailor?

Don't be bluffed with your eyes wide open into believing that the "make believe tailor" gives you anything but a "guess it" and cheap made clothes.

Why look as if you had joined some uniform brigade when you can come to us and select an exclusive pattern for yourself, something 50 other fellows can't buy?

Give us a call and we will demonstrate to you what real tailoring is.

THE primary election law introduced by Senator Dickinson is probably, in a general way, the the measure which will be placed on the statute books. In most of its provisions all will be ready to concede that it is a vast improvement over the present law. The provision for party enrollment in April, it is hoped, will make it less liable for the members of one party to make the nominations for both parties as is done under the present law, by having the enrollment before the lines of contest are too sharply drawn. Another wise provision makes the primary come earlier in the year, as well as the section providing for the settlement of contests in the courts where the alleged irregularities occur. A vast difference of opinion exists as to the wisdom of not making it mandatory to nominate all the state officers by the primary method as well as all other officials, and the provision regarding the the election of delegates to county conventions by primary vote.

To the COURIER it seems that as the time has not yet arrived when party government can be divorced from our system of nominations, and election, it would be the point of wisdom for the law somewhere, in some way, to make provision for the gathering together of those who take an interest in politics for the choice of party committees, and probably the balance of the state ticket is as good as any, if there is to be party conventions at all. We believe, however, that the people will never be satisfied until they are given the right to choose all officers at a primary, and then we believe that the candidates themselves should be allowed to name their campaign committees. In other words we don't believe a successful law can be enacted which attempts to maintain a part of the old and a part of the new system, by holding party conventions for the nomination of part of the officials by delegates, elected at a primary, and the rest by direct vote.

ORDER EASTERN STAR

Gave Mrs. F. A. Butler a Surprise Saturday Night.

Saturday night the ladies of the Order Eastern Star gave Mrs. F. A. Butler a very pleasant surprise at her home on State street. An evening which will long be remembered by all who were present was thoroughly enjoyed.

Mrs. Butler is one of the most faithful and hard working members of the fraternity, and a beautiful silver bread tray was left behind as a reminder of the evening.

MRS. PORTER SURPRISED

By the Women's Relief Corps Thursday, January 21.

The ladies of the W. R. C. had a most enjoyable time at Mrs. Porter's home in Marion Thursday, January 21, the ladies going out to surprise her and they certainly did. A pot luck dinner was prepared, which proved to be a banquet feast. Some of the ladies were so overcome that it required the efforts of the rest to revive them enough to walk part of the way home. They were all sufficientelly recovered as to be able to make Mrs. Peasler a visit on the following Thursday and all report a good time and no accidents.

LADIES' HOME JOURNAL PATTERNS

They are all portrayed in the Spring Quarterly Style Book

Worry and wrinkles grow apace when costumes for these three important functions are under consideration; but the question is soon settled by those who buy the new Spring Quarterly Style Book, illustrating The Ladies' Home Journal patterns.

Expert fashion designers, master artists and skilful printers have vied with each other in the production and illustration of gowns for these occasions, as well as in the general endeavor to make The Spring Quarterly Style Book the most helpful fashion magazine on the market.

The result is a one-hundred and-ninety-page book of unusual beauty, surpassing any previous effort in this line. It not only illustrates scores of beautiful dresses and lingerie for the bride, the sweet girl graduate and the aspirant for confirmation, but shows correct styles for every occasion.

It is a complete pictorial encyclopedia of style information, as reliable as Webster's Dictionary. It will be appreciated alike by the professional dressmaker and the home seamstress.

Elizabeth and Nora Drew, aged fifteen and fourteen respectively, who live at Pravemont, near Traverse City, were picked up on Lake Leelenau after they had been whirled about on a frail iceboat at the rate of thirty-five miles an hour in one of the fiercest blizzards known in that section in years. The children left home Friday on the iceboat to attend school. They had gone but half way when the storm overtook them.

Tuesday she secured an ax handle and entered the Tavern bar where she managed to break a number of glasses before she could be controlled. The bartenders watch was torn from his pocket in the scuffle and thrown across the floor, the chain was broken in several peices but the timepiece was apparently not injured. Mrs. Johnson was led into the hotel office where she discussed her grievances with Landlord Fred Fisk. Afterwards she went to President Fox and gave him her views upon his administration. Mrs. Johnson has a son about thirty years of age, who has been debarred from obtaining liquor in the saloons, but who does get it occasionally through other parties and this is the basis of Mrs. Johnson's wrath. Mattie's Milkman.

By MURRAY FIEL.

Copyrighted, 1908, by Associated Literary Press.

Miss Jeannette's objection to Gene Carman was his profession. He was night editor on a morning paper, and he came home anywhere between 2 and 4 o'clock in the morning.

Miss Jeannette was country bred, and for forty years she had accepted without question the dictum that those who were out of night were no better than thieves and robbers.

Just what was the difference between thieves and robbers Miss Jeannette did not know. She knew only that those were the only sort of persons who were out when decent folk should be abed, so when her pretty niece, Mattie Boyer, gave evidence of more than a passing interest in Carman she very promptly frowned upon the young man and warned Mattie that she must have nothing more to do with the Carmans, mother and son.

The latter lived on the floor above Mattie and her maiden aunt, and kindly Mrs. Carman had been a tower of strength to Miss Jeannette when she and Mattie had first come to the city to live.

She had pointed out the best places at which to trade and helped Miss Jeannette to get an obnoxious tenant on the lower floor out of the house and had initiated both the elder and the younger woman into city ways generally.

Naturally it had hurt the old lady when the Boyers had terminated their friendly relations without word of warning, but a hint from Mattie to Gene soon set matters right.

"SHE'S STUCK ON ME SHAPE AND SENT ME A MASH NOTE."

Mattie was accustomed to Miss Jeannette's sudden whims, and she assured Gene that presently there would be a turn of the tide in his favor. Meanwhile she had to obey Miss Jeannette's prohibition against seeing Gene, so the only communication they held was by means of notes.

Every morning when Gene came home from his work he found a note stuck in the wide mouth of the empty milk bottle beside the Boyer doorway. The milkman came through the house later, gathering up empty bottles and leaving the filled ones.

To any person who chanced to pass it would appear to be a note of instructions to the milkman, but to Gene, coming home tired and sometimes disheartened, the little blue envelopes were like mental cocktails.

The same bottle would not serve us his postidlice as well, for Miss Jeannette took in the milk.

The best that Gene could do was to leave his letters in the candy store on the corner, where Mattie could get them when she returned from her work.

Had Mrs. Carman been willing to act as messenger the problem would have been far more simple, but the kindly old lady would have nothing to do with the affair.

She was hurt that the friendship should be so suddenly terminated and still more hurt that her son should be regarded as ineligible. She wondered at his lack of pride that he should still want to marry Mattie in spite of Miss Jeannette's prohibition, and she was most ostentatiously neutral.

For a time the milk-bottle postoffice answered its purpose excellently well. Miss Jeannette went to bed early and let Mattie close the house, so that the latter set the bottle out in the hall every evening.

But one morning Gene did not come home as usual. There had been a sensational accident, and all the men on duty had been rushed to the scene. Even the men on the desks who could be spared were sent out, Gene among them.

It was nearly noon when he at last reached home, so exhausted that not once did he think of the letter. Mind and body were numb, and he did not dream that another man was reading the letter intended for him and was gloating over its contents.

Mattie's letters were not affectionately personal. She knew the danger of the missives falling into other hands, so she wrote vague notes of good cheer.

"In the missing one there was an allusion to the long walk [illegible] Saturday, the milkboy, the id[illegible] the young woman with the glorious lane eyes was very much interested in him.

"I bet she seen me somewhere on Sunday," he mused. "She's a pippin, but I guess I'm some apples myself when I get me new harness on. It's a darned shame that she didn't pipe up a couple of weeks ago. She'd have put it all over Slim Bleecker's girl at th' ball of th' Milk Wagon Drivers' association. The Lady Flirts give their blowout a week from Thursday, and that's the day after pay day. I wonder would the little flame give a look."

Butch was a firm believer in the adage that "faint heart ne'er won fair lady," so as soon as his horse was stabled and his routine ended he made for the flat house in which the Boyers lived.

He was somewhat taken aback when Miss Jeannette answered the bell. Mattie worked only in the afternoons, reading to an invalid, and generally it was she who paid the bills on Tuesday morning when Butch made his regular round.

"Where's the little lady?" demanded Butch, determined to brave it out. "I want to say suthin' to her."

"My niece is out just now," was the severe response. "I understood that she paid your bill yesterday."

"Bill be blowed," said Butch politely. "This is a personal game, see? I got me money yesterday. I want to make a date wit' her. Get that over your think plate?"

"You?" cried Miss Jeannette in disgust.

"Sure," was the easy response. "She's stuck on me shape and sent me a mash note. I ain't wise up to all her talk, but that's clear. Give a look."

Moved to anger by the lucredulity in Miss Jeannette's look, he produced the note, now sadly soiled. "You ain't see what I'd pick for a mommer-in-law, but I guess I'll have to take you wit' th' rest of th' furniture."

Miss Jeannette had lived in dread of a misalliance for Mattie, and now her worst fears seemed about to be realized.

She gave another long, comprehending look at the unshaven young driver and, with a little groan of horror, sank to the floor in a faint.

Butch promptly took his departure after giving a frightened ring on the bell of the flat next door, trusting that some one might come to the woman's relief. He could not know that they had all gone out, so it was Mrs. Carman, summoned by a piano agent, who brought Miss Jeannette back to consciousness. Miss Jeannette clung to her convulsively.

"Did you see that milk wagon driver?" demanded the shuddering Miss Jeannette. "My dear Mrs. Carman, that man is going to marry Mattie. I have heard of young girls eloping with their father's coachman, but with the driver of a milk wagon! Do you know that Mattie actually has been writing letters to him?"

A gleam of comprehension came into Mrs. Carman's kindly eyes. She knew that Gene had come in late that morning, and she could guess the rest. Here might be an opportunity to make things come out all right.

"I suppose that Mattie admired his appearance," she suggested gently. "Young girls very frequently do fall in love with a fine physique, and I recall that the driver is very athletic. If you had not interfered with Gene and she"—

Miss Jeannette grasped her arm. "It's not too late," she declared. "Tell your son that I will make any apology he demands. Perhaps if they see more of each other Mattie will forget this mad infatuation."

"I am quite sure that she will," declared Mrs. Carman comfortingly. "I will speak to Gene and ask him for your sake to try and regain Mattie's love."

Miss Jeannette gave her rescuer a grateful glance, and the little woman withdrew to sit patiently on the front step to warn Mattie when she should return. There Gene found her when he came out to go to work, and he listened in great amusement while his mother explained the situation.

"Of the two evils you are the less," she concluded smilingly. "If Mattie will only play her part well and consent to gradually forget her milkman you have won."

"I don't like being the lesser of Miss Jeannette's two evils," declared Gene happily as he bent to kiss his mother's wrinkled cheek, "but to save Mattie from her milkman I am willing to be even that, dear."

By Way of Experiment.

Not long ago there was a certain salesman in a dry goods shop of an Ohio city who was habitually observing to his fellow clerks that the corsets would find it rather difficult to get along without him. These remarks coming to the ear of the senior partner of the firm, he decided to interview his clerk concerning them.

"Mr. Spotts," said the partner, with a grim smile, "although you have not proved to be our most efficient clerk, yet we have appreciated such service as you have condescended to render us during the intervals when you were not expatiating on your own merits. Now we have lately heard it said that if you were to die the business would have some trouble in surviving the loss. This has worried us a good deal, for you, like all of us, are liable to drop off at any moment.

"For this reason, therefore, we have concluded, for our peace of mind, to experiment while all of us are in good health in order that we may ascertain whether the firm can bear up under your loss. You will accordingly consider yourself dead for the period of one month, and we will see to see whether we can get along without you for that length of time."—Harper's.

May Have Been Method.

"What in the world happened to your watch?"

"Run over by a steam roller."

"So careless of the driver!"

"Maybe he wanted to kill time."

Still Undecided.

It is yet to be demonstrated that a balloon coming east from the Pacific coast has the Los Angeles Limited beaten to a frazzle. The gas car appears to have a tendency to play around in the eddies caused by the mountain ranges and thus make the captains of the craft late for the supper he has ordered in Boston.

A successful trip of that sort would cause the man who is eternally remarking on the smallness of the world to remark some more.

He would at once begin speculating on the possibilities of living in Los Angeles and doing business in Boston, though at the present time the man who sets out with a late start and a heated imagination for his happy western home is liable to find himself in the morning dangling from one of the desolate mountain peaks that stick up on the way. As an exact science air navigation at present lacks some of the qualities of exactness.

Putting It Mildly.

"Why do you call him a moderate drinker because he only takes a nip now and then?"

"No; it is not exactly for that. The reason why I call him a moderate drinker is because I am a charitable person."

GERMS IN HER SYSTEM

Every Woman Should Read This.

The number of diseases peculiar to woman is such that we believe this space would hardly contain a mere mention of their names, and it is a fact that most of these diseases are of a catarrhal nature. A woman cannot be well if there is a trace of the catarrh germs in her system.

Some women think there is no help for them. We positively declare this to be a mistaken idea. We are so sure of this that we offer to supply medicine absolutely free of all cost in every instance where it fails to give entire satisfaction or does not substantiate our claims. With this understanding, no woman should hesitate to believe our honesty of purpose, or hesitate to put our claims to a test.

There is only one way to cure Catarrh. That way is through the blood. You may use all the snuffs, douches or like remedies for years without getting more than temporary relief at best. Catarrh is caused by a germ. That germ is carried by the blood to the innermost part of the system until the mucous membrane is broken, irritation and inflammation produced, and a flow of mucous results, and you can probably realize how silly it is to attempt to cure such an ailment unless you take a medicine that follows the same course as the germ or parasite.

Rexall Mucu-Tone is scientifically prepared from the prescription of an eminent physician who for thirty years made his specialty catarrh, and with this medicine he averaged 98 percent of cures where it was employed. No other remedy is so properly designed for the ailments of woman. It will purify and enrich the blood, stop mucous discharge, destroy all germ matter, remove all impurities from the system, soothe, heal and strengthen the mucous tissues, and bring about a good feeling of health and strength.

We want you to try Rexall Mucu-Tone on our guarantee. If you are not benefited, or for any reason not satisfied, simply tell us and we will hand back your money. Rexall Mucu-Tone comes in two sizes, 50c and $1.00. Ivy Drug Store, A. B. Fletscher, Proprietur.

COTTAGE CHEESE ART.

How to Make a Toothsome and Particularly Nutritive Dish.

To master the art of making cottage cheese let the housewife first have cold have thoroughly boiled out all the little salt bags. Only try to use milk when it is loblered. After it has stood off the ice from two days to a week it will be right. Put each day's leftovers in a separate bowl, so that the cream which forms on the top may be skimmed off. Put it all together in a pan and set it on the top of a kettle of boiling water. Just as soon as it cracks in the middle and begins to show water on the edges it is done. This will be before the top part of the mass is beginning to be heated. Now fit the salt bag over the top of a pitcher or jar and turn the whole into it and hang it up without squeezing for a few hours.

The whole secret is in not scalding it too much, which will be prevented by using the hot water, and when it is neither underdone nor overdone it will be found that a small quantity of milk will yield an unusual amount of cheese. Made in this way there is absolutely no acid in it, and with butter, salt and cream added it is a particularly nutritive and easily digested dish.

How to Prevent Christmas Tree Fires.

A circular issued by State Fire Marshal D. S. Creamer of Ohio gives "seasonable and sensible" advice for keeping the Christmas tree from catching fire. Some of the precepts are:

Don't use festoons of tissue paper or cotton batting on a tree.

Don't light a single candle until everything is ready for the entrance of the juveniles who are to be dazzled.

Don't let the children touch the tree.

Don't let Uncle Henry shift the position of his Roosevelt bear to make it show better, because he is likely to sway a candle against something which will take fire.

Don't leave an illuminated tree unwatched.

Don't put cotton beneath the tree to make the carpet look like snow covered ground.

How to Make a New Christmas Cake.

For a holiday card party during the Christmas season a pretty sort of small cake may be served appropriately. Cream a heaping cup of butter, add two and a half cups of sugar, one whole egg and the yolks of two more beaten together, four cups of flour and a teaspoonful of cinnamon, says Harper's Bazar. Roll out very thin, using a marble slab, if you have one, and brush over with slightly beaten egg white and sprinkle with sifted cinnamon and sugar. With the cutter—to be had at a department store—cut out in hearts, diamonds, clubs and spades and bake till light brown. These cakes may be covered with chopped almonds instead of cinnamon.

How to Gather Quickly.

A quick way to gather the tops of sleeves which is much superior to gathering them by hand is to thread the machine with coarse thread and make the stitch quite long. Then loosen the tension just a trifle. Now stitch two rows of stitching an eighth of an inch apart, leaving as much heading as you desire. Pull the two underneath threads until the sleeve is gathered as much as is required and then fasten the threads. When sewing the sleeves into the waist stitch on the line of the first row of gathering. This second row shows plainly and makes a pretty finish for the top of the sleeve, at the same time holding it out so that it gives a white appearance to the waist.

How to Wash a White Silk Parasol.

A white silk parasol can be as easily washed as any piece of white silk. It is best to make a tepid suds with white soap and borax, using the bathtub for washing it in, as the water can be changed often in the rinsing water use bluing, then rinse a second time. It is best to gently scrub the silk with a soft brush, which is easily done if the parasol is furled. After it is thoroughly rinsed hang opened in a room to dry, but do not place it in the sun. It will be straight and free from wrinkles.

How to Make a Cup of Cocoa.

Take a tablespoonful of cocoa and put it in a tin cup. Add one tablespoonful of granulated sugar and one tablespoonful of boiling water. Mix well, so that there will not be any lumps of cocoa. Pour a little less than one-half pint of milk into a saucepan and cook it, stirring all the time, until it is scalded—that is, until a film forms on it and it begins to bubble a little. Stir the cocoa mixture into this and cook until it boils up.

How to Make Tough Meat Tender.

How many cooks know that when boiling meat—corned beef, chicken, in fact, meat of any kind—a tablespoonful of vinegar to a large piece, a smaller spoonful to a smaller piece, placed in the water when first put over the fire will make it deliciously tender? There will be positively no flavor of the vinegar in the meat when cooked.

How to Make a Cookbook.

Cut from the newspaper and magazines all recipes which you think you would like and after trying and approving of them paste in a blank notebook. Arrange under heads in alphabetical order, and in no time you will have a good cookbook which is composed of recipes which you like and have tried.

How to Take Quinine.

Some people cannot take quinine because it goes to the head. To overcome this take a quinine capsule, remove the cap, then fill the cap with cayenne pepper, replace the cap and take as usual, and the head will suffer no ill effects from the quinine.

Does Your Watch Movement

need attention? If it does not keep correct time there's something wrong. When in good running condition the balance wheel should make about 18,000 vibrations an hour and requires less than one-tenth of a drop of oil to make it operate smoothly. But it needs that little badly. The least increase of friction on the bearings alters the motion. If there is anything wrong with your watch, let me examine it. If you decide to leave it, I'll guarantee to put it in good running condition for a most reasonable price.

scrawled, "The Little Paymaster Claim." He saw the grass grown gravel trenches, evidence of abandoned work. He had been a miner. That in itself was honest toil.

"The claim is good, then," he said over his shoulder. "We found the pay?"

Prendergast contemplated him a moment in grim silence, with a scowl. "You're either really muddled, Hugh," he said then, "or else you're a star play uctor and up to something deep. Well, have it your own way—it's all the same to me. But you can't pull the wool over my eyes long!"

There were mockery and threat in his tone; but, more than both, the evil intimacy in his words gave Harry a qualm of disgust. This man had been his associate. That one hour in the town had shown him what his own life there had been.

What should he do? Forsake forever the neighborhood where he had made his blistering mark? Fling all aside and start again somewhere and leave behind this disgraceful present, with that face that had looked into his from above the dusty street?

If fate intended that, why had it turned him back? If such was the bed he had made, he would lie in it. He would drink the gall and vinegar without whimpering. Whatever lay behind he would live it down. This man at least had befriended him.

He turned into the room. "Perhaps I shall remember after awhile." He took the saucepan from Prendergast's hand. "I'll cook the breakfast," he said.

Prendergast filled his pipe and watched him. "I guess there are bats in your belfry, sure enough, Hugh," he said at length. "You never offered to do your stint before."

Chapter 16

FROM the moment her kiss fell upon the forehead of the delirious man in the cabin Jessica began to be a prey to new emotions, the significance of which she did not comprehend. That kiss, she told herself that night, had been given to her dead ideal that had lain there in its purifying grave clothes of forgetfulness. Yet it burned on her lips, as that other kiss in a darkened room had burned afterward, but with a sense of pleasure, not of hurt. It took her back into crimson meadows with her lost girlhood and its opaled outlook—and Hugh.

But largest of all in her mind next day was anxiety. She must know how he fared. In the open daylight she could not approach the cabin, but she reflected that the doctor had been there and no doubt had carried some report of him to the town. So as the morning grew she rode down the mountain ostensibly to get the cherry cordial she had left behind her the day before, really to satisfy her hunger for news.

As it happened Mrs. Halloran's first greeting set her anxiety at rest. Prendergast had bought some tobacco at the general store an hour before while she had been making her daily order, and the storekeeper had questioned him. To an interested audience he had told of the finding of Hugh on the mountain road in a sort of crazy fever and enlarged upon the part the girl on horseback had played. Hugh was all right now, he said, except that he didn't remember him or the cabin or Smoky Mountain.

What Prendergast had said Mrs. Halloran told Jessica in a breath. Before she finished she found that Jessica had not heard of the incident in the saloon which had precipitated the fight with Devlin, and with sympathetic rhetoric Mrs. Halloran told this too.

"Why does Smoky Mountain hate him so? What has he done?" asked Jessica.

Mrs. Halloran shook her head. "I never knew anything myself," she said judiciously. "I reckon the town allus counted him just a general low down. The rest is only suspicion an' give the dog a bad name."

There had been comfort for Jessica in this interview. Mrs. Halloran's story had materially increased the poignant force of her pity. What had seemed to her a vulgar brawl had been in reality a courageous and unselfish championship of a defenseless outcast. Thinking of this, the self blame and contrition which she had felt when she listened to the violin assailed her anew, till she seemed a very part of the guilt, an equal sinner by omission.

Yet she rode homeward that day with almost a light heart.

* * * * * * *

As Harry stood in the cabin doorway looking after Prendergast toward the town, glistening far below in the morning sunlight, he thought bitterly of his reception there.

"They all knew me," he thought. "Every one knew me—on the street, in the hotel. They know me for what I have been to them. Yet to me it is all a blank. What shameful deeds have I done?" He shrank from means.)

"What was I doing so far away, where was I going, on the night when I was picked up beside the railroad track? I may be a drunkard," he said to himself. "No, in the past month I have drunk hard, but not for the taste of the liquor. I may be a gambler, I may be a cheat, a thief. Yet how is it possible for bad deeds to be blotted out and leave no trace? Actions breed habit if they do not spring from it, and habit automatically repeated becomes character, I feel no inherent propensity to rob or defraud. Shall I? Will these things come back to me if my memory does?"

In the battle that he fought now he turned, even in his weakness, to manual labor, striving to dull his thought with mechanical movement. He cleaned and put to rights both rooms and sorted their litter of odds and ends. But at times the inclination to escape became well nigh insupportable. When the conflict was fiercest, he would think of a girl's face once seen, and the thought would restrain him. Who was she? Why had her look pierced through him? In that hateful career that seemed so carelessly alien could she have had a part?

He did not know that she of whom he wondered in the bitterest of those hours had been very near him; that on her way up the mountain she had stolen down to the Knob to look through the parted bushes to the cabin with the blue spiral rising from its chimney.

Though the homely task to which he turned failed to allay his struggle by nightfall, Harry had put the warring elements under. When Prendergast returned at supper time, the candle was lighted in its wall box, the dinted tea kettle was singing over a crackling fire and Harry was perspiring over the scouring of the last utensil.

Prendergast looked the orderly interior over on the threshold with a contemptuous amusement. "Almost thought I was in church," he said. He took off his coat and lazily watched the other cook the frugal evening meal. "Excuse my not volunteering," he observed. "You do it so nicely I'm almost afraid you'll have another attack of that forgettery of yours and go back to the old line."

Presently he looked at the bunk, clean and springy with fresh-cut spruce shoots. He went into it, knelt down and thrust an arm into the empty space beneath it. He got up hastily.

"What have you done with that?" he demanded, with an angry snarl.

"With what?" Harry turned his head as he set two tin plates on the bare table.

"With what was under here."

"There was nothing there but an old horse skin," said Harry. "It is hanging on the side of the cabin."

With an oath Prendergast flung open the door and went outside. He re-entered quickly with the white hide in his arms, wrapped it in a blanket and thrust it back under the bunk.

"Has any one been here today since you put it out there?" he asked quickly.

"No," said Harry, surprised. "Why?"

Prendergast chuckled. The chuckle grew to a guffaw, and he sat down, slapping his thigh. Presently he went to the wall, took the chamois skin bag from its hiding place and poured some of its yellow contents into his palm. "That's why. Do you remember that, eh?"

Recipe Easily Prepared, and Many Swear by It.

Many of Our Citizens Speak Well of the Home Prescription Which Helped Them to Health.

Mix the following by shaking well in a bottle, and take in teaspoonful doses after meals and at bedtime:

Fluid Extract Dandelion, one-half ounce; Compound Kargon, one ounce; Compound Syrup Sarsaparilla, three ounces. A local druggist is the authority that these simple, harmless ingredients can be obtained at nominal cost from our home druggist.

The mixture is said to cleanse and strengthen the clogged and inactive Kidneys, overcoming Backache, Bladder weakness and Urinary trouble of all kinds, if taken before the stage of Bright's disease.

Those who have tried this say it positively overcomes pain in the back, clears the urine of sediment and regulates urination, especially at night, curing even the worst forms of bladder weakness.

Every man or woman here who feels that the kidneys are not strong or acting in a healthy manner should mix this prescription at home and give it a trial, as it is said to do wonders for many persons.

MOHAMMED.

His Vision of Heaven and the Story of the Mountain.

Hulabi, the founder of Islam, was born at Mecca in the year A. D. 570. He died June 8, 632, at the age of seventy-two. He assumed the titular name of Mohammed, which means, according to some authorities, the "predicted Messiah."

One of the most extravagant relations which can be found in any language is credited to Mohammed. Speaking of the sights he beheld when "transported to heaven," he says: "I saw there an angel, the most gigantic of all created things. It had 70,000 heads, each head had 70,000 faces, each face had 70,000 mouths, each mouth had 70,000 tongues and each tongue spoke 70,000 languages. All were employed in singing God's praises."

When Mohammed first announced his divinely inspired and appointed system the Arabs demanded supernatural proofs of his commission. "Moses and Jesus," said the Arabs, "wrought miracles in the testimony of their divine authority. And if thou art indeed a prophet of God do so likewise."

"It would be tempting God to do so," replied Mohammed, "and bring down his anger, as in the case of Pharaoh."

As the story is told in Brewer's "Phrase and Fable," the Arabs were not satisfied with this answer, and Mohammed then commanded one of the numerous eminences near Mecca to come to him. The mountain not stirring at Mohammed's bidding, the prophet exclaimed: "God is merciful! Had the mountain obeyed my words it would have fallen on us to our destruction.

"I will therefore go to the mountain."

JELLYFISH.

In Tropical Waters This Queer Creature Is at Its Best.

Few marine animals seem at first glance to betray less intelligence than the jellyfish. Up with the tide and down with the tide, carried along by this or that current, moving with the eddy of a backwater hither and thither, the jellyfish has become almost a synonym for helplessness. Scientifically, of course, the popular idea of the jellyfish is wholly mistaken, but it is perhaps only in tropical waters that it is found in the perfection of intelligence. In the south Pacific round the Islands of Polynesia and as far south as the upper portion of the North Island of New Zealand there is a jellyfish that not only knows where it wants to go, but is even provided with a sail which it can and does hoist or lower at will. The sail, like the rest of this curious animal, is almost transparent; but, unlike the body of the fish, which is of the usual gelatinous construction, the sail is a membrane almost as hard as shell. Round about the Ellice group the navigating fish is often found with a sail measuring five inches across, and it navigates the shallow inland waters with the skill of a jilled, steering in and out of snaggy places and avoiding obstructions both above and below the surface with unerring skill. Like its cousins in home waters, this navigating jellyfish has the power of stinging its natural enemies, and its sting is fatal to other fish and dangerous to man.—London Standard.

An Unpleasant Visitor.

A frightful shape loomed up before the nearsighted eyes of the frightened professor. It was of heroic size, it stooped a little, its arms were unusually long, its forehead was retreating and its feet were large and very broad.

"You have taken great liberties with me," said the shape. "You refer to me on every possible occasion, ascribing to me characteristics of which I know nothing. You have a reprehensible way of shifting to my shoulders a great many problems that are too much for your limited mind to grasp. Come, now, what do you mean by it?"

"I've never seen you before," stammered the professor. "Who are you?"

The shape haughtily drew itself up.

"I am the primitive man!" it cried in a terrible voice.

And the professor is understood to be running yet.—Cleveland Plain Dealer.

Laying a Ghost.

This "ghost" story was among those omitted from Mr. Stead's famous collection: There was an ordinary cupboard door that always mysteriously creaked open at five minutes before midnight unless it was kept locked, and when it was kept locked it groaned and rattled instead precisely at the same hour. Then came along a spook expert, who discovered that at five minutes before midnight the fast express train passed along the highroad a mile away from the house and set in motion some vibratory wave that acted upon the cupboard and scared a whole household.

Deafness Cannot be Cured

by local applications, as they cannot reach the the diseased portion of the ear. There is only one way to cure deafness, and that is by constitutional remedies. Deafness is caused by an inflamed condition of the mucous lining of the Eustachian Tube. When this tube is inflamed you have a rumbling sound or imperfect hearing, and when it is entirely closed, Deafness is the result, and unless the inflamation can be taken out and this tube restored to its normal condition, hearing will be destroyed forever; nine cases out of ten are caused by catarrh which is nothing but an inflamed condition of the mucous surfaces.

ANNUAL ROUND-UP FARMERS' INSTITUTE

"America" was sung, led by the speaker, and the inspired evening closed.

The first subject Wednesday morning was "Profit from the Apple Orchard," and again Mr. Gray was introduced by the president. The profits of the fruit production are on an average higher than other products, being nearly ten per cent profit. He gave five points as to raising apples, namely, fertilizing, cultivating, spray, pruning and thinning. The last was a pretty hard thing to do. It had taken him four years to have the grit to do it, but it was far more profitable as the fruit which remained was of better quality and brought better prices.

N. P. Hull then took up the subject "Money from Sheep." He was given an ovation when he took the floor. He is Master of the State Grange and a practical farmer. He kept the audience in a seemingly breathless attitude or laughter. The afternoon session convened at 1:30. Reports of committees were read by the secretary, and the president and secretary were re-elected. Mr. Mears gave a few remarks fitting to the occasion. The secretary rose and said "them's my sentiments too," which created a broad smile in the audience.

"Modern Helps for the Farm" was then given by Mr. Gray, who began by giving the ladies a few suggestions, by order of his wife. He spoke of the advantage of the correspondence school when one could not spend time, nor had the means to attend our agricultural school at Lansing. Many other grand helps were brought out.

"Dairying with Silo," was next by N. P. Hull. He started out in his genial way with a story, then took up his subject and handled it without gloves, with little side lights in story form that kept the audience smiling. He summed it up as a good business proposition for the farmer.

E. B. Ward of Charlevoix led the discussion that followed but he thought the first speaker had covered the ground faithfully, so he said but little, giving some good advice to the housewives as to disposing of their products from the dairy. A lively discussion by the audience followed.

The president then announced that he had saved the best for the last, Miss Jennie Buell, lecturer of State Grange, of Ann Arbor. Her subject was "New Outlooks for Farm Folks." She spoke with a great deal of earnestness and had a pleasing voice and manner. She gave some excellent statistics as to the yielding of crops in the past three years. Progression was a part of her theme. She told of President Roosevelt being interested in the rural life and of the questions he sent out for the people to discuss in their grange or other meetings, the tenure of rural conscience, country life and other thoughts. She dealt on the sanitary life that ought to prevail on the farms. She advocated the thought that the boys or young people should have a social center some place where they could have programs of interest. Light, air and water are a necessity to healthful homes. It is a pity that we have to come to death's door before we accept the fresh air. The health of the nation lies at the door of the home-keeper. Her closing was a story representing the sociability we must come in touch with, those of our kind, especially the housewives. They need more society and they are coming to see it more and more. These institutes, grange and equity meetings are a Godsend to the women on our farms.

Next year's round-up will be held at Charlevoix.

LEADERS IN WORK AND PLAY

Are the Students of Charlevoix Public Schools.

FOOT BALL TEAM MADE A RECORD

Second to None in Northern Michigan this Season.

While Examinations Show Constant Improvement in School Work—New Features of this Semester.

The public schools of Charlevoix, are a credit not only to our city but to the members of the board, the teachers and the pupils as well. Probably not one patron in a hundred realizes the good work which is being done in our schools this year by Superintendent Woodley and his very efficient corps of teachers. An inspection of the results of the final examinations of the second semester shows results which are surprising when taken into comparison with the results of other semesters, and proves that a constant improvement is being made in the work. If any one thinks that these results were possible on account of the examinations being easy, a glance over the list of questions will soon prove the fallacy of an opinion of that kind. A new feature of this semester is the establishment of a review room, which is under charge of Miss Weatherwax, where special work is given students in the studies in which they are deficient, which is already showing remarkable results.

Space will not permit of giving of only a few figures in this issue, but we will give enough to prove the work being done. Promotion from eight grade 26. During the past week the following rooms have had 00 students with standings below 80. Eight and seventh grades, first Washington and third and fourth grade Lincoln.

The athletic season has also been very successful in every way. Beginning the year in debt, the athletic association has not only paid all debts but has a comfortable surplus in the bank. The prospects for a winning foot-ball team was not very bright last fall, but by earnest continuous work on the part of the candidates and efficient coaching on the part of Principal Wilson, a team second to none in Northern Michigan resulted. As an appreciation of the manly conduct on the part of the members of the team during the season, a large picture from which the above cut is taken, will be presented to the school, by Dr. G. W. Cronter. It would seem at this time to be proper to give the line up of the team and schedule of games played:

Charlevoix 22, Boyne City 5, at Charlevoix.

Charlevoix 17, Boyne City 6, at Boyne City.

Charlevoix 21, Bellaire 0, at Charlevoix.

Charlevoix 2, Petoskey 9, at Petoskey.

Charlevoix 17, Petoskey 0, at Charlevoix.

Charlevoix 11, Harbor Springs 0, at Charlevoix.

Charlevoix 5, East Jordan, 0 at Charlevoix.

The success of the team was largely due to the splendid team work, but each member contributed his share and deserves credit in the work. The back field and ends were conceded to be faster than that of any team in this vicinity, while the line was particularly strong in defensive work.

Hull, as center was an aggressive, snappy player. He was accurate in passing the ball, and on defense work, was in every play. Krulik as guard was lighter than most of his opponents, but because of his low, hard playing, consistent gains through his position were impossible. Robinson and Marsa played the other guard. Robinson was in the game all the time and developed into a strong defensive player. Marsa played hard frequently breaking through and tackling the runner for a loss. Carey, as one tackle, by reason of his weight was an element of strength to the line. Papinao was lighter, but fast and both aided the runner by good interference. Paddock, as left end, made some of the longest and most spectacular runs of the season. He was also a good defensive player and a hard worker, and as a reward was elected captain of the the team for next year. Levinson as right end was particularly strong on defensive work, almost no gains being made around his end. Both men were also good in running down punts. Holm as sub-end was accurate in receiving forward passes and will make a good player. Withers as utility linesman, contributed considerable strength to the team by being able to play any of the line positions. Captain Small, as quarter, ran the team well, was accurate in passing the ball and was also a good punter. Some of his quarter back runs netted good gains when most needed. His defensive work was strong and deserves special mention. Hampton, as left half, was a fast, heady player running low and hard and seeming to know just where the best gains could be made. On defense, he spoiled many forward passes seemed almost sure to be successful. Bridge, as right half, was fast and strong, running well, with the ball and was always in the interference. Durgan, as full back, was particularly strong in defensive work. He and Bridge were always after the man with the ball, breaking up interference, and spoiling many, and otherwise, ground gaining play. Poole, played as regular the first four games but owing to an unfortunate accident at Petoskey, was unable to finish the season. His character and his work seems to indicate that he will make one of the strongest members of next year team.

Crouter, as manager, is to be congratulated in arranging a schedule which made foot ball a paying proposition for the first time in many years.

Too much cannot be said for Coach Wilson, who was able to make a winning team from so many new men. Being a star player on the champion Normal team, he knows the game thoroughly, "play hard but fair" is his motto and the team and its work does him credit.

Proclamation by the Governor

To the People of the State of Michigan:

Abraham Lincoln, one of the gentlest, greatest characters the world has ever known, came into being in a humble Kentucky home just a century ago. Born February 12, 1809, he was of the common people whose interests he ever guarded and whose rights he defended to the end.

Destined to serve as chief executive of this nation through the years of its greatest trial, he rendered his country a service that has no parallel.

The people of this state and country will be better able to do their full duty as citizens if they take time to do special honor to the memory of the great emancipator on the occasion of the One hundredth anniversary of his birth. In the performance of this loving service they will benefit themselves by learning anew the lesson of this great life and thus come to a greater appreciation of privileges they enjoy and of the sacrifices of those who preserved for them this government and all the benefits it confers upon even the humblest citizen of our country.

To the end that the people of Michigan may give special thought to this important matter, I call upon them to make special observance of the one hundredth anniversary of the birth of Abraham Lincoln and on the twelfth day of February to participate in exercises which will impress them with the lessons of the great life which was of such ineatimable value to this Nation and to the cause of freedom everywhere.

In testimony whereof I have hereunto set my hand and caused the great seal of state to be affixed at Lansing, this twenty-sixth day of January, in the year of our Lord, one thousand nine hundred and nine.

FRED M. WARNER, Governor.

FREDERICK C. MARTINDALE, Secretary of State.

WILL CELEBRATE LINCOLN DAY

Next Friday Evening at the Congregational Church

THE ONE HUNDREDETH ANNIVERSARY

Charlevoix Historical Society, G. A. R. and W. R. C.

Will Unite in Holding an Open Meeting in Honor of the Day—All are Invited to Attend.

Friday occurs the anniversary of the birth of Abraham Lincoln, who was born February 12, 1809. The day has been proclaimed a holiday and all over this broad land of ours, meetings will be held in honor of the event, where citizens will assemble to do honor to the name of Lincoln, whose greatness became more and more apparent as the years go by. As is fitting, the Grand Army of the Republic and Woman's Relief Corps have a prominent part in these celebrations.

In Charlevoix, the Historical Society, which each year has made its Lincoln Day banquets a prominent feature of its year's work, when the members have assembled to listen to eminent speakers, draw a lesson from the life of the great president, and do honor to his name, have arranged for an open meeting, in connection with the G. A. R. and W. R. C., at the Congregational church Friday evening. All citizens are most heartily invited to attend.

The program is made up of addresses, by different local speakers, on the many different phases of Lincoln's character which should prove an inspiration to higher ideals in our lives as American citizens. Below we print the program.

Music by orchestra (Mrs. Davison, Mrs. Coulter, Clare Coulter.)
Invocation—Rev. H. A. Putnam.
Vocal solo—Miss Lorraine Washburne.
Short address, "Lessons from the Life of Lincoln"—W. E. Hampton.
Short address, "Lincoln, the Soldier"—Major E. H. Green.

GETTSYSBURG ADDRESS

Of Abraham Lincoln Delivered November 19, 1863.

One of the Most Memorable Speeches Ever Made in History.

"Fourscore and seven years ago our fathers brought forth on this continent a new nation conceived in liberty and dedicated to the proposition that all men are created equal. Now we are engaged in a great civil war, testing whether that nation, or any nation, so conceived and so dedicated, can long endure. We are met on a great battlefield of that war. We have come to dedicate a portion of it as the final resting-place for those who here gave their lives that that nation might live. It is altogether fitting and proper that we should do this.

"But in a large sense we cannot dedicate, we cannot consecrate, we cannot hallow, this ground. The brave men, living and dead, who struggled here, have consecrated it far above our poor power to add or detract. The world will little note nor long remember what we say here, but it can never forget what they did here. It is for us, the living, rather, to be dedicated here to the unfinished work which they who fought here have thus so nobly advanced. It is rather for us to be here dedicated to the great task remaining before us that from these honored dead we take increased devotion to that cause for which they here gave the last full measure of devotion that we here highly resolve that these dead shall not have died in vain, that this nation, under God, shall have a new birth of freedom, and that government of the people, by the people, for the people shall not perish from the earth."

Headquarters, Baxter Post, No. 119, Department of Michigan, Grand Army of the Republic, special order No. 26.

In compliance with National and Departmental Headquarters of the Grand Army of the Republic, for the proper observance of the One Hundredth Anniversary of the birth of Abraham Lincoln, the members of Baxter Post are hereby ordered to meet at the office of Major E. H. Green, 221 Bridge street, on Friday evening, February 12th, 1909, to march from there in a body to the First Congregational church, corner of Park avenue and State street, where the Lincoln Memorial Anniversary services will be conducted, under the supervision of the Charlevoix Historical Society, which has invited this Post, and other patriotic societies to participate in the functions arranged for a general recognition of the One Hundredth Anniversary of the birth of the great Commander-in-Chief of our army and navy during the civil war.

By command of
H. BERDAN, Post Commander.
EDWARD H. GREEN, Adjutant.

Leave orders for engraved cards at this office.

SPREAD OF PROHIBITION

Eleven Thousand Saloons Voted Out of Existence in 1908.

During 1908, 11,000 saloon were voted out of existence of the United States, and 330,000 square miles in area added to the already dry territory. There are now eight prohibition states, Maine, Georgia, Alabama, Mississippi, North Dakota, Kansas, Oklahoma and North Carolina. There will be legislative fights for nine other states during this year for statewide prohibition.

In Ohio, out of 88 counties, 62 are now without saloons. In Arkansas there are about 315 saloons left. In Iowa 1,197. Twenty-two of the 42 counties of South Carolina are "dry." There are 11 "dry" counties in Michigan, 96 in Kentucky, 10 in Maryland and 21 in Oregon. Twenty-one counties and 450 municipalities in Nebraska are "dry," 50 counties in Missouri are "dry." In Illinois 1,053 townships, with 1,525 saloons voted "dry" last April. California has 6 "dry" counties and 180 "dry" cities and towns, Florida has but 250 saloons left. Seventy-one of Virginia's 100 counties are "dry." In Massachusetts, 20 of the 33 cities have voted "no license;" two hundred and sixty of the 321 towns are "no license" and there was, at the last election, a "no license" majority throughout the state of 18,710 votes. And the end is not yet.

FORMER RESIDENT DEAD

Mrs. Ellen D. Holland Died Saturday—Burial at Charlevoix.

Mrs. Ellen D. Holland, a former resident of this county, died at the home of her daughter, Mrs. George Linn of Petoskey, Saturday morning, after a long illness of cancer of the stomach.

Mrs. Holland was the mother of Mrs. George Linn of Petoskey, Mrs. Walter Ball of Post Falls, Idaho, formerly of Marion, Mrs. Kay Rossman of Chicago, Nelson Holland of this city and Gilbert Holland, who resides near Ironton.

The funeral was held at the home of Mrs. Linn Mooday, Rev. W. J. Wilson officiating, the interment being in Brookside cemetary Tuesday.

BUILD NEW BOAT

Northern Michigan Transportation Company May do so.

Plans Have Been Drawn by Frank E. Kirby Will Equal Missouri

A rumor is extant to the effect that the Northern Michigan Transportaton company is to have a sister ship to the steamer Missouri constructed at an early date, says the Manistee News.

Asked concerning the matter Mr. John Seymour of Traverse City, who is one of the principal stockholders of the company, said that the matter was under consideration, and that at a meeting of the company to be held this week a final decision would be made, and in case it is favorable to construction bids would be asked.

It appears that the company has had plans for a new passenger steamer drawn by Frank Kirby of Detroit, the designer of the City of Cleveland, the Tashmoo, and other swift and elegant steamers plying on the Great Lakes. This much Mr. Seymour said. The action of the stockholders of the company cannot positively be foretold, but when the proposition has gone as far as the completion of plans it would appear reasonable to believe that construction is implied.

The Northern Michigan Transportatioo company has been very successful even during the past season when some lines were not so fortunate. A need for a fourth big steel passenger steamer has been felt. There was at one time a possibility that the line would acquire the steamer Argo, but it was decided that she would prove too small. At present the fine steel ships Manitou, Missouri and Illinois are owned by this line, with the John R. Sterling, Kansas, and the recently bought Wisconsin for the less important runs.

A new ship, if ordered, will not be inferior in any respect to the steamer Missouri, the last one built, for the line. The vessel drawn by Frank Kirby is a propeller and presumably on a par with the Missouri.

LOCAL OPTION ELECTION ORDERED

By Board of Supervisors at Yesterday's Session.

THE VOTE IN FAVOR WAS UNANIMOUS

Report of Expert Accountant on County Finances.

Proposition to Buy Voting Machines Rejected—Petition From North Side is Tabled.

Tuesday the board of supervisors met in adjourned session, all members being present but W. D. Gallagher of Peaine. The first business to come before the board was the local option petitions, which were referred to a committee to examine. The committee reported that they found sufficient signatures and the board ordered the election next April. A petition was read from L. P. Adams asking that several names be struck off on account of alleged irregularities, but the board evidently considered the reasons given as trivial, as by an unanimous vote the election was ordered.

This morning the report of the expert accountant, who examined the county books, was accepted by the board. The report follows:

Charlevoix, Mich., Jan. 15, 1909.
To the Honorable Board of Supervisors,
Charlevoix, Michigan.
Gentlemen:

I have examined the books and records in the offices of the county treasurer, county clerk and superintendents of the poor from October 1, 1905, and herewith submit my report:

The receipts and disbursements of the county treasurer and balances of cash on hand as shown by the treasurer's statements to the Board of Supervisors, are correct and agree with the books and records in the offices of the county treasurer and county clerk and with the monthly statements and quarterly reports of the auditor general.

As the treasurer's detailed statements or reports have been submitted to the Board of Supervisors and published, they are omitted from this report.

I have checked the treasurer's account with the state, with the monthly and quarterly statements of the auditor general and find it to be correct. With the exception of a small error in the South Arm township account, the township, city and village accounts have been correctly kept and they have been credited with all tax collections of the auditor general and county treasurer and debited with their respective portions of the auditor general's refunds and rejected and charged back taxes and have been paid their respective portions of primary school funds, library funds and liquor licenses.

The indebtedness of the county January 1, 1909, appears as follows:

General composite fund orders outstanding	$13,170.69
Allowances issued for loans in excess
General poor fund orders outstanding	166.98
Balance of Manitou county and bond tax collections to funds of treasurer	378.30
State's portion of hunters licenses	25.00
Due townships, cities and villages	2,509.79
Library fund balance	130.16
State
Total	$17,149.99
Less cash on hand	3,914.99
Indebtedness of the county January 1, 1909	$13,235.00

The amount of the indebtedness was materially increased during the past year because of the necessity of extensive repairs to the court house after same was partially destroyed by fire.

The receipts from the county tax levied in October, 1908, will no doubt materially reduce the indebtedness before the close of the present year.

I have examined the circuit court journals and find that the fines paid in criminal cases amount to $375 and the costs to $180, all of which has been paid to the treasurer by the county clerk.

I have examined the books and records of the superintendents of the poor and find them well kept with the exception of their having made no records nor entries of moneys received and making no

CORRESPONDENCE

FROM BAY SHORE.

Mr. Montague of Petoskey, was a Bay Shore caller Sunday.

Several of our town people were Petoskey callers Saturday.

Our new meat market is in full operation and report a rushing trade.

J. B. Rooney and Mr. Henry of Bellaire, called on friends in town Sunday.

Three of our young people attended the dance at Charlevoix Friday night. A good time is reported.

Mr. Henry Burch of Epsilon, is visiting his son here. Mr. Burch is recruiting from a stroke of paralysis and is getting along nicely.

It is reported that the lime kilns and saw mill of this place will soon resume operations, we are all anxious to see the wheels rolling once again.

Several of our boys or fishermen have hired out to the new meat market to catch fish to supply the market with, but if they do not do any better than they did Sunday they will have to double their capacity.

Mr. D. Atwood attended the meeting of the stock holders of the Elk Cement & Lime Company last week at Elk Rapids. We understand that this company is looking forward to a prosperous year, this will be a good thing for this country, as they furnish a great deal of labor.

FROM ATWOOD.

Skating parties are all the go.

The L. A. S. met with Mrs. John H. Smith Wednesday last.

Hattie Visser, while skating, fell and put her knee out of joint.

On account of a badly sprained ankle Russ Alward uses crutches.

Mrs. Mabel Wood sold her farm last week to John Vanhouton for $3,300.

Harry Smith is home now and is looking better. No doctor like mother.

Ida Blissett returned Saturday from a two week's visit with friends at Ironton.

Miss Maggie Mitchell of Ironton, is visiting her many friends here for a few days.

John VanDerberg has sold his farm to Ralph VanDerherd of Zeeland. Consideration $3,800.00.

One of the happiest papas you ever looked on is Albert Byers' a moe pound baby boy. Aunt Anna has lots to say too.

Ethan Jolliffe who has been at Grand Rapids, the past month tuning pianos in factory was home over Sunday and Monday returning on Tuesday.

Before giving our opinion on any floating "here say" it would be wise to hear both sides of the question even then we can't be too careful to express our opinion.

FROM CLARION.

Grandma Card is quite sick.

Oliver Dunton has moved his family on to the old N. N. Card place.

Miss Mae Ransom came up from Big Rapids Friday, returning again Monday.

Mrs. Benham of Harbor Springs, visited her daughter, Mrs. Frank Bridgewater, Saturday.

Presiding Elder Ferguson conducted quarterly meeting services in the M. E. church on Sunday evening.

A number of young people spent a very pleasant evening Saturday, at Mrs. Alex. Gills, in honor of the Misses Hazel and Andy Gill of Petoskey.

On Thursday a party of Boyne City ladies, Mrs. J. B. Watson, Mrs. Leavenworth, Mrs. Ira and Mrs. Al. Inbenville, Mrs. William Parmelee and Mrs. Tim Heaton visited Mrs. Alex. Gill.

BOYNE FALLS

C. W. Swaverly of Kalkaska, was in town on business recently.

Miss Callaghan enjoyed a visit from her sister from Gaylord last week.

M. Nowling has returned to Munising after a short visit with his family.

Merritt Magee, who was operated upon in Petoskey for appendicitis, is reported as doing nicely.

Representative Pearson was greeted at the depot by a large number of friends as he passed through on the legislative train.

E. B. Ward of Charlevoix, installed the grange officers Saturday evening, January 30. All present report having a very enjoyable evening.

COUNTY NORMAL NOTES.

Thursday morning Dr. Armstrong and Mr. Bridge visited the Normal.

Jessie Durance and Pearl Hurst have begun practice teaching in fourth grade geography.

Clare Finneau substituted for Miss Manson last Wednesday in the third and fourth grade of the north ward.

Deputy State Superintendent of Public Instruction F. L. Keeler of Lansing visited the Normal Thursday. He gave a very interesting talk on the qualifications of a good teacher.

Deafness Cannot be Cured

by local applications, as they cannot reach the the diseased portion of the ear. There is only one way to cure deafness, and that is by constitutional remedies. Deafness is caused by an inflamed condition of the mucous lining of the Eustachian Tube. When this tube is inflamed you have a rumbling sound or imperfect hearing, and when it is entirely closed, Deafness is the result, and unless the inflamation can be taken out and this tube restored to its normal condition, hearing will be destroyed forever, nine cases out of ten are caused by catarrh, which is nothing but an inflamed condition of the mucous surfaces.

Saloon Shadows

Liquor dealers profess to wonder why temperance people are so insistent, unyielding and seemingly narrow and fanatical.

Have they ever asked themselves why temperance people should be otherwise than strenuous and uncompromising?

If anything in evil shape would serve to make thoughtful people sturdy in opposition, would not the shameless curse and dark shadows of the saloon do so?

Consider the horrible facts:

"Unquestioned statistics now show that alcohol is the direct or indirect cause of "40 per cent of insanity.

"30 per cent of all cases of epilepsy.

"50 per cent of all cases of idiocy.

"70 per cent of all criminality.

"50 per cent of all accidents and fatalities."

"Pneumonia is the name given to more than 70 per cent of deaths occuring among persons who have died drunk."

"The present excitment concerning the dread consumption, while it indicates an awakening of the medical profession to causes and conditions that are preventable, is as nothing compared with the prevalence of inebriety and its positive influence in destroying the race, and increasing the burdens of civilization."

The question arises:

Why shouldn't temperance people be aroused, indignant, determined and terribly in earnest in fighting intoxicants?

To be indifferent and listless in the presence of such evils is to be mentally stupid, morally dead, socially reckless and politically criminal.

Inebriety is eating into our national and religious life like a deep-seated canker, and conditions have become such that only heroic treatment can save the church and nation.

This is why temperance people are everlastingly opposed to the saloon and the only proper wonder is why their numbers are not tenfold greater.

THEY INJURE CHILDREN

Ordinary Cathartics and Pills and Harsh Physic Cause Distressing Complaints.

You cannot be over careful in the selection of medicine for children. Only the very gentlest bowel medicine should ever be given. Ordinary pills, cathartics and purgatives are too apt to do more harm than good. They cause griping, nausea and other distressing after-effects that are frequently health destroying and a life lasting annoyance.

We personally recommend and guarantee Rexall Orderlies as the safest and most dependable remedy for constipation and associate bowel disorders. We have such absolute faith in the supreme virtues of this remedy that we sell it on our guarantee of money back in every instance where it fails to give entire satisfaction, and we urge all in need of such medicine to try it at our risk.

Rexall Orderlies contain an entirely new ingredient which is odorless, tasteless and colorless. It embraces all the best qualities of of the soothing, laxative, strengthening and healing remedial active principles of the best known intestinal regulator tonics.

Rexall Orderlies are extremely pleasant to take, are particularly prompt and agreeable in action, may be taken at any time, day or night; do not cause diarrhea, nausea, griping, excessive looseness, or other undesirable effects. They have a very natural action upon the glands and organs with which they come in contact, act as a positive and regulative tonic upon the relax dry muscular coat of the bowel, remove irritation, dryness and soreness, overcome weakness, and tone and strengthen the nerves and muscles, and restore the bowels and associate organs to more vigorous and healthy activity.

Rexall Orderlies not only cure constipation, but they remove the cause of this ailment. They also overcome the necessity of constantly taking laxatives to keep the bowels in normal condition.

There is really no similar medicine so good as Rexall Orderlies, especially for children, aged and delicate persons. They are prepared in tablet form and in two sizes of packages; 12 tablets, 10c., and 36 tablets, 25c. Ivy Store, A. B. Fleischer, proprietor.

SEAWEED AS A FERTILIZER.

Its Value to Coast Farmers Is Increasing.

Seaweed is a valuable fertilizer. The Irish peasants prefer it to manure, and the farmers of the Orkney Islands formerly let farmyard manure accumulate mussel on account of its inferiority to seaweed as a fertilizer.

The seaweed that is brought ashore or drifts there is dried and burned, and the ashes are spread over the land. The ashes contain a good proportion of potash and phosphates, and some kinds of weed also yield nitrates. These three substances are the life of vegetation, and for this reason the ashes of seaweed are an ideal food for crops.

Some years ago a French sea captain attempted to organize a company to send ships to the Sargasso sea where they could easily collect big cargoes of drift weed and bring it to France to be burned for the fertilizing ashes. Capitalists told him, however, that they did not think it would pay to carry the weed so far, and the money was not raised.

It is asserted by some authorities that the great deposits of nitrate of soda which are sent from Chile to all parts of Europe and the United States to be spread over the farm lands were formed by the decay of huge masses of seaweed when the land was sunk under the sea. Undecomposed parts of seaweed, it is said, are still found there.

The attention of the Cape Colony government was recently called to the fact that very large quantities of seaweed are constantly being washed ashore along the northwest coast, and at last accounts the government had sent for samples of the weed to determine its value as a fertilizer.

Sir Humphry Davy was one of the first to recommend seaweed as a fertilizer about a century ago. For generations the inhabitants of the Channel Islands have gained a fair living by collecting and burning the weed and selling the ashes as manure. These ashes are also largely used in the British Isles and along the Norwegian and French coasts.

The publications of the United States agricultural department say that the use of seaweed as a fertilizer is increasing in this country, that for long stretches of the New England coast the weed is utilized by the farmers for fifteen to twenty miles inland and that it is especially favored for the stimulation of clover fields. Rye beach is almost always strewn with the weed, and few lands ever show so luxuriant growth of red clover as those in the neighborhood of this beach.

The seaweed thrown up on the shores in the neighborhood of Cape Town has long been regarded as an expensive nuisance. The city government has for years been paying teamsters to collect the stuff, haul it away and bury it. The amount of weed thus disposed of has been about 1,500 tons a year.

The city authorities have now seen a new light and are spreading the news among the farmers that the weed is a very valuable fertilizer.

Concrete Watering Places.

It is the opinion of a correspondent of the Country Gentleman that there is an excellent chance to combine utility and beauty in the erection of attractive and permanent watering places in village streets and along country roads. The old moss covered tub, half buried in a bank of ferns and wild flowers, presents a picturesque appearance no doubt, but in a short time the hoops of the tub give way, the staves fall in, and a long interval may elapse before the watering place is in commission.

The first requisite is, of course, a supply of running water. Then a substantial stone foundation should be laid below the frost line—an iron supply pipe as well as a waste pipe being brought up through this foundation. On this foundation can be erected as simple or as elaborate a design as one may desire. A mold of rough boards can easily be set up for any rectangular shape, the boards being held in place by crosswise strips nailed to the upper edges. The boards can be raised as the work goes on.

CHAPTER XVI—Continued.

Harry looked at it. "Gold dust," he said. "I seem to recall that. I am going to begin work in the French tomorrow. There should be more where that came from."

Prendergast poured the gold back into the bag with a cunning look. The other had asked for no share of it. At that moment he decided to say nothing of the evening before, of the girl or the horseback journey, lest Hugh, cudgeling his brains, might remember he had been offered a half.

"There's plenty more where that came from, all right," he said, "and I'll teach you again how to get it one of these days."

Prendergast said little during the meal. When the table was cleared he lit his pipe and took from a shelf a board covered with penciled figures and scrutinized it.

"Hope you remember how to play old sledge?" he said.

Harry did not move. As they ate he had been wondering how long he could abide that sinister presence. As he was about to speak a knock came at the cabin door, and Prendergast opened it.

The visitor Harry recognized instantly. It was the man who had called for fair play at the fight before the saloon, who had drawn him into the hotel.

Felder carried a bundle under his arm. He nodded curtly to Prendergast and addressed himself to Harry.

"I am the bearer of a gift from some one in the town," he said. "I have been asked to deliver this to you." He put the bundle into the other's hands.

Harry drew up one of the chairs hastily. "Please sit down," he said courteously. He looked at the bundle curiously. "Et cos dona ferentes," he said slowly. "A gift from some one in the town!"

A keen surprise flashed into the lawyer's glance. "The quotation is clas-

"It was his express wish that I give the violin to you."

sic," he said, "but it need not apply here." He took the bundle, unwrapped it and disclosed a battered violin. "Let me explain," he continued. "For the owner of this you fought a battle yesterday. You tested its tone a little later. It seems that you are a master of the most difficult of instruments. There was a time, I believe, when the old man was its master also. He was once, they say, the conductor of an orchestra in San Francisco. Drink and the devil finally brought him down. For three years past he has lived in Smoky Mountain. Nobody knows his name. The town has always called him 'Old Despair.' You did him what is perhaps the first real kindness he has ever known at its hands. He has done the only thing he could to requite it."

Harry had colored painfully as Felder began to speak. His voice was unsteady as he answered:

"I appreciate it, I am deeply grateful, but it is quite impossible that I accept it from him."

"You need not hesitate," said the lawyer. "Old Despair needs it no longer. He died last night in Devlin's dance hall, where he played when he was sober enough for his lodging. I happened to be near by, and I assure you it was his express wish that I give the violin to you."

Rising, he held out his hand. "Good night," he said. "I hope your memory will soon return. The town is much interested in your case."

The flush grew deeper in Harry's cheek, though he saw there was nothing ironical in the remark. "I scarcely hope so much," he replied. "I am learning that forgetfulness has its advantages."

Chapter 17

THE little town had been unconsciously grateful for its new sensation. The return of Hugh Stires and his apparent curious transformation was the prime subject of conversation. For a half year the place had known but one other event as startling. That was the finding some months before of a dead body—that of a comparative stranger in the place—thrust beneath a thicket on Smoky mountain, on the very claim which now held Prendergast and his partner.

The "umen corner" of the Mountain Valley House had discussed the pros and cons exhaustively. There were many who sneered at the loss of memory and took their cue from Devlin, who, smarting from his humiliation and nursing venom, revamped suspicions wherever he showed his battered face. In his opinion Hugh Stires was "playing a slick game."

"Your view is colored by your prejudices, Devlin," said Felder. "He's been a blackleg in the past—granted. But give the devil his due. As for the other ugly tale, there's no more evidence—against him than there is against you or me!"

"They didn't find the body on my ground," had been the other's surly retort, "and I didn't clear out the day before either."

The phenomenon, however, whether credited or poohpoohed, was a drawing card. More than a few found occasion to climb the mountain by the hillside trail that skirted the lonely cabin. These as likely as not saw Prendergast lounging in the doorway smoking, while the younger man worked, leading a trench along the brow of the hill to bring the water from its intake, which Harry's quick eye had seen was practicable.

The spectacle of Hugh Stires, who had been used to pass his days in the saloons and his nights in even less becoming resorts, turned practical miner added a touch of opera bouffe to the situation that to a degree modulated the rigor of dispraise. It was the consensus of opinion that the new Hugh Stires seemed vastly different from the old; that if he were "playing a game" it was a curious one.

On the one side was a black record, exemplified in Prendergast—rounded infamy, a shuddering abhorrence of his past self as he saw it through the pitiless lens of public opinion; on the other was a grim constancy of purpose, a passionate wish to reconstruct the warped structure of life of which he found himself the tenant, days of healthful peace inspiring toil, a woman's face that threaded his every thought. As he wielded his pick in the trench or laboriously washed out the few glistening grains that now were to mean his daily sustenance he turned often to gaze up the slope where, set in its foliage, the glass roof of the sanitarium sparkled softly through the Indian haze. Strange that the sight should mysteriously suggest the face that haunted him!

Prendergast saw the abstracted regard as he came up the trail from the town. He was in an ugly humor. The bag of gold dust which he had shown to Harry he had not returned to the hiding place in the wall, and with this in his pocket the faro table had that day tempted him. The pouch was empty now.

Harry's back was toward him, and the gold pan in which he had been washing the gravel lay at his feet. With a noiseless, mirthless laugh Prendergast stole into the cabin and reached down from the shelf the bottle into which each day Harry had poured his scanty findings. He weighed it in his hand—almost two ounces, a little less than $20. He hastily took the empty bag from his pocket.

But just then a shadow darkened the doorway, and Harry entered. He saw the action and, striding forward, took the bottle from the other's hand.

Prendergast turned on him, a sinister snarl under his affectation of surprise. "Can't you attend to your own rat killing?" he growled. "I guess I've got a right to what I need."

"Not to that," said Harry quietly. "We shall touch the bottom of the flour sack tomorrow. You expect to get your meals here, I presume."

"I still look forward to that pleasure," answered Prendergast, with an evil sneer. "Three meals a day and a rotten roof over my head. When I think of the little I have done to deserve it, the hospitality overcomes me. All I have done is to keep you from starving to death and out of quod at the same time. I only taught you a safe way to beat the game, an easier one than you seem to know, and to live on Easy street."

"I am looking for no easy way," responded Harry, "whatever you mean by that. I expect to earn my living as I'm earning it now. It's an honest method, at all events."

"You've grown all fired particular since you lost your memory," retorted Prendergast, his eyes narrowing. "You'll be turning dominie one of these days. Perhaps you expect to get the town to take up with you and to make love to the beauty in the green riding habit that brought you here on her horse the night you were out of your head."

Harry started. "What do you mean?" he asked thickly.

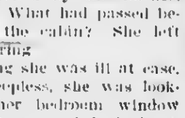
Prendergast's oily manner was gone now. His savage temper came uppermost.

"I forgot you didn't know about that," he scoffed. "I made a neat story of it in the town. They've been gabbling about it ever since."

Harry caught his breath. As through a mist he saw again that green habit on the novel balcony—that face that had haunted his waking consciousness. It had not been Prendergast alone, then, who had brought him here. And her act of charity had been made, no doubt, a thing for the tittering of the town, cheapened by chatter, coarsened by joke!

"I wonder if she'd done it if she'd known all I know," continued the other malevolently. "You'd better go up to the sanitarium, Hugh, and give her a nice sweet kiss for it!"

A lust of rage rose in Harry's throat, but he choked it down. His hand fell like iron on Prendergast's shoulder and turned him forcibly toward the open door. His other hand pointed, and his suppressed voice said: "This cabin has grown too small for us both. The town will suit you better."



"The town will suit you better."

Prendergast shrank before the wrath whitened face, the dangerous sparkle in the eyes. "You've got through with me," he glowered, "and you think you can go it alone." The old suspicion leaped in the malicious countenance. "Well, it won't pay you to try it yet. I know too much! Do you understand? I know too much!"

Harry went out of the cabin. At the door he turned. "If there is anything you own here," he said, "take it with you. You needn't be here when I come back."

His fingers shaking with the black rage in his heart, Prendergast gathered his few belongings, rolled them in the white horse skin which he drew from beneath his bunk and wrapped the whole in a blanket. He fastened the bundle in a pack strap, slung it over his shoulder and left the cabin. He settled his burden and went rapidly down the trail, turning over in his mind his future schemes.

As it chanced, there was one who saw his vindictive face. Jessica, crouched on the Knob, had seen him come and now depart, pack on back, and guessed that the pair had parted company. Her whole being flamed with sympathy. She could see his malignant scowl plainly from where she leaned, screened by the bushes. It terrified her. What had passed between them in the cabin? She left the Knob wondering.

All that evening she was ill at ease. At midnight, sleepless, she was looking out from her bedroom window across the phantom peopled shadows, where on the face of the pale sky the stars trembled like slow tears. Anxiety and dread were in her heart; a pale phantom of fear seemed lurking in the shadows; the night was full of dread.

Chapter 18

ON the day following the explosion of Prendergast, Harry woke restless and unrefreshed. Fleeting sensations mocked him a disturbing conviction that the struggling memory in some measure had succeeded in reasserting itself in the shadowy kingdom of sleep. Waking, the apparitions were fled again into their obscurity, leaving only the wraiths of recollection to startle and disquiet. A girl's face hovered always before him—ruling his consciousness as it had ruled his sleeping thought.

He took down from its shelf the bottle he had rescued from Prendergast's intention and emptied it of its glistening grains—enough to replenish his depleted stock of provisions. He paused a moment as he put on his hat, smiling whimsically, a little sadly. He dreaded entering the town. But there could be no remedy in concealment. If he was to live and work there, appear he must on the streets sooner or later. Smoky Mountain must continue to think of him as it might. What he was from that time on was all that could count to him.

If he had but known it there was good reason for hesitation today. Early that morning an angry rumor had disturbed the town. The sluice of the hydraulic company had been robbed again. Some two months previously there had occurred a series of depredations by which the company had suffered. The boxes were not swept of their golden harvest each day, and in spite of all precautions coarse gold had disappeared mysteriously from the riffles, this, although armed men had watched all night. There had been much guess work. The cabin on the hillside was the nearest habitation—the company's flume disgorged its flood in the gulch beneath it—and suspicion had eventually pointed its way. The sudden ceasing of the robberies with the disappearance of Hugh Stires had given focus to this suspicion. Now, almost coincident with his return, the thievery had recommenced. It had been a red letter day for Devlin and his ilk, who cavilled at the more charitable. Of all this, however,

EAST JORDAN TO PAVE

Two Blocks Next Summer Says the Enterprise.

Among the many improvements to be made in East Jordan during the coming summer is the paving in the business section of the town. Mr. John Munroe has taken the matter up with the property owners and has secured the co-operation of a sufficient number of them to make it practically certain that the project will be carried out.

A meeting of those interested was held in Mr. Munroe's offices last Friday evening and the matter was thoroughly discussed. Just what material will be used, whether brick, bitulithic macadam or tarvia gravel, has not been decided upon, and a committee consisting of Jno. Munroe, and F. A. Kenyon was appointed to investigate the merits and cost of the several paving materials and report at a future meeting.

Present plans embrace the paving of two blocks on State street from the Town Hall corner to Main street and two blocks on Main street from Loveday Opera House south to State street.

I. Z. MERRIAM DEAD

One of Charlevoix's Most Prominent Citizens.

Was a Man Who Had Taken an Active Part in Public Affairs.

I. Z. Merriam, one of Charlevoix's best known and most respected citizens, died at his home in this city Thursday, after an illness of several weeks. Mr. Merriam was born in the state of New York, September 7, 1832, and was married to Marian L. Dewey of that state April 10, 1857, going immediately to Ft. Atkinson, Wisconsin, where he engaged in the general mercantile business, which he continued until 1868, when he disposed of his business and moved to Dubuque, Iowa, where he engaged in the business of selling agricultural implements until 1880, afterwards going to Whitewater, Wisconsin, and accepting a position as superintendent of agencies of the Easterly Harvester Company. During his residence in Whitewater, Mr. Merriam served as postmaster of the city, being appointed by President McKinley.

In 1885 Mrs. Merriam died and Mr. Merriam was again married in 1890, to Miss Sarah Inwood of Charlevoix. A few years ago Mr. Merriam removed to this city, where he has since lived. His residence in the dairy section of Wisconsin and work among the farmers had proven to him the possibilities of dairying and he was one of the founders and directors of the X L Produce Co.

Mr. Merriam's many sterling qualities led to his being chosen as a member of the city council from the first ward, where he rendered faithful and efficient service. Mr. Merriam was of a cheerful, genial disposition and always had a cheerful word for all acquaintances, who will miss his many pleasant visits. He leaves besides his wife, one son at LaGrange, Illinois.

The body was taken to Whitewater, his old home, for burial Friday.

When Animals Are Ill.

Said a prominent veterinarian: "Animals when sick are the most helpless and appreciative of all creatures, and the way of administering relief and medicine in many instances is as novel as it is effective. The most savage and revengeful animals during spells of severe pain are, as a rule, as docile and tractable as a child. Relief must come from a human being, and come quickly, and they seem to know it. The most vicious horse when groaning with pain would allow a mere child to administer relief, and many of the wild animals when in sickness seem to forget their savage instincts."

The Greyhound.

Various explanations have been given of the origin of the term greyhound, some authors claiming that the prefix grey is taken from Graius, meaning Greek, others that it signifies great, while still others say that it has reference to the color of the animal. In no other breed of hounds is the blue or gray color so prevalent, and consequently the last mentioned derivation seems the most plausible.—London Notes and Queries.

FIVE THOUSAND DOLLARS

Are Damages Given in Myers vs. D. & C. R. R. Co.

Chaloupka is Found Guilty. Sentences are Given out.

As we went to press last week the case of the People vs. Chaloupka, violation of the liquor law was on trial, going to the jury Wednesday night, who returned a verdict of guilty Thursday morning.

This case was brought against Frank Chaloupka, a liquor dealer of Charlevoix, who was charged with selling liquor, in the spring of 1907, to a person in the habit of becoming intoxicated. Owing to the fact that Mr. Nicholas, the present prosecuting attorney, was attorney for the defense, A. L. Fitch was appointed as special prosecuting attorney and how well he performed the duty is proven by the verdict of the jury, the case being hotly contested at every point.

Thursday the case of Myers vs. D. & C. R. R. Co. was taken up. This case was tried at the December term and resulted in a verdict of $5,000 for the plaintiff but a new trial was granted, the defendant company. In this case the plaintiff, Myers, claimed damages which he received in May of last year while employed by the defendant, as a brakeman, by being struck by an overhead telephone wire, stretched over their side tracks at Alba, in the yards of the Tindle & Jackson Company. E. N. Clink and D. H. Fitch of East Jordan, appeared for Myers, while Judge Bailey of Mancelona, J. E. Hewitt of Bay City and A. B. Nicholas of East Jordan looked after the interests of the railroad company. This case was another hard fought legal battle, going to the jury Saturday afternoon who returned a verdict awarding the plaintiff damages in the sum of five thousand dollars.

Friday Martha Luebke was given a sentence of one year at Detroit House of Correction and Walter Bannister, who plead guilty of larceny one year at the same institution. Sentence was deferred in the Chaloupka case until next spring.

This afternoon S. A. Crocker, convicted last week of adultry, received a sentence of from one to three years at the Ionia reformatory.

High School Notes

A physical culture class and also a high school chorus has been organized in the high school this semester.

For a week or two there has been fine skating on Pine Lake, which most of the teachers as well as the scholars have enjoyed.

The class honors of the senior class have been awarded to Leslie Crane as valedictorian and Mary Dunlop as salutatorian. These honors were given to the ones having the highest standings during their four years of high school.

Last semester's examination marks were the highest received for a number of years, according to the teachers' reports. Almost every one passed in all of his subjects. We are all going to work hard and see if we can raise the marks still higher this semester.

Monday morning we were greeted by many new faces. The new faces proved to be members of the eighth grade who had satisfactorily passed the examinations. With the usual ceremonies they were taken into the high schools as "Freshies." We give them, one and all, our hearty congratulations.

records of meetings held. Both these I consider important items and the records should contain full information in regard to meetings and receipts.

The books in use are adapted for the purposes of the poor board but compared with the poor records in general use at the present time they are out of date, and it requires considerable more time to keep them written up than the books arranged on the later plans.

In conclusion I desire to say that the clerk and treasurer have promptly given me any assistance or information required.

All of which is respectfully submitted. L. A. DRESSER, Accountant.

This afternoon the proposition of the American Ballot Machine Co. to sell the county voting machines was taken up and voted down and the petition from Charlevoix township asking that the north side be placed in Hayes was laid on the table.

IOWA'S FINE ROADS.

How a Sand Highway Was Improved With Clay.

ECONOMY OF DIRT ROADS.

Why a Council Bluffs Man Advocates Them In Place of the Macadam. The Building and Improvement of Hill Roads.

Iowa has 102,148 miles of highway. Of these 1,453 miles are gravel roads and 211 miles are stone roads. As evidence of the fact that the citizens of this great state are becoming aroused to the importance of highway improvement the state legislature of last passed a law making the state college a highway commission. They realized that such an act would increase the value of the farm lands of the state, would improve the condition of the merchants as well as the farmers and would thus work for the benefit of all classes of society. There is probably no influence which is more potent in the development of the state than that of the good roads. It brings the farmer nearer to town, it increases the prosperity of the merchant and improves the social condition among rural classes.

Since the enactment of this law four good roads conventions and schools have been held. The first two met at Ames, the third at Council Bluffs and the fourth at Waterloo Aug. 10 to 15 inclusive. At each session it was the purpose to supplement the program with practical demonstration work in road building, says H. E. Colby in Farm and Fireside. At Waterloo about half a mile of sand road was improved. This work was done by cutting down a hill in the vicinity of the stretch that was being improved and carrying soil which contained a portion of clay to the sand road. Here it was thoroughly mixed with the sand, thus combining the good effects of both and eliminating, so far as possible, the bad qualities of both.

W. L. Spoon of the good roads department of Washington was in charge of the work. He was also upon the program, and in his address he spoke of the sand road as being the only one which runs uphill both ways. Sand heads the list of bad roads. Wherever a thoroughly good dirt road is examined it will be found to contain at least a portion of sand and a portion of clay. No matter how closely the sand may be packed, there are spaces between the grains that cannot be filled. The proper substance with which to fill these voids is clay. If the two elements are not naturally mixed the only thing to do is to bring them together and mix them mechanically by plowing and harrowing. This should be done while the sand and clay are wet. In fact, they can hardly be too wet to be thoroughly worked together. If the road is sandy the clay should be drawn on. If it is clay the sand should be mixed with the mud. Following up the building of such a good road with persistent dragging will make almost an ideal highway.

Between Council Bluffs and Omaha there is a stretch of road three miles long. Over this 110 wagons on the average pass every day. Each carries a load of five tons or more. This is a dirt road and is kept in fine condition at a thoroughly economical figure. Its builder, Colonel W. F. Baker of Council Bluffs, spoke upon the building and maintenance of a dirt road. He would advocate this in place of macadam, because the dirt road can be built for a great deal less than macadam, and it can be maintained at from 1 to 1½ per cent of the expense necessary for maintaining a macadam road. By the use of the road drag Mr. Baker showed that it would be possible to reduce the road tax at least 50 per cent within six years.

The building and improvement of hill roads were discussed by Mr. Dye. He showed how by the use of the plow and split log drag the processes of nature might be used to improve the hill road. His idea was to plow a furrow at each side of the hill and carry the soil toward the middle of the road. He would not have a crown on a hill road, but he would simply have it so drained that the water would not wash in the middle. Each rain would have a tendency to cut down the surface of the road, carrying the soil from the top of the hill to the bottom. By distributing this by the use of the drag it is possible to materially reduce the grade in the hilly country each year. As an evidence of the practical work in Mr. Dye's system he maintained thirty-six miles of road in a hilly section of the state with an appropriation of $380 a year. It was necessary to ask for a little donated labor, but that was a decidedly minor matter.

Curtis Hill, the state highway engineer of Missouri, spoke upon the building of stone roads. He said that it was necessary to consider the hardness, the toughness and the cementing value of stone in selecting it for the purpose of road building. The gravel which is commonly dug from the gravel bank contains enough lime to provide the cementing qualities. If a roller cannot be afforded it is advisable to spread this gravel as evenly as possible and let the traffic pack it. He would not recommend dumping the gravel in load at a time; because in so doing certain spots of the road become packed and the surface of the road has a wavy contour.

Mr. Foolish—Why are sheep the most dissipated animals? Mr. Silly—Because they gambol all their lives, spend most of their time on the turf, many of them are blacklegs, and all are fleeced in the end.

How to Prepare a Mixture to Cure Rheumatism.

This Town Has Its Share of Dread Disease, Which is Said to Yield to Simple Home Recipe.

To relieve the worst forms of Rheumatism, take a teaspoonful of the following mixture after each meal and a bedtime:

Fluid Extract Dandelion, one-half ounce; Compound Kargon, one ounce; Compound Syrup Sarsaparilla, three ounces.

These harmless ingredients can be obtained from our home druggists, and are easily mixed by shaking them well in a bottle. Relief is generally felt from the first few doses.

This prescription forces the clogged up, inactive kidneys to filter and strain from the blood the poisonous waste matter and uric acid, which causes Rheumatism.

As Rheumatism is not only the the most painful and tortorus disease, but dangerous to life; this simple recipe will no doubt be greatly valued by many sufferers here at home, who should at once prepare the mixture to get this relief.

It is said that a person who would take this prescription regularly, a dose or two daily, or even a few times a week, would never have serious Kidney or Urinary disorders or Rheumatism.

Cut this out and preserve it. Good Rheumatism prescriptions which really relieve are scarce, indeed, and when you need it, you want it badly.

CHINA'S GRAND CANAL.

Sometimes It Holds Water Enough to Float the Boats.

Of some of the crude and outgrown methods used on China's Grand canal a writer in the North China Daily News remarks: "The junction of the real canal with the Wei river was not by means of a lock, but simply a high and steeply sloping mud bank, over which the grain vessels had to be dragged by the force of perhaps many hundreds of men. It should be borne in mind that in China the lock of a canal is not much more like our idea of what that name connotes than it is like a padlock. Amid constant and often serious changes of level, with an uncertain and not infrequently a scanty supply of water, and with a grain fleet which traveled in blocks of some eighty vessels under one officer, it was necessary to devise some way for keeping them together and for transferring them as a consolidated unit with this in view.

"For this reason a Chinese lock on the Grand canal is nothing but a stone gateway into which large boards may be lowered through a groove in the stones, restraining most of the water from its flow, until there is a depth sufficient to float all the craft, when the boards are pulled up and the entire fleet passes through.

"After this the boards are again lowered for another division of the grain boats. In case the water gives out—a by no means unlikely occurrence—there is nothing to do but to wait until more comes from somewhere."

"So you believe in telepathy?"

"Yes," answered Mr. Meekton. "My wife knows what I am going to think about some time before I have made my mind up on the subject myself."—Washington Star.

Neighborhood Notes

Jasper Franklin, who lives in a small house just south of town, had a narrow escape from death. A lad named Bishop living in the village, armed with a 22 calibre gun went to the woods and in passing Franklin's house, fired a shot at a window. The small bullet passed through the glass and struck Franklin in the middle of the breast, passing through two thickness of overcoat and other clothing and knocked Franklin down. The boy was about twenty rods from the house when he shot. The bullet passed close to the head of Mr. Franklin's baby held by its mother. With the pleadings of the boy's mother and a warning that if the lad was ever caught carrying a gun again or to be in any mischief whatever, Mr. Franklin promised to drop the matter. The boy put up a plea that he did not know anybody lived there.

William Bowers of Central Lake, had a rather thrilling experience one day last week while thawing out his pump. He threw a quantity of hay down onto the curbing inside the well and tried to light it by dropping matches into it, but the matches all went out before igniting the hay. He finally crowded his head and shoulders through the narrow opening he had made in the well platform and lighted the hay. He was dressed in a heavy leather jacket and when he tried to get back onto the platform the leather buckled against the planks and he found it a much more difficult matter than to get into the well. The smoke and flames were confusing and his struggles were getting pretty desperate before he finally succeeded in extricating himself. His beard and mustache were burned off, his eyebrows were scorched and one side of his face and neck were badly burned.

At a largely attended meeting of business men of Alpena, at which there were members of both political parties, a club to be known as the citizens' committee was organized for the purpose of pushing a campaign of education in favor of adopting the Des Moines plan of city government for Alpena.

Briefly, the plan of government favored by the citizens' committee is to wipe out ward lines and through a non-partisan primary and an election at which there will be no political designations on the ballots, elect four aldermen-at-large who will make the whole city government, with the recall, the initiative and referendum and civil service in the appointment of city employes to keep them straight.

It is stated that the large catalogue houses experienced a shrinkage in business the past year amounting to over $10,000,000. This was partly due to the greater activity and systematic efforts put forth by the retail men and their trade journals all over the country. Another reason is that people are becoming imbued with the belief that it is better for many reasons, to trade with their home merchants.

Governor Warner is in receipt of a letter in which the new naval vessel United States, now being built at the ship yards at Manitowoc, Wisconsin, is described in regard to the patriotic decorations that are to be installed. In the cabin of the great boat a map of the United States is to be built out of bits of native wood from every state in the union. The unique feature is the fact that each bit of wood will be carved in the exact shape of the state from which it was sent. The matter was referred to the labor commission and Michigan will be represented by a block of white maple.

These ladies would be pleased to hear from ladies interested. They want all ladies and voters also to sign the petition.

To Sample It.

I'd like to get lost in a millionaire's shoes,
At least for a minute or two,
To find if the place were as nice as it seems,
Too pleasant and fine to be true,
To toss off a check without any concern
Or fear of his face, wouldn't you?

I'd like to be there for a day and a half,
His check book a toy in my hand
That furnished the means should I feel so disposed
To buy everything in the land,
An aeroplane, auto or any old thing
My strong constitution would stand.

Say, maybe I wouldn't in luxury's lap
Sit round while my sentence held good.
Enjoying each moment for all I was worth
And right on the job sawing wood
And ordering all I could think of or wish
In language the cook understood!

I think I would purchase sixteen suits of clothes,
A shoe store, a dozen of hats
And overcoats—well, perhaps ten for a start—
And all I could find in cravats
And everything else in proportion or style
From glasses, gold mounted, to spats.

That's only a starter; the list's without end.
But what in a day could one do?
To think about quitting and giving it up
Would make one feel pensive and blue.
I'd like to be Croesus or John D. But, say,
I'd hate to drop back, wouldn't you?

Miss Kilroy Investigates

By TROY ALLISON.

Copyrighted, 1908, by Associated Literary Press

To the casual observer Miss Kilroy did not seem exactly fitted for an investigator of sociological problems. The government had probably been prompted by some wise head when it appointed women to that branch of work.

Formerly when men, important in uniforms and brass buttons, or men in plain clothes, augmented by much pomposity, had made the rounds of the foreign settlements such dignity had frightened or embarrassed the women and children to such an extent that it was an impossibility to obtain freely spoken opinions as to what they liked in America, what they did not like, what they expected Uncle Sam to do for them or what they themselves would offer us a just reason for Uncle Sam doing anything at all for them.

Nobody, however, could possibly take fright at pretty Miss Kilroy, who dressed in the nobbiest white shirt waist suit, a rather gay ribbon on her hat, knocked at the humblest door of the humblest tenements and generally found a welcome.

Grantley, in charge of the temporary quarters provided while the investigation was being carried on in this city, looked up as she entered the office in the afternoon, tired, but jubilant.

"Seems to me I have secured enough information today to make a complete report upon the sociological problem in America," she said, throwing her notes upon her desk.

"Good work," he murmured, wondering why she ever undertook such a job. "It's strange that the youngest, most of—"

"Oh, don't mind me! Go on and say it—the doll baby of the force, the woman who is so pink faced and blond haired that one wouldn't suspect her of having an idea concealed about her, had"—

"No, by George, I didn't mean that! I hesitated because I didn't know that it was exactly proper for me to finish my sentence. I was going to say, since I must refute your impression, the 'most attractive, dainty girl, who looks like a piece of high art' I don't see how it is that she beats the others all hollow when it comes to turning in the results from a day's labor. Would you mind telling me about your methods of procedure, Miss Kilroy?" Grantley was clearly interested in knowing how she did it.

Miss Kilroy laughed somewhat shamefacedly. "I'm afraid I'm not really businesslike," she admitted, "but I proceed upon an instinctive knowledge of human nature. Today I went to interview a great big Irishwoman. When she came to the door and saw me, notebook in hand, she positively glared. There certainly wasn't a glimmer of hospitality in her face. 'What would the likes av ye be afther wantin?' she demanded.

"When I reeled off my set of questions her indignation increased. 'How long have I bin in America an' what av the wurrik I have done? Faith, ain' I think it impudence for a yellow haired chit of a gurrel who lvhleuly spends her time dressing up an' wearing blue ribbons on her hat to come an' call an honest woman from her wurrik to ask questions about her private family. Ye might as well be afther taking yesilf off. Bridget Maguire don't answer me fool questions.'

"I believe, Mr. Grantley, that if she hadn't been so scathing about my blue hatband I would have walked off and abandoned the interview, but that hatband and the 'yellow haired chit of a gurrel' had to be avenged.

"I leaned against her door dejectedly, tried to turn pale and said: 'You mustn't think I want to do it—for I so hate to be rude, but I have to do it for my living. I'm so tired and so warm'—leaning against the door with an attitude indicating an early approach of tears—'and if I don't find out things for them they will dismiss me and I'll have nothing to live on.'

"Mrs. Maguire's bark was fiercer than her bite. Her face changed, she took hold of my arm gently and led me into her one room. 'Ye poor little crayture,' she said, 'I'll make ye a cup of tay right off, an' you'll soon be better.'"

Miss Kilroy waved her notes gayly. "I felt somewhat hypocritical, but I have fitted her into the proper place in the sociological report."

Her chief smiled approval. "It takes a woman to beat all," he said. "Don't you ever meet with more serious annoyances?"

The girl blushed. "Sometimes the men stare at me a little more than I like. There is a party of Syrians in Jing's court. One of them is a fine specimen. He was dressed in beaded jackets and—er—things and had a red sash and a red fez or something fantastic on his raven locks. He would inspire an artist to paint a 'Son of the Desert' or a 'Type From the Orient.' I have had several interviews with him, because he speaks less fractured English than the others, and yesterday he insisted upon presenting me with a string of red glass beads. He—well, he was slightly effusive and called me a maid of the dawn whose hair was kissed by the rising sun. I decided that I wouldn't interview him any more. He seemed inclined to be importunate."

Grantley chuckled. "Good thing you have closed the episode. The next chapter might have disclosed the oriental son of a gun desert bearing away upon a flying steed the maid of the dawn, who struggled and protested that she preferred Americans and their customs. Might have caused international complications by slighting your

Even as it is, he may spoil your window ledge and twang a guitar or a zither, or whatever it is that Syrians do twang. He may cause you to lose a whole night's sleep."

Miss Kilroy commenced transcribing her notes tranquilly. "He's relegated to the past," she declared airily. "His song is sung."

The elevator boy stuck his head through the doorway. "There are two queer looking females, fixed up in some kind of foreign trappings, that want to see Miss Kilroy," he announced.

"Show them in, Tommy—that is, if you don't mind, Mr. Grantley." She looked at him inquiringly.

"Not at all. I will step into the adjoining room if they will be embarrassed, or I'll listen to your style in interviewing," he said teasingly.

Miss Kilroy smiled when her visitors entered in the very evident throes of formality. "Oh, it's you, is it, Zuleika, and your pretty daughter."

The old woman smiled and nodded until her ear pendants jingled. "We come see maiden like dawn," she announced genially.

Miss Kilroy remembered the orders of the compilation and bid the grea to blush. "Did you come to tell us some more about your beautiful country?" she asked graciously.

The woman shook her head. "Come to tell-a you of my son," she beamed.

"Has he succeeded in getting a position?" interestedly.

"No, but on the work we come, is it Hareeda?" She appealed to her daughter delightedly.

The girl's black eyes glowed with importance. "We—we women—it is always so," she explained ingratiatingly. "It is for us to tell the fair one that she is beloved"—

"An' you marry my son—yes?" broke in the mother eagerly.

Miss Kilroy sank back in her chair weakly. "Of all things!" she gasped.

"You likee my son?" urged Zuleika, leaning over and patting caressingly the limp hand of the object of her son's affection.

Miss Kilroy looked dazed. "I—I can't marry your son," she announced feebly.

"But my son—my son! He likee you, he marry you. The way you smile make him happy. I ask you to marry my son!" her gestures expressing a fervent solicitude that exceeded her vocabulary.

"But I don't want to marry your son—hate your son!" declared Miss Kilroy desperately.

The eyes of the two matrimonial agents flashed and their voices rose angrily. Miss Kilroy put her blond head upon the desk and sobbed. Grantley considered this an auspicious moment for interference. He rose and spoke blandly to the mother, who stood panting with indignation at the slight to her offspring.

"It is perhaps best for me to explain the situation, madam," and he bowed low in a manner which he hoped would impress them with an idea that he had learned his manners in foreign court circles. "It is not that Miss Kilroy scorns your son; it is that"— He hesitated for time to invent something soothingly plausible. "It is only that you have come too late. Miss Kilroy is already betrothed," he added gravely, "and therefore expresses regret that she cannot consider your son."

The blond head of the sociological investigator was raised abruptly from the desk. Zuleika, however, repeated uncomprehendingly "Betrothed?"

Grantley said slowly, "Betrothed—affianced—to be wed—espousa," he added desperately.

The mother and sister of the rejected looked at each other with a flash of understanding. "Ah-h!" they breathed.

"To me—to me," Grantley tapped his breast convincingly.

The woman's face was again wreathed in smiles. "I tella my son. I tella him that the beautiful maid not strong to cook, to wash. He marry Syrian now. May the rising sun forever kiss your hair, eyes, and may your children be as many as the pomegranate seed," she said to Grantley with growing cordiality.

When the door closed behind them Grantley stood with his feet apart and his hands in his pockets, according to the method of meditating man.

"By Jove!" he said finally.

A slight sniff was Miss Kilroy's only contribution toward relieving the awkwardness of the situation.

"We're engaged," he announced cheerfully.

"You're a brute!" she answered chokingly.

"I must say your interviews are conducted upon rather original lines," he teased.

Miss Kilroy's shoulders were shrugged resentfully. "I'll never interview another foreigner so long as I live," she declared.

"Certainly you must give that up—when we are married," he suggested, a twinkle in his eye.

She showed for an instant a pair of indignant, tearful eyes. "We are not engaged," she declared stormily, and her head went back to cover of the desk.

Grantley leaned over her gently. "I wish—we were," he suggested softly.

A sudden tense quietness settled on the bowed figure.

"I have wished for a long time—that we were," he repeated insistently.

He stooped down until he could whisper, "Aren't we, dear?" and the blond head nodded acquiescence.

The Man's Way.

"Is your husband suffering from the toothache?"

"Well," answered the woman with a timid expression, "he says he's suffering, but from the way he's bragging about it I'm half suspicious that he's enjoying it."

Wet blotting paper held strong solution of saltpeter dry it and burn a piece three inches square on a plate in the sleeping room. It will afford quick relief to those suffering from asthma.

MEDICINE DOSES FOR BABIES

How to Give Young Children Castor Oil and Powders.

"Is there any way of giving baby medicine so that the whole household is not upset and at least three doses are administered before he gets cured?" asked a distracted parent. Indeed there is. Like everything else, it is simple when one knows how, and even castor oil will slip down in a second, however baby may wish it wouldn't.

Castor oil should never be given without first heating it a little. This does not mean getting it hot nor putting a burning spoon into the little mouth. The object of heating is merely to thin a little the consistency of the heavy oil, and the most gentle warmth will do this. This change alone makes the liquid go down more easily.

When this dose is to be given it is well to call in members of the family to act as assistant. Put baby down on the bed on his back and have ready a small napkin or other bit of linen wrung out in cold water. Fold this flat just large enough to go under baby's chin up to the ears. Give this to the assistant and instruct her to her duty, which is merely that of holding the wet compress against the edge at the psychological moment. This second is when you gently hold the infant's nose, which you are to do just as you put the oil well back into his mouth, but not in the throat, which would then cause him to choke.

Holding the nose destroys the sense of taste, and the wet compress causes a flow of saliva that helps to send the medicine down. The thing necessary to success is that all shall be done together and that the oil shall fall on the precise spot on the tongue—that is to say, it should drop as close to the throat as it can without going into the throat. To put it too near the front of the mouth gets it all over baby's gums and gives him full benefit of the nasty flavor. If an infant fights at taking any kind of liquid medicine it may be given in this way, but as a rule the little one swallows any unconsciously.

If medicine in a powdered form is to be given I think the simplest and for a young child the best way is to give it dry. Open his mouth and have the dose ready on the point of a spoon. Drop this quickly well back on the tongue and then nurse or give him a bottle at once.

How to Roast a Chicken.

Wash the chicken out well in two or three waters and add a little soda to the last water but one to remove any doubtful odor. Fill the body and crop of the chicken with a stuffing of bread crumbs, butter, pepper and salt, sew it up and roast an hour or more, according to the size. Baste two or three times with butter and water, afterward with its own gravy. Put a little water into the dripping pan at first to prevent burning. Stew the giblets and neck in water enough to cover and after removing to a hot dish pour this into the drippings, boil up once, add the giblets chopped fine, thicken with browned flour, boil again and send to the table in a gravy boat.

How to Take Fruit Stains From Linen.

For removing fruit stains there is nothing more effective than the sulphur bleach. Lay a spoonful of sulphur on a plate and sprinkle with a few drops of alcohol. Over this place a tin funnel with the point upward. Touch a lighted match to the alcohol, wet the stained linen and hold the spot over the opening in the point of the funnel. The sulphur fumes will remove the most obstinate stain, seldom requiring more than one application. Rinse and wash the linen at once to prevent rotting the material.

How to Cook Rice Japanese Style.

The Japs excel in cooking rice, and their method is exceedingly simple. Put one cupful of rice which has been thoroughly washed over the fire with five of fast boiling water. Add salt and when it has boiled for fifteen minutes set the saucepan uncovered in a moderate oven. In fifteen minutes the water will have completely evaporated and every grain be distinct and fluffy. Not a grain will stick to the saucepan.

How to Clean Gold Lace.

Gold or silver lace can be cleaned if it is dropped in a pint of boiling water containing a quantity of white soap and ammonia. Do not attempt to rub lace, but rinse it carefully and pin to a towel to dry. Warm spirits of wine will remove the tarnished appearance should it remain, though usually ammonia will remove the dull luster, but it may injure the color of a silk thread should it be interwoven in the lace.

How to Keep Salt Dry and Free.

To prevent salt in saltcellars from becoming damp and lumpy, when filling them put in ten to twelve pieces of rice. This will not come through the holes in the cover of the saltcellars, but will break the lumps of salt and gather the moisture. Thus the salt is always dry and fine.

How to Make Cranberry Sauce.

Put one quart of cranberries over the fire with half a pint of cold water and let them cook until broken in pieces. Add a pound of sugar and cook until this melts, no longer; as lengthy cooking tends to make the sauce bitter. Take from the fire and set aside to cool.

How to Bake Fruit Pies.

Every cook knows how annoying it is to have the juice from pies boil over leaving the pie with but half the original juice. This can be prevented by taking a strip of clean muslin an inch or so wide and wetting it well with cold water. Lay this around the edge of the pie and then bake. The juice will not boil over if this is done, and the pie will be vastly improved.

the object of their "I told you so" was serenely ignorant

Entering the town, there were few stirring on the sunny streets, but he could not but be aware that those he met stopped to gaze after him. Some indeed followed. His first objective point was a jeweler's, where he could turn his gold dust into readier coin for needful purchases. He saw a sign next the Mountain Valley House and entered.

The jeweler weighed the dust, with a distrustful frown, but Harry's head was turned away. He was reading a freshly printed placard tacked on the wall, an offer of reward for the detection of the sluice thief. He read it through mechanically, for as he read there came from the street outside a sound that touched a muffled chord in his brain. It was the exhaust of a motor car.

He thrust the money the goldsmith grudgingly handed him into his pocket and turned to the door. A long red automobile had stopped at the curb. Two men whom it carried were just entering the hotel. Something in the sight of the long, low "racer" reminded Harry—of what? His eye traced its polished lines, noting its cunning mechanism, its build for silent speed, with the eager lighting of a connoisseur. He took a step toward it, oblivious to all about him.

He did not note that men were gathering, that the nearest saloon was emptying of its occupants. Nor did he see a girl on horseback, with a tiny child before her on the saddle, who reined up sharply opposite.

The rider was Jessica, the child an ecstatic five-year-old she had picked up on the fringe of the town to canter in with her hands gripping the pommel of the saddle. She saw Harry's position instantly and guessed it perilous. What did the men mean to do? She leaned forward, a swift apprehension in her face.

Harry came back suddenly to a realization of his surroundings. He looked about him, startled, his cheek darkening its red, every muscle instinctively tightening. He saw danger in the lowering faces, and the old lust of daring leaped up instantly to grapple with the rejuvenated character.

Devlin's voice came over the heads of the crowd as, lithe and shirt sleeved, he strode across the street:

"Hand over the dust you've stolen before you are tarred and feathered, Hugh Stires!"

Harry looked at him, surprised, his mind instantly recurring to the placard he had seen. Here was a tangible accusation.

"I have stolen nothing," he responded quietly.

"Where did he get what he just sold me?" The jeweler's sour query rose behind him from the doorway.

"We'll find that out!" was the rough rejoinder.

In face of his threatening peril Jessica forgot all else—the restive horse, the child. She sprang to the ground, her face pained and indignant, and started to run across the street. But, with a cry of dismay, she turned back. The horse had caught sight of the red automobile and, snorting and wild eyed, had swung into the roadway.

"It's Devlin's kid!" some one cried out, and Devlin, turning, went suddenly ashen. The baby was the one soft spot in his ruthless heart. He sprang toward the animal, but the movement and the hands clutching at the bridle sent it to a leaping terror. In another instant it had broken through the ring of bystanders and, frenzied at its freedom, dashed down the long, level street with the child clinging to the saddle pommel.

It was all the work of a moment, one of panic and confusion, through which rang Jessica's scream of remorse and fright. Torpor held the crowd—all save one, whose action followed the scream as leap follows the spur. In a single step Harry gained the automobile. With an instantaneous movement he pushed the lever down and jerked the throttle wide. The machine bounded into his pave, the people rolling back before it, and, gathering headway, darted after the runaway.

The spectators stood staring. "He'll never catch him," said Michael Halloran, who had joined the crowd. "Funeral Hollow's only a mile away." With others he hurried to the hotel balcony, where he could watch the exciting race. Jessica stood stock still, as blanched as Devlin, wringing her hands.

With the first bound of the car under him, as the crowd was snatched behind, a weird, exultant thrill shot through Harry's every nerve. Each bolt and bar he knew as one would tell his fingers. Somewhere, at some time, he had known such flight—through mellow sunlight, with the air singing past. Where? When?

Not for the fraction of a second, however, did his gaze waver. He knew that the flat on which the town was built fell away in a hollow ravine to the southward—he could see it from the cabin doorway—a stretch of breakneck road only a mile ahead. Could the child hold on? Could he distance those frenzied hoofs in time? The arrow of the indicator stole forward on the dial.

Far behind as the crowd watched a cry rose from the hotel balcony. It was Barney McGinn, the freighter, with a glass at his eye. "He's gaining!" he shouted. "He has almost overtaken the horse!"

The horse's first fury of speed was tiring. The steel sinew was creeping closer. A thunder of hoofs in pursuit would have maddened the flying animal, but the gilding thing that was now so close to him came on with noiseless swiftness. Harry had reserved with the nicety of a practiced hand a last increment of speed. With the front wheels at the horse's flank, he drew suddenly on this. As the car responded he swerved it sharply in and, holding with one hand, leaned far out from the step and lifted the child from the saddle.

He lifted the child from the saddle.

The automobile halted again before the hotel amid a hush. The men who a little while before had been ripe for violence now stood in shamefaced silence. It was Jessica who ran forward and took the child, still sobbing a little, from Harry's hands. One long look passed between them—a look on her part brimming with a great gratitude for his lifting of her weight of dread and compunction and with something besides that mantled her cheeks with rich color. She kissed the child and placed her in her father's arms.

Devlin's countenance broke up. He struggled to speak, but could not, and, burying his face in the child's dress and crying like a baby, he crossed the street hastily to his own door.

Harry stepped to the pavement with a dull kind of embarrassment at the manifold scrutiny. He had misconstrued Jessica's flushing silence, and the inference stung. The fierce zest was gone, and the rankling barb of accusation smarted. He should apologize to the owner, he reflected satirically, for helping himself to the automobile—he who stole gold dust, he at whose door the town laid its unforfeited thieveries, he who was the scapegoat for the town's offenses.

That owner, in very fact, stood just then in the hotel doorway regarding him with interest. He was the sheriff of the county. He was about to step forward when an interruption occurred. A scuffle and a weak bark sounded, and a lean brown streak shot across the pavement.

"Rummy!" cried Harry. "Rummy!"

Through some clink of the dead wall in his brain the name slipped out, a tiny atom of flotsam retrieved from the wreck of memory. That was all, but to the animal which had just found its lost master the word meant a subjugation of delight, the clearing of the puzzle of namelessness that had perplexed its caring brain. The dog's heaven was reached.

Down on his knees on the pavement went Harry, with his arms about the starved, palpitating little creature and his cheek against its shaggy coat. In another moment he had picked it up in his arms and was walking up the street. He went back to his cabin with a strange feeling of exaltation and disappointment, exaltation at the recurrence of something of his old adventures, disappointment at the flushed silence with which Jessica had received the child.

Mexican Timber.

According to data in the dairy consular and trade reports, there are from 20,000,000 to 25,000,000 acres of first class timber in Mexico. The heaviest stands of pine and oak are found in the states of Chihuahua, Durango, Jalisco, Michoacan and Guerrero and are said to compare favorably with similar stands in this country as regards quality, diameter and length of clear body. In addition to the open pine stands there are said to occur some twenty-five varieties of hard wood not well known to the lumber markets. Descriptive notes are given of the wood of many of these varieties, together with data on the chicle industry, transportation developments, rating and prices of wood, cost of logging and manufacturing and statistics of the lumber trade with the United States for the years 1905 and 1908 and a list of wholesale prices of American lumber f. o. b. How to Make Linoleum.

A good, strong linoleum may be made from old brussels carpet that has not been worn through. Tack the carpet right side down on the floor and then apply paint, giving it a large number of coats, the last few coats to be of the desired color, allowing each coat to dry well. If the paint begins to wear apply a fresh coat of paint. The effect of mosaic tile may be produced by dotting the last coat with different colors of paint.

There is a luncheon dish which calls for fried apples and onions served with bacon. The apples are sliced round without peeling, and the peeled onion is added, thinly sliced. These are fried together. The bacon is fried to a crisp brown and served with the others.—New York Times.

INDIGESTION ENDS

Stomach Distress Vanishes Five Minutes Later

Eat Sausages and New Bread or Other Favorite Food Without Fear of Dyspepsia.

You can eat anything your stomach craves without fear of a case of Indigestion or Dyspepsia, or that your food will ferment or sour on your stomach if you will occasionally take a little Diapepsin after eating.

Your meals will taste good, and anything you eat will be digested nothing can ferment or turn into acid or poison or stomach gas, which causes Belching, Dizziness, a feeling of fullness after eating, Nausea, Indigestion (like a lump of lead in stomach), Biliousness, Heartburn, Water brash, pain in stomach and intestines or other symptoms.

Headaches from the stomach are absolutely unknown where this effective remedy is used. Diapepsin really does all the work of a healthy stomach. It digests your meals when your stomach can't. Each triangule will digest all the food you can eat and leave nothing to ferment or sour.

Get a large 50-cent case of Pape's Diapepsin from your druggist and start taking today and by tomorrow you will actually brag about your healthy, strong Stomach, for you then can eat anything and everything you want without the slightest discomfort or misery, and every particle of impurity and Gas that is in your stomach and intestines is going to be carried away without the use of laxatives or any other assistance.

THE HORSEMAN.

Many a good driving horse has his years of usefulness cut short by being in the hands of an incompetent person. One of the most common ways to injure a good driving horse is by driving him hard in cool weather and after heating him up allow him to stand in the cold unblanketed. A horse driven until sweaty should never be permitted to cool off in the cold atmosphere. Blanket him or put him in a warm stable. The neglect of such precaution has ruined many a valuable horse.

Colic Cure For Horses.

A good colic cure if given in season is two tablespoonfuls sweet spirits of niter and a tablespoonful of laudanum. It is wise to keep a staple article of colic cure always on hand. Attention to food and drink will prevent this trouble in most cases. Salts are a good laxative, and linseed oil also. It is much better to correct this trouble with small doses in the beginning than to wait until a powerful dose is necessary and run the risk of inflammation. A bitter tonic is often needed by both cows and horses. Dried and powdered poplar or cherry bark is as good as anything that can be used. As an alternative sulphur is the simplest remedy known.

Breaking the Colt.

It is a mistake to allow inexperienced men, young or old, to give a well bred colt his first lessons in harness. A good colt breaker is very valuable to any stock farm or any community where highly bred trotting stock is bred and raised. There is greater danger of ruining colts that develop speed rapidly when young than those which mature slowly. Many a promising race winning prospect has been ruined for life by injudicious handling when young.

Feeding Farm Horses.

In feeding farm horses to secure the highest efficiency let the aim be to select roughage materials that are nutritious and wholesome and at the same time free from mold and dust with the proper supplement of corn or oats or other home grown grain materials. When this practice is followed you will get efficiency and the maximum of work at the least expenditure of effort and expense.

Breeding Good Horses.

Every community where horses are bred should have a good thoroughbred stallion. The French government has been using them for years to improve its horses. Crossed on good mares they make the best fire engine horses, the best express and transfer horses, the best all day road horses, the best quick, active, big horse for any purpose, one that can draw a big load and can go on a trot on a hot day without getting tired or panting.

Bats In a Bedroom.

An army of bats invaded the bedroom of a rectory in Dorsetshire, and from every part of the room they could be heard dinging against mirrors and glasses, knocking against the ceiling, while too often to be pleasant one would hit against the head of the bed. The rector struck a match and lit a candle. This served to attract the creatures nearer to that particular part of the room in which the bed was placed. Then the reverend gentleman placed the candle near an open window, only to find that other bats began to come in, so that it was impossible to count how many there were in the room. Another plan was tried. All the curtains were drawn aside and the east window opened wide. The light was put out, and the visitors gradually dispersed.—London Standard.

Michigan Roads.

1. What is a bad road, built at small expense?

A bad road means a road that is not graded, one so low in the center that the water stands therein and that is "partly navigable and hardly travelable."

2. What is a fair road, built at medium expense?

A fair road is a dirt road, graded and crowned, ditched and tiled, if it needs to be, so that the water goes off and away and is fairly passable every day in the year.

3. What is a good road, built at large expense?

A good road is a road well graded, crowned, ditched and tiled, if it needs to be, and the traveled part of the road covered with a good quality of gravel or crushed stone so that it is smooth, dustless, durable and passable every day in the year.

4. Who paid the whole cost of building and repairing the roads under the statute labor system?

The farmers in the townships only; everybody else used the roads free.

5. Who pays the whole cost of building and repairing the roads under the cash road tax system?

The farmers and the people in the villages only; everybody else uses the roads free.

6. Who pays the whole cost of building and repairing the roads under the combined cash road tax and county road system?

The people living in the county only; everybody living outside the county uses the road free.

7. Who pays the whole cost of building and repairing the roads under the combined cash road tax, the county road and the state reward road system?

All the people of the state. A road connects the village and the city with the farmer, as much as it does the farmer with the village and city; and the main roads between the villages and cities are but extensions of the main streets in those villages and cities. The village and city men should pay a portion of the cost of building and keeping the same in repair.

8. What new factor will enter more and more into the problem of building and maintaining roads?

The automobile. (See pages 20-25 of State Master Horton's Annual Address.)—State Bulletin.

Deer Lake Grange No. 1269.

Deer Lake grange met in regular session February 6, and was called to order by Worthy Master J. H. Sudmann, having only a few bills to discuss the members were soon ready to enjoy the literary program furnished the Worthy Lecturer, Sister Helen Moses. Several songs were sung also some very good readings a few good stories and several suggessions for the good of the order were made by different members.

Plans were made for a spelling match and chicken-pie supper February 22, accompanied by a masquerade dance.

After having spent a very enjoyable evening the members returned home thinking of another enjoyable meeting to come in two weeks.

Marion Center Grange No. 956.

Marion Center Grange met in regular session February 3, and was opened in usual form by Worthy Master Ward with all officers in their respective places. One application for membership was received and referred to committee. The purchasing agent reported $113 worth of clover seed purchased and more ordered.

Lecturer's hour was taken up with the following interesting program.

Song Anna Ingalls and Lillian Flanders.

STATE ROUND-UP

Will be held at Mount Pleasant February 23-26.

A Splendid Program Arranged With Many Eminent Speakers.

The annual round up of the Michigan Farmers' Institute societies will be held at Mt. Pleasant February 23, 24, 25 and 26th. For the four days a splendid program has been arranged and every farmer in this section, who can possibly do so, ought to plan to attend. The program is varied in the extreme, touching every phase of farm life. The subjects are grouped so that each day will be devoted to special lines. The opening day will be largely given up to the discussion of soil and methods of handling it as well as the growing of some of the more important crops. Wednesday, the second day, is used for topics relating to corn and other forage crops Thursday will be for fruit and dairy and Friday will be live stock day. Governor Warner and Lieutenant Governor Kelley have both arranged to be present and several speakers from other states have been secured.

Among the speakers from other states is J. P. Davis of Indiana, who has an enviable record as institute lecturer and his methods of discussing corn culture and kindred subjects is not only unique but will not fail to impress his hearers.

The hotels, restaurants and churches have arranged to furnish meals at reasonable rates and the local board of trade will provide houses for any overflow from the hotels.

Any one desiring a copy of the program may address L. R. Taft, Agricultural College, Mich.

It Worked Both Ways.

The boy took in the stranger's visiting card. In a few moments he came back and returned the card, saying, "He's busy in a directors' meeting and can't see anybody."

"Excuse me," said the serious looking stranger, and he took the card and wrote under his name the letters "Y. M. C. A." Then he said, "Let him see the card again."

The boy departed, only to return in a moment with the card, which he laid before the caller. It had been changed so that the letters now read, "You Must Call Again."—New York Herald.

THREE EMPIRES.

Governments That Practically Sprang Into Being Overnight.

Prior to Jan. 18, 1871, the German empire, as we know it today, had no existence. Instead it was a jumble of kingdoms, states, duchies, grand duchies and principalities, all joined together by a like language and common political aspirations, it is true, but otherwise quite separate and distinct.

Then came the historic ceremony in the Hall of Mirrors at Versailles. Paris had just been captured by King William of Prussia, and it was held to be a fitting time and place to proclaim him the first German emperor. Never since the dawn of history was an empire born more dramatically.

By a strange irony of fate, too, its birth took place amid the ruins of the French empire, itself the creation of a day, or, rather, to be strictly accurate, of a night. France went to bed on the evening of Dec. 1, 1851, a republic. When it awoke next morning it was an empire. During the hours of darkness Paris had been occupied by troops and the prince-president had become Napoleon III.

Equally sudden and almost as sensational in its way was the birth of the modern Greek empire. After the yoke of the Turks had been thrown off in the war of independence the country became a republic. But the people soon tired of that democratic form of government and promptly proceeded to assassinate their first and only president. Then they met together, elected a king and settled themselves down to be ruled by him in a quite orderly and contented fashion.—San Francisco Chronicle.

Exploiting the Antique.

A gang of swindlers arrested by the Toulouse police had for stock in trade a beautiful antique cabinet and a considerable stock of audacity. With these they took, for a short lease, a historic château near Toulouse, installing a venerable old lady to play the part of owner. Then they found a collector of antiques, persuaded him to visit the château and sold him the really valuable cabinet at a good round price. After the bargain was concluded they invited the victim to lunch, and while he was eating the meal the real cabinet was replaced by a perfect imitation, which the victim carried off with him. The swindlers, before their arrest, succeeded in selling their cabinet thirty-three times, at prices varying from $500 to $3,000.

The Anchor.

"Captain," remarked the nuisance on shipboard who always asks foolish questions, "what is the object in throwing the anchor overboard?"

"Young man," replied the old salt, "do you understand the theory of seismic disturbances? Well, we throw the anchor overboard to keep the ocean from slipping away in the fog. See?"

LESSONS DRAWN FROM VICTORIES

Of Charlevoix High School Foot Ball Team.

AS EXPLAINED BY DR. CROUTER

In Presenting Team With Large Picture Monday Morning.

To Succeed Requires Sacrifices—Tenacity and Determination and Lead a Manly Life With a Purpose.

Monday morning a very pleasant event took place at the Central School, when Dr. Crouter, president of the Board of Education, presented the foot ball team a picture of themselves, and also a small picture of the team was given to all pupils in the room. The doctor in presenting the picture made a few remarks, which in every word teaches a lesson and explained why we all are so proud of our boys and why success in athletics means success in other lines of school work and life, which were responded by Captain Small in a very pleasing manner. The doctor's remarks are below.

"My task this morning is a very pleasant one, last year I was all but discouraged. There was so much friction, some of our students seemed to think they could graduate in the Charlevoix schools without work. This year there is a happy change. Every fellow in the Charlevoix High School has a desire to make his life a successful one. He wants to become strong physically, intellectually and morally. But every foot ball player knows, that if a man would be strong physically, he must pay the price. He must eat what his trainer sets before him, he must sacrifice things which other fellows enjoy. It is the same in attaining to intellectual and moral strength. If a fellow wants to develop his mind, he must study and work his hardest to develop his intellectual capacity, and it takes sacrifice just as much as to become strong physically. The same determination and tenacity as practiced on the foot ball field, can be practiced in the same way in the class room and on the street.

To illustrate from your own experiences in your games last fall, particularly in your games with Petoskey and Harbor Springs when the visitors had the ball within a few feet of making a touch down. It was the united cry of "Hold 'em, Hold 'em, Charlevoix," from several hundred rooters your friends, that encouraged you and enabled you to keep them from gaining ground or scoring a touch down.

As you go on through life, you will reach places, when you have to stand alone, as you did at Petoskey when you lost the game, and no one will be back of you to cry "Hold 'em," and that is the time for you to stand like a rock and say to yourself "hold 'em, hold 'em."

"For the man who wins is the man who works,
Who neither labor nor trouble shirks,
Who uses his hands, his head, his eyes,
The man who wins is the man who tries."

It is your good work, your manly, gentlemanly demeanor and clean foot ball play on the field that we are proud of, and we take the greatest pleasure in presenting to the Charlevoix High School foot ball team of 1908, this photograph of the best boys, the best officers, and the best foot ball team in Michigan or the world. May your lives shine as brightly through future years, as they did last fall on the fields."

COUNTY ROAD INSTITUTE

Will be Held at Court House Saturday February 27.

We have received notice from State Highway Commissioner Earle that the county road institute for Charlevoix county, will be held at the court house, Saturday February 27, beginning at ten o'clock a. m.

Highway Commissioners in attendance will receive expenses and one day's pay. All who are interested in good roads, and everybody should be, should make it a point to attend.

OPPOSES COUNTY SYSTEM

Prominent Charlevoix County Farmer in Boyne Citizen.

States Why He Will Work Against Its Adoption.

The question of good roads will come before the voters of Charlevoix county this spring:

Good roads is certainly what we all want. Good roads makes a man's farm more valuable, affords better market conditions, makes life in the country more congenial, causes people to get better acquainted with their neighbors and a thousand and one things can be traced directly or indirectly to the condition of the highways. It also helps out the man in town. If one can see the roads leading to a town you can almost tell what the town is like. Good roads makes large sales for the merchant, implement dealers, etc., increase the livery man's earnings and this causes better shipping. So good highways is perhaps one of the most essential things in any community. The next thing is how to get them. In the southern part of the state where it has been settled for years there are plenty of roads that could be called good. In Charlevoix county there are a few but the greater part of our roads are poor but no more than any new country, in fact I think our country has reason to be proud of the advancement they have made in this direction. Twenty years ago Charlevoix county was almost a wilderness, today it is practically settled and fast becoming one of the best counties in the state.

Now we are taking a step forward or backward. If we adopt the county road system it certainly means the spending of large amounts of money in certain localities to the detriment; for the time being at least, of all the rest of our county. What we need is not one or two extra good roads but to improve every road in the county as rapidly as possible now; if your town has a county road tax of five or six hundred dollars and none of the road is built in it, that means practically that much you are short of your highway money, on the other hand if your town is where the road is being built, then every town is sending money to add to your highway tax so the township that gets the benefit stands less highway expense than if the system was not in operation. The aim of our laws should always be to give every man a hundred cents benefit for every dollar he pays in taxes as much so as if he was purchasing any other necessity. For this reason I am compelled to condemn the county road system, the state reward or any other system that takes from one man or body of men and gives to another.

At the present for the year ending June 30, 1908, there was $150,000.00 appropriated for state reward and $10,000 was appropriated for running expense of the state highway department outside of regular

STATE TICKET IS NAMED

At Republican State Convention Held Thursday.

BLAIR AND STONE AT THE HEAD

Few Contests For Places on the Ticket.

Resolutions Adopted—Upper Peninsula Has Three—Detroit Two—Who the Candidates Are.

Supreme Justice—
CHARLES A. BLAIR, Jackson,
JOHN W. STONE, Marquette.

Board of Regents—
W. L. CLEMENTS, Bay City,
GEORGE P. CODD, Detroit.

Superintendent Public Instruction—
LUTHER L. WRIGHT, Ironwood.

Member of Board of Education—
WILLIAM J. McKONE, Albion.

Board of Agriculture—
I. ROY ALTEKRUSE, Highland
W. H. WALLACE, Saginaw, six year term;
ROBERT D. GRAHAM, Grand Rapids
A. J. DOHERTY, Clare four year term;
WILLIAM J. OBERHOEFER, Stephenson,
WILLIAM CARPENTER, Detroit, two year term.

The Republican state convention held at Grand Rapids Thursday, was one of the best attended spring conventions held in several years. William M. Smith, of St. Johns was chairman and Will A. Watts of Detroit secretary.

The ticket as named above was nominated by acclamation, with the exception of Mr. Codd for regent, who received 705 votes to 571 for Henry W. Corey of East Lake, who was a candidate for re-nomination, and Judge Carpenter and Mr. Oberdorfer, who were opposed by W. K. Prudden of Lansing and C. J. Monroe of South Haven, who received a small vote.

The resolutions adopted urge the conservation of the forests, economy in state expenditures, repudiates the idea that delegate representatives of an honest people are less honest than the people they represent and demands the continuance of conventions for conference upon state and national policies and for the formulation of platforms.

Charles A. Blair, who heads the ticket, is at present Chief Justice of the supreme court. John W. Stone, for second justice, has had a long career on the circuit bench in the upper peninsula. Mr. Clements and Mr. Codd, for regents, are both graduates of the University Mr. Wright, for superintendent of public instruction, was elected last fall for a second term in that position but under the constitution is required to again be elected this spring. With the exception of Judge Carpenter the candidates for state board of agriculture and board of education are all members of the present boards.

MRS. PHOEBE LYNN DEAD

Was a Former Resident of This City Died Last Thursday

Mrs. George Lynn died at her home in Petoskey Thursday morning after a very short illness.

Mrs. Lynn's mother, Mrs. Holland, died the Saturday previous and the care of her mother had overtaxed her strength so she was unable to recover from an attack of pneumonia.

Mrs. Lynn was born in Eveline township and formerly lived in this city, where she was active in church and W. C. T. U. work, as she was in Petoskey.

She leaves, besides her husband, two children, William, aged twelve and Eva Marie, aged two, two sisters, Mrs. Kay Rossman of Chicago, and Mrs. Walter Hall, of Post Falls, Idaho, and two brothers, Nelson Holland, of this city and Gilbert Holland, of Ironton.

The funeral was held from the home Saturday, Rev. W. J. Wilson officiating. Burial at Greenwood.

County Treasurer Lewis has adorned his office this week with the head of the deer which he killed while on his hunting trip last fall. It is nearly a perfect specimen.

ORGANIZATION EFFECTED

Of Antrim County Fruit Growers at Bellaire.

Meeting Was Held Friday Will Form a Corporation.

On Friday last, the fruit growers of this section met at Bellaire pursuant to call. There were present representatives from seven townships: Banks, Torch Lake, Forrest Home, Kearney, Custer, Helena and Milton. A good dinner was furnished by the hospitable people of Bellaire, and promptly at one o'clock the meeting was called to order by the temporary chairman Charles S. Guile, Dr. Boalt acting as temporary secretary.

Mr. Guile addressed the meeting and outlined some of the proposed lines of effort of the society and the plans projected to make the organization effective and available as a means of attaining desired ends. Letters were read from friends of the movement in Oregon and other points showing the improvements possible in the quantity, quality and marketability of product by skill and scientific methods in cultivation and handling. Also how these ends could be aided and the betterments hastened by organization along the proposed lines. One letter asserted and showed how and why the better methods used were enabling western fruit of a quality inferior to that possible here to pay freights of fifty to sixty-five cents a barrel and yet drive Michigan and other eastern grown fruit from the market.

It was decided that in order to insure stability and a permanence of interest in the association, it was advisable to incorporate under the statute provided for the State Horticultural society. This necessitated the legal publication of notices of meeting for organization and recital therein of the objects of the association, the amount of capital stock, and other details before a permanent organization could be effected.

The amount of stock was fixed at $25,000, divided into 2,500 shares of $10 each, and a large amount of stock was subscribed on the spot. A tentative organization was effected by the election of R. E. Morrow, president, Chas. S. Guile, secretary, William J. Dewey, treasurer, with a chairman for each township. These officers will have to be re-elected or their election confirmed by the stockholders after the permanent organization.

The time for the meeting for permanent organization was March 6, but was afterwards changed to Friday, March 12, as the first date did not allow sufficient time for the necessary publication.

The matter of a name for the organization has not yet been definitely decided, but inasmuch as the term "Intermediate Valley" has become sufficiently advertised and known to the world at large, to already have a distinct value of its own, it is deemed advisable for the interests of the society to retain the name "Intermediate Valley Fruit Growers Association," which will for the purposes of the organization be construed to include so much of adjacent territory as may lie within the county of Antrim, the advantages and interests of the whole county being identical.

Mr. Guile was in Central Lake Monday and secured the names of a number of leading business men there as stockholders and a like effort will be made in other neighborhoods, giving the organization at the start the prestige of a thoroughly representative lot of men as organizers.

SOCIALIST NAME TICKET

At State Convention at Grand Rapids Last Week.

The Socialists held their state convention at Grand Rapids last week, about twenty-five delegates being present and nominated the following state ticket,

Justices of the Supreme Court—H. McFarlan, Flint; Francis A. Kulp Battle Creek.

Regents of the University—Elizabeth Hurt Gamble, Detroit; William E. Hohn, Ann Arbor.

Superintendent of Public Instruction—Thomas F. G. Dougherty, Grand Rapids.

Member of State Board of Education—Alexander M. Stirton, Hancock.

The committee appointed at the convention last fall for the purpose of drafting a new state constitution was ready with its report and this matter furnished the chief cause of debate at the convention though after a number of amendments the new constitution was adopted. Among other things it provides for an increase of the monthly dues from 10 cents to 15 cents a month. The additional 5 cents is to be used to provide a fund for hiring salaried organizers throughout the state.

DR. GEORGE W. BEEMAN

Former Prominent Charlevoix Business Man is Dead.

Dr. George W. Beeman, formerly of this city, but lately of Harbor Springs, committed suicide by taking carbolic acid in a fit of despondency, yesterday afternoon.

Dr. Beeman, who was forty-eight years of age, was at two different times engaged in the drug business in this city, selling out in 1899 to Harry Lake, the Ivy Drug Store now owned by A. B. Fleischer. Since that time he has been engaged in the practice of his profession here and in different parts of the state, locating at Harbor Springs about a year ago.

Dr. Beeman was married in January, 1888, to Miss Ada Cooper, daughter of William Cooper, of this city, and leaves besides his wife one son, George C., seven years of age. The doctor was a member of the Masonic fraternity of this city.

The funeral will probably be held in this city Friday.

GOES TO LONDON

Allie Moore Will Compete at Olympia Meet.

First Prizes $2,000 Over One Hundred Twenty Entries.

From the Portland Maine Daily Press of February 10, we clip the following in regard to what a Charlevoix boy will do in the Old World.

"Karl Reynold, secretary of the Professional Skaters' association of America who with his wife is engaged in giving an exhibition at Keith's theatre this week stated last evening that General Manager Rockwell of the Winslow Skate Co. and himself had made arrangements to send Allie Moore the champion speed skater on rollers of the world, who has broken all records and won all the big championship meets, according to the records produced by Mr. Moore, to the Olympia, London, leaving today on the steamer Campania to compete for the $2,000 first prize one mile championship of the world. Moore has skated a mile in two minutes and 27 seconds in Chicago.

Moore is a resident of Charlevoix, Mich., is the winner of gold and diamond medals and the holder of world's records as follows: One half mile banked floor, 1:20; one mile, banked floor, 2:37; two mile, banked floor 5:12; three mile banked floor, 7:55; one mile flat floor, 2:48 4-5. Moore until three years ago was a sailor and in addition to his records made on roller and ice skating is a clever athelete in other respects including the art of boxing.

Moore made his world's record of 2:27 in Chicago. He is also the winner of several speeding contests including semi-finals, finals and grand finals.

Moore holds the professional records, but according to the World's Almanac, William Robinson, an amateur is credited with making a mile in 2:24.

It is understood that over 120 entries have been made for the Olympia races but Mr. Reynolds is confident that Moore will win the first prize. The winner in the race will get about $1,400 which is the largest sum ever offered for a single race.

In addition to the money purse the Olympia diamond trophy for the international record is given. Snowdon who holds the English record is understood to be one of those registered for the entries on the Olympia races.

The race at the Olympia which Moore is to enter is to be held Feb. 23.

At Meeting of Charlevoix Pomona Grange

HELD WITH WILSON GRANGE THURSDAY

Manual Training and Study of Agriculture Recommended

Attendance, Was Large Marion Center Banner Grange—Next Meeting at South Arm

Charlevoix Pomona grange met with Wilson grange Thursday. The attendance was far beyond expectations, over one hundred being present at all sessions coming from different sections of the county.

The meeting was called to order by Worthy Master Ward after dinner, who turned the meeting over to the worthy lecturer. The program, as previously announced, was carried out in full, with the exception of the numbers assigned to E. S. Stacks, this being taken care of in the general discussion.

Robert Shepard, Master of Wilson Grange, gave a few hearty words of welcome, which were responded to by Worthy Master Ward in explaining the slogan of Charlevoix patrons. "500 to Traverse City next December." The subject of "Good Roads," which had been assigned to Mr. Stacks, was then taken up. Martin Rhuling, who led in the discussion, expressed the desire of all to have better roads, an opinion which was heartily concurred in by H. L. Olney and others who followed in the discussion. A plain understanding of the terms of the county road law seemed to be lacking and it will be studied by the subordinate granges.

The worthy master in telling what he would expect of the patrons during 1909, explained the system of collecting dues adopted by Pomona, what aids Pomona had planned to give the different subordinate granges and what it would mean to Charlevoix patrons to have five hundred to go to Traverse City next winter.

Delegates Brother and Sister Liskum told what impressed them most at state grange. Sister Liskum, the living flag which was represented by Saginaw school girls and Brother Liskum the turning over of the master's office by Brother Horton to Brother Hall.

The lecturer asked that all members respond readily to the calls made upon them by their lecturers, asked that subordinate lecturers report to him all of the particularly good things that they had in their programs; promised to visit each grange during the year, also to publish in the COURIER from time to time articles on topics which were being made a portion of the year's work by the grange.

Recitations and music were scattered throughout the session by members of Wilson grange who proved themselves able to meet any emergency, both in program work and in feeding a lot of hungry patrons.

At the business session the committee on education reported in favor of the establishment of manual training and the teaching of agriculture in the public schools and recommended that the subject be made a portion of the program work.

The grange went on record in favor of the adoption of local option and pledged its best efforts to secure the same.

Marion Center grange was declared the banner grange of the county for the last quarter of 1908.

The next meeting will be held with South Arm grange in April, to be addressed by a state speaker. Date and speaker will be announced later. After conferring the degree of Pomona on thirteen candidates the grange closed all, pledging themselves to use every effort to secure the five hundred for Traverse City.

INTERESTING FACTS

The B. M. Hyde Co. Offers to Cure Catarrh—The Medicine Costs Nothing if They Fail.

When a medicine effects a cure in 98 per cent of cases, and when we offer that medicine on our own personal guarantee that it will cost the user nothing if it does not cure Catarrh, it is only reasonable that people should believe us, or at least put our claim to a practical test when we take all the risk. These are facts which we want the people of Rochester to substantiate. We want them to try Rexall Mucu-Tone a medicine prepared from a prescription of a physician whose specialty was Catarrh, and who has a record of thirty years of cures to his credit.

We sell more bottles and receive more good reports about Rexall Mucu-Tone than we do of all other catarrh remedies sold in our store and if more people only knew what a thoroughly dependable remedy Rexall Mucu-Tone is, it would be the only catarrh medicine we would have any demand for.

Rexall Mucu Tone is quickly absorbed and carried by the blood until it thoroughly disinfects and cleanses the entire mucous membranous tract, destroys and removes the parasites which injure and destroy the membranous tissues, soothes and heals the irritation and soreness, stops the mucous discharge, and builds up strong, healthy tissues, relieves the blood and system of diseased matter, stimulates the muco-cells, aids digestion and improves nutrition until the whole body vibrates with healthy activity. In a comparatively short time there is a most noticeable gain in weight, strength, good color and feeling of buoyancy.

We urge you to try Mucu-Tone, beginning a treatment today. At any time you are not satisfied, simply come and tell us, and we will quickly return your money without question or quibble. We have Rexall Mucu-Tone in two sizes, 50c. and $1.00. The Ivy Drug Store, A. B. Fleischer, proprietor.

Ancestral Pride.

"Do you still want this genealogy?" asked the man who digs up such things.

"Sure, I do. Why not?"

"Well, I've found that your great-great-grandfather was hanged for murder, your great-grandfather was imprisoned for robbery, and your grandfather was tarred and feathered for beating his wife. That's not a very proud record, is it?"

"I should say it is. Shows how my family is getting better each generation. I'm an improvement on the whole bunch—never been in jail yet. Let me have those records. I'm proud of 'em!"—Cleveland Leader.

Apple Pie and Melted Cheese.

Bake a pie crust in the bottom and on the side of a pie tin; fill with apple quarters stewed till tender and return to the oven, putting a little cinnamon, sugar and bits of butter over. When it is baked enough to set, draw it out and cover with a thick layer of grated cheese. Return to the fire and let the cheese melt and brown. Serve immediately.—Harper's Bazar.

Sign of Carelessness.

DIGNITY OF OWNERSHIP.

The Feeling of Pride That Is Born of Paying Taxes.

"Many a time," said a policeman in the southern part of the city, "when arresting men, especially intoxicated men, I have been told by my prisoner that he was a taxpayer and that he helped pay my wages.

"I always regarded this sort of bluff talk as merely drunken insolence and never paid much attention to it until about a year ago, when I bought a house and lot and became myself a taxpayer. I had always rented before and never gave a thought to taxes, but as soon as I moved into my own house I began to appreciate the feelings of men who resented arrest because they paid taxes.

"There is certainly a considerable addition to the dignity of the man who helps support the government. He feels a degree of responsibility that a renter or roomer never understands, and my idea is that every man in the country ought to become a taxpayer as soon as he can. And the mere fact that he does help support the government and bears his share of the expense makes him a better citizen. Habitual criminals are rarely taxpayers. They know they may have to run any day and perhaps never come back so they do not buy real estate, but are roomers and lodgers all their lives."—St. Louis Globe-Democrat.

A WHISTLER DINNER.

Sealing Wax Played an Important Part at the Banquet.

In the Pennells' "Life of James MacNeill Whistler" is the story of a dinner given by the eccentric artist in which he was assisted by Mr. Luke Loudes, who describes the banquet:

"I remember calling one early afternoon, when Jimmy was busy putting things straight. He asked me if I had any money. I told him I had 12 shillings. He said that was enough. We went out together, and he bought three chairs at two and sixpence each and three bottles of claret at eightpence each and three sticks of sealing wax of different colors at twopence each. On our return he sealed the top of each bottle with a different colored wax. He then told me he expected a possible buyer to dinner and two other friends. When we had taken our seats at the table he very solemnly told the maid to go down and bring up a bottle of wine, one of those with the red seal. The maid could hardly suppress a grin, but I alone saw it. Then, after the meat, he told her to fetch a bottle with the blue seal, and with dessert the one with the yellow seal was brought, and all were drunk in perfect innocence and delight. He sold his picture, and he said he was sure the sealing wax had done it."

A Queer Trunk Problem.

One of the minor problems that present themselves to managers of homes for elderly persons is the accumulation of trunks. Each new arrival brings one or more trunks, often several, and it is not expected that these ever will be taken away, as the inmates are to remain permanently. It is not, however, considered safe to sell the trunks or give them away, as they are the private property of the inmates, and there is a possibility that the trunks may be needed again through some change in affairs or fortunes. The trunks therefore pile up until they become the despair of managers, and it is a relief when some of the older or least substantial boxes break apart from mere decrepitude and can conscientiously be consigned to the scrap heap.—New York Press.

Napoleon's Bible.

An Italian journalist has the copy of the Bible which Napoleon used during his compulsory sojourn in the Isle of Elba. It is a copy of a cheap popular edition, illustrated with rough wood cuts, with the initial N. and the imperial crown stamped upon its back. A number of texts are underlined, and the inference is that the exiled emperor searched the Scriptures for passages appropriate to his misfortune and his hopes. "I will smite the shepherd, and the sheep shall be scattered," is perhaps the most significant of them. The Bible was discovered in the sanctuary of the Madonna del Monte, in Elba.

Strategy.

Hedrick—Great Scott! Has Bilkins lost his mind?

Van Albert—I don't think so. Why?

Hedrick—Just look at the illumination in his house. He has had every gas jet burning all day long.

Van Albert—Oh, that's just a little scheme Bilkins has to increase his gas bill this month. His wife is coming back tomorrow, and he told her he had been remaining at home and reading every night since she went away. If she looked at the gas bill and found it to be only 32 cents, he would be cornered for an explanation.—Chicago News.

Chapter 19

JESSICA bore back from the town that afternoon a spirit of tremulous gladness. In the few moments of that thrilling ride and rescue a mysterious change had been wrought in her.

In the past days her soul had been possessed by a painful agitation which she did not attempt to analyze. At moments the ingrained hatred of Hugh's act, the resentment that had been the result of that year of pain, had risen to battle for the inherent justice of things. At such times she was restless and sat much alone, puzzling David Stires by meaningless responses.

She could not tell him that the son whose name he never took upon his lips was so near; that he whose crime his father's pride of name had hidden through all the months since then had gone down with the current, shunned by honest folk, adding to his one dismal act the weight of persistent repetition. She could not tell him this, even though that son now lived without memory of the evil he had done, though he struggled under a cloud of hatred, reaching out to clean deed and high resolve.

Now, however, all distrust and trepidation had vanished. Strangely and suddenly the complex warfare in her mind had stilled. Standing with Mrs. Halloran, she had listened to the comment with shining eyes. Not that she distinguished any sudden change of opinion to turn persecution to popularity and make the reprobate of today the favorite of tomorrow, but in its very reserve she instinctively felt a new tension of respect. Suspicion and dislike aside, there were none there who would again hinder the man who had made that race with death.

For her own part, she only knew that she had no longer fear of soul or sense of irrevocable loss or suffering. The Hugh she now loved was not the Hugh who had sinned.

He must some time learn the facts of his past. Was it not better to know the very worst it contained now, to put all behind him and face a future that held no hidden menace? She alone could tell him what had clouded his career, the thing whose sign and symbol was the forged draft. She carried the slip of paper in the bosom of her dress, and every day she took it out and looked at it as at some malefic relic. It was a token of the old buried misery that, its final purpose accomplished, should be forgotten forever. How to convey the truth with as little pain as might be, this was the problem, and she had found the solution. She would leave the draft secretly in the cabin, where he must see it. It bore his own name, and the deadly word David Stires' cramped fist had written across it told its significant story. How it got there Hugh would not question. It would be to him only a detail of his forgotten life there.

She was glad when late the next afternoon Dr. Brent came for his chat with David Stires, and the latter sent her out for a walk.

All was quiet. No wisp of smoke curled from the cabin chimney, no work was forward, for Harry had climbed far up the mountain, alone with his thoughts. It was a favorable opportunity.

Jessica had the fateful draft in her hand as she ran quickly down the trail and across the cleared space to the cabin door. It was wide open. Peering warily, she saw that both rooms were empty, and, with a guilty last glance about her, she entered. A nail in the wall held an old violin, and beneath it was a shelf of books. She took one from the meager row and opened it curiously. It was "David Copperfield," and she saw with kindling interest that heavy lines were drawn along certain of the pages. She looked about her. Where should she put the draft? He had left a marker in the book. He would open it again no doubt. She laid the draft between the printed leaves, beyond the marker. Then, replacing the volume on the shelf, she ran from the door and hastened back up the steep trail to the Knob.

Leaning back against the warm rock, lapped in the serene peacefulness of the spot, Jessica fell into reverie. Never since her wedding day had she said to herself boldly "I love him"—never till yesterday. Now all was changed. Her thought was a tremulous assurance: "I shall stay here near him day after day, watching. Some day his memory will come back, and then my love will comfort him. The town will forget it has hated and will come to honor him. Some time, seeing how he is changed, his father will forgive him and take him back, and we shall all three go home to the white house in the aspens. If not, then my place will still be with Hugh. Perhaps we shall live here. Perhaps a cabin like that will be home, and I shall live with him and work with him and care for him."

Thus she dreamed—a new day dream, unravaged by the sordid tests of verity.

So absorbed was she that she did not hear a step approaching over the springy moss, a sharply broken breath as the intruder stifled an exclamation. She had drawn her handkerchief across her eyes against the dancing glimmer of sunlight. Suddenly it dropped to her lap, and she half turned.

In an instant of surprise, as Harry's look flashed into hers, a name sprang unbidden to her lips—a name that struck his strained face to sudden whiteness, ringing in his ears like the note of a sunken bell. All that was clamoring in him for speech rushed into words.

"You call my name!" he cried. "You know me! Have I ever been 'Hugh' to you? Your face, that white hand across your eyes, your voice, they came to me like something far away that I have known. I was mistaken. I was crazy to think that you"—

He stopped. A wave of sympathy passed over her. She felt a mad wish to throw all aside, to cry to him: "You did know me! You loved me once! I am Jessica—I am your wife!" So intense was her emotion that it seemed to her as if she had spoken his name again audibly, but her lips had not moved, and the tap of a woodpecker on a nearby trunk sounded with harsh distinctness.

"I have wanted to speak to you," she said after an instant in which she struggled for self control. "You did a brave thing yesterday—a splendid thing. It saved me from sorrow all my life!"

He put aside her thanks with a gesture. "You saved me also. You found me ill and suffering, and your horse carried me to my cabin."

"I want to tell you," she went on hastily, her fingers lacing, "that I do not judge you as others do. I know about your past life—what you have forgotten. I know you have put it all behind you."

His face changed swiftly. Today the determination with which he had striven to put from his mind the problem of his clouded past had broken down. In the light of the charge which had been flung in his teeth the afternoon before, his imagination had dwelt intolerably on it.

"You know?" he said hoarsely. "Yet you say that! They stoned me in the street the day I came back. Yesterday they mounted me a thief. It is like a hideous nightmare that I can't wake from. Who am I? Where did I come from? I dare not ask for fear of further shame! Can you imagine what that means?"

She came close to him and touched his arm.

"I know all that you suffer," she said. "You are doing the strong thing, the brave thing! The man in you is not astray now; it was lost, but it has found its way back. When your memory comes you will see that it is fate that has been dealing you. There was nothing in your past that cannot be buried and forgotten. What you have been you will never be again. I know that! I saw you fight Devlin, and I know why you did it. I heard you play the violin. Whatever has been, I have faith in you now!"

"You are doing the strong thing."

She spoke breathlessly, in very abandon, carried away by her feeling. As she spoke he had turned toward her, his paleness flushed, his eyes leaping up like hungry fires, devouring her face. All the look timidity rushed upon her. She stopped abruptly and took a startled step from him.

He turned from her instantly. His hands dropped at his sides. The word that had almost sprung to speech had slipped back into the void.

"I thank you for the charity you have for me," he said, "which I in no way deserve. I—I shall always remember it."

She hesitated an instant, made as if to speak. Then, turning, she went quickly from him. At the edge of the bushes she stopped with a sudden impulse. She looked at the handkerchief she held. Some tiny lettering was embroidered in its corner, the word "Jessica." She glanced behind her. He had not moved. Rolling it into a ball, she threw it back over the bushes, then ran on hastily through the trees.

After a time Harry turned slowly, his shoulders lifting in a deep respiration. The white and filmy cambric caught his eye lying at the base of the great knoblike rock. He went in it, picked it up and looked at it closely.

"Jessica!" he whispered. The name clung about him. The very leaves repeated it in music. He had a curious sensation, as if while she spoke that very name had half framed itself in some curtained recess of his thought. He pressed the handkerchief to his face. The faint perfume it exhaled, like the dust of dead roses, gave him a ghostly impression of the familiar.

He struck his forehead sharply with his open hand.

"Fool!" he said, with a bitter laugh "Fool!"

Chapter 20

OVER the sanitarium of the ridge sleep had descended. On its broad grounds there was no light of moon or stars, and its chamber windows were dark save where here and there the soft glow of a night lamp sifted through a shutter. The evening had closed gloomily, breeding storm.

Before Jessica extinguished the light she searched in a drawer and found her wedding ring—the one she had worn for less than an hour. When she crept into bed the ring was on her finger. She had fallen asleep with her cheek resting on it.

She awoke with a start, with a vague, inexplicable uneasiness, an instinct that the night had voiced an unusual sound. She sat up in bed, staring into the dark depths of the room. Her instant thought had been of David Stires, but the tiny bell on the wall whose wire led to his bedroom was not vibrating. She listened a moment, but there was only a deep silence. Slipping out of bed, she crossed the room and parted the curtain from before the tall French window. The room was on the ground floor and the window gave directly on the lawn. While she gazed there came a sudden yellow flare of lightning, and far distant mutter of thunder spoke behind the hills.

Still, with the unreasoning uneasiness bubbling her, she groped to the door, drew the bolt and looked out into the wide, softly carpeted hall, lighted dimly by a lamp set just at the turn of the staircase. All at once a shiver ran through her. There, a dozen steps away, the light full upon him, stood the man who filled her thoughts.

He stood perfectly still, without movement or gesture, gazing at her.

He stood perfectly still.

She could see his face distinctly, silhouetted on the pearl gray wall. It wore an expression of strained concern and of deep helplessness. The instant agitation and surprise blotted the puzzle of his presence there. She forgot that it was the dead of night; that she was in her nightgown. It flashed across her mind that some near and desperate trouble had befallen him. All the protective and maternal in her love welled up. She went quickly toward him.

He did not move or stir, and then she realized that, though his eyes seemed to look at her, it was with a passive, tranced fixity. They saw nothing. He was asleep.

She halted, a deep compassion and a painful wonderment holding her, feeling with a thrill the power she possessed over him. Then, like a cold wave, surged over her a numbing sense of his position. How had he entered? Had he broken locks like a burglar? The situation was anomalous. What should she do? Waked abruptly, the result might be disastrous. Discovered, his presence there when all slumbered, suspected as he had been, would be ruinous. She must get him away, out of the house, and quickly.

A breath of cool air swept past her, pulling out the lamp—an outer door was open. At the same instant she heard steps beyond the curve of the hall, Dr. Brent's voice peremptory and inquiring. Her nerves chilled. He blocked the sole avenue of retreat. No, there was one other, and only one—a single way to shield him. Quiet and resourceful now, though her cheeks were hot, she took the hand of the unconscious man, drew him silent and unresisting into the friendly shadow of her room, closed the door noiselessly and bolted it.

For a moment she stood motionless, her heart beating violently. Had he been seen? Or had the open door created an alarm? Releasing his hand gently, she found her way softly to a stand, lighted a tiny night taper and threw a shawl about her. A sudden confusion tingled through her veins, a sense of suddenly shame, opposing the sweet reminder of their real relationship—was he not in fact her husband?—that by ever beneath her thought to justify and explain.

Suddenly, in the tense silence of the room, the mantel clock struck 3 in deep chime, like the vibration of a far off church bell. The tone was not loud—indeed, the low roll of the thunder had been well nigh as loud—but there was in the intrusive metallic cadence a peculiar suggestion to the dormant mind. It penetrated the crust of sleep. It touched the inner ear of the conscious intelligence. Harry started, a shudder ran through his frame, he swayed dizzily, his hand went to his forehead.

In the instant of shocked awakening Jessica was at his side in an agony of apprehension, her arm thrown about him, her hand pressed across his lips, her lips at his ear in an agonized warning:

"Hush! Do not speak! It is I, Jessica! Make no noise!"

She felt her wrist caught in a grasp that made her wince. His whole body was trembling violently. "Jessica!" he said in a painfully articulated whisper. "You? Where am I?"

"This is my room," she breathed. "You have been walking in your sleep. Make no sound. We shall be heard."

A low exclamation broke from his lips. He looked bewilderedly about him, his eyes returning to her face with a horrified realization. "I—came here—to your room?" The voice was WHETHER we will adopt the county road system next April is a question which should be studied with much care before we cast our votes. There can be no difference of opinion as to whether we want good roads or not. Of course we do. Everybody does, nothing is more important to a locality than good roads, nothing will add more to the value of our county than the building of permanent good roads. For years Michigan has been cursed with a lack of system in the building of roads which has resulted in a terrible waste of money. In recent years she has awakened to the fact that by the adoption of some system this waste could be stopped and each year something could be shown for the money expended, but a doubt exists, in our mind, as to the desirability of adopting the county system at this time. Are we ready for it? If not, what shall we do for our roads? We must have good roads.

HOLD CONVENTIONS

Lumbermen and Grocers' Associations Meet Last Week

Carrol F. Sweet of Grand Rapids was elected president of the Michigan Retail Lumber Association at their convention held in Grand Rapids last week. E. E. Hatrick of Jackson was elected vice president, John F. Comerford of Detroit and William C. Brown of Lansing directors for three years. Detroit gets the next meeting.

The association now has 200 members. The Michigan Lumber Dealers' Mutual Fire Insurance company was permanently organized, with $152,000 insurance written. Carroll F. Sweet, Grand Rapids, president; Arthur E. Holmes, Detroit, secretary. These with C. L. Weeks, Detroit; John S. Pagenetti, Mt. Clemens; and A. A. Erwin, Pontiac, constitute the directorate.

The Grocers and Retail Merchants association of Michigan closed its session at Bay City Thursday. A new committee was created to confer with the state dairy and food department relative to the enforcement of state regulations and is empowered to act when new bills affecting foodstuffs are introduced. The committee consists of D. A. Green, Lansing; Wm. Blessed, Detroit; C. Christianson, Saginaw; W. D. Smith, Port Huron, and B. E. Peckham, Parma.

paid salaries, in other words, it cost $1 to get $13 worth of work inspected. Now in the county if we raise $12,000 and have three commissioners at the nominal figures of $500 each it will cost us $1 for every $8 worth of work done. I do not believe there is a man in Charlevoix county but what will admit that the township can get the same money spent where they need it just as good and perhaps better and not cost one fourth what it will cost under the county road system.

STOMACH DISTRESS

And Indigestion Misery Ends Five Minutes Later.

Almost Instant Relief From Dyspepsia And Stomach Trouble Is Waiting For You.

Every family here ought to keep some Diapepsin in the house, as any one of you may have an attack of indigestion or Stomach trouble at any time, day or night.

This harmless preparation will digest anything you eat and overcome a sour stomach five minutes afterwards.

If your meals don't tempt you, or what little you do eat seems to fill you, or lays like a lump of lead in your stomach, or if you have heartburn, that is a sign of indigestion.

Ask your Pharmacist for a 50-cent case of Pape's Diapepsin and take one triangule after supper tonight. There will be no sour risings, no belching of undigested food mixed with acid, no stomach gas or heartburn, fullness or heavy feeling in the Stomach, Nausea, Debilitating Headaches, Dizziness or Intestinal griping. This will all go, and besides, there will be no sour food left over in the stomach to poison your breath with nauseous odors.

Pape's Diapepsin is a certain cure for all stomach misery, because it will take hold of your food and digest it just the same as if your stomach wasn't there.

Actual, prompt relief for all your stomach misery is at your Pharmacist, waiting for you.

These large 50-cent cases contain more than sufficient to cure a case of dyspepsia or indigestion.

The Birds' Nests That Men Eat.

The swifts arrive in the Andaman Islands toward the end of November but they take their time in building the nests, which are formed from a gelatinous secretion from the salivary glands of those beautiful members of the swallow tribe. If there has been a wet December, the first crop of nests is generally a poor one, being spoiled by the drops and drippings from the roofs of the caves. Collectors, however, begin in January to go around the island to the different caves in an open boat. The best quality is pure isinglass and are worth their weight in silver. Afterward there are two other collections. The caves in which the nests are found are scattered about the islands. Some are far inland, others in rocks concealed in mangrove swamps.—London News.

Bogus Antiques.

Old statuary is made in great quantities in Italy. Bohemia and Belgium furnish glass of the middle ages, and every European capital has its makers of antiques. Berlin and Vienna makers are kept busy with the home trade, but Paris, London, Brussels, Rome, Florence, Smyrna and Munich are commercial centers for this class of merchandise. The business has grown to such proportions that Nuremberg, Vienna and Livorno have museums where counterfeit works are exhibited and where their style of manufacture may be studied.—Berlin Post.

Chinese Flat Noses.

"The Chinese mother," the ethnologist explained, "carries her babe in a sack on her back. The baby's nose is pressed against her. Day in and day out, all through its babyhood, the little thing's soft and malleable nose is pressed against its mother's back. Hence it is no wonder, is it, that the Chinese are a flat nosed race?"

Too Much.

"Of course," said the lady with the steel bound glasses, "I expected to be called 'strong minded' after making a speech three hours long in favor of our sex, but to have it misprinted into 'strong winded' was too, too much."

He Traveled Light.

"That hall room boarder moved today."

"I didn't see any trunk go out."

"There was none. I guess he placed his effects in an envelope and mailed 'em to the new address."—Kansas City Journal.

Cupid on The Air Line.

By LITTELL M'CLUNG.

Copyrighted, 1909, by Associated Literary Press

"Look, Grant!" exclaimed the girl, touching the arm of her companion as they passed the exhibit of vegetables on the fair grounds. "There's the captive balloon they've all been talking so much about. Pessie and Will went up in it yesterday, and they thought it simply dandy."

The young man glanced ahead to where a crowd surrounded some tall guys that stretched up to a big balloon floating gracefully in the air 300 feet over their heads.

A man stepped upon a platform and began to address his auditors in stentorian yet persuasive tones.

"All right, Lila, we'll see it through, too," declared Grant Allen, and they hurried up close to the spieler.

"This way, ladies and gentlemen!" he cried. "Who'll be the next to go up in the big gas bag? Here's a glorious chance to see the world as a bird sees it! This balloon is as safe as a trolley car and safer. Experts say so.

"It is fastened securely to the earth. Ladies and gentlemen, and stays up ten minutes with each ascension, giving you plenty of time to enjoy the magnificent scenery. Come! Who'll be the next? The balloon holds only two at a time. Tickets are 50 cents apiece, two for a"—

"I'll take two tickets for the next trip," said Grant, pushing forward with the necessary dollar in his hand. The man handed him the coupons in fame and stepped down from the platform to engineer the next ascension.

By turning a sort of handle and wheel device that resembled a windlass the balloon was lowered back to earth. A young man and a girl stepped out of the "basket" smiling triumphantly, and Lila and Grant stepped in. The wheel to which the guide rope was attached began to turn again, and slowly the balloon rose above the fair grounds. When the rope gave out the basket was high enough for its occupants to see the level country for miles around.

"Oh, isn't it just perfectly grand!" cooed the girl, clapping her hands and peering down at the upturned faces.

"Yes, it really is," he answered. "You feel apart from the world and above everything. In more senses than one. No weather necessities are about us down there."

The great bag above them swung gently in a section of a circle and then stood motionless, the basket swinging gently to and fro. Suddenly Lila clapped a tiny handful of dust whirling softly fashion across the fair ground.

"What is all that dust, Grant?" she asked innocently.

"Why, it's a whirlwind," he exclaimed, "and a big one at that, and what's more, it's coming directly toward us. If it strikes us we'll have a lively little scrap around in the air. I hope it does."

But the girl seemed unconcerned and clung to his arm. Evidently his wish was about to be realized, for the whirlwind, gathering momentum every second, was bearing straight down on the public grounds of the balloon, carrying with it a dozen or more hats it had gathered from the crowds.

In another second it hit the balloon, whirling it around like a bubble in a hundred feet or so. Lila gave a little shriek of fear, but Grant laughed.

"Don't be nervous," he said. "We're getting a fine ride."

Then his face whitened as the sound of snapping rope struck his ears. He glanced below to see uprooted pegs and stakes flying into the air. Another crack followed, and the balloon tore loose the last line that bound it to earth.

For a second it paused; then, like a rocket, it shot cloudward several hundred feet and, encountering "upper currents," floated off across the fair grounds.

Over the girl's face flashed an expression of terror, but by a superhuman effort Grant kept calm. Below they could hear the wild shouts of the people who were rushing in the direction the balloon had taken.

"Keep your nerve, Lila," urged Grant quietly. "There is really no danger. Don't you see the gas can't possibly get out of the bag, and we'll begin to go down when the wind slackens a little."

But the wind continued strong, and the balloon declined to descend an inch. Neither did it rise. It simply floated along rapidly, but steadily, about six or seven hundred feet above the ground. In five minutes the fair inclosure was fading in the distance, and in another five minutes so was the town.

"Don't you see, Lila," said Grant, with assurance, "we are perfectly safe? We've joined the first class aeronauts, and we're going on a tour of the world. Just think how famous we'll be if we discover the north pole."

This forced levity dispelled Lila's terrified look, and gradually the color came back into her face.

"I'm glad of one thing," she said as her courage returned. "Papa, mamma and all the folks are up in the country today. Maybe they won't hear of our aerial disappearance until we land somewhere and start back. They'd be frightened to death if they did."

"Don't worry, Lila," he answered, feeling now that there really was very little danger after all. "Just look out over the country and let's enjoy the trip. Maybe we won't have another one like this soon."

Their airship was sailing beautifully now, flying over orchards and farm lands and throwing into a state of intense excitement hundreds of peaceful country folk.

"It is simply heavenly," the girl suddenly exclaimed. "I'm not a bit afraid now, Grant, and I don't care much how hard we fall. I've always longed for some exciting adventure, and surely this is it, and you are with me. I'm so glad it's you!"

"Why are you glad it's me?" he demanded, seizing her hand and ignoring the cries of the farm hands in the valley below.

"Oh, I don't know exactly, just because—isn't that reason enough?" she questioned, her eyes a-twinkle.

"I guess it is, dear girl," he replied, and he let it have, but as that moment the careless balloon careened sharply to starboard, reminding him that he must keep the ship "trimmed" if he ever expected to land safely.

They were now passing over a good sized town, and hundreds of people were out in the streets gazing skyward. Of a sudden the wind died away, and the balloon sank within 200 feet of the house-tops. Then, without an instant's warning, there was a violent tug at the basket, and the gas escaped. Phantasmagoria of [illegible] felt his heart bobbing in his throat, but he [illegible] again. An iron [illegible] from the end of one of the ropes had caught under the edge of a slate roof.

"Well, Lila, we're certainly anchored at last!" he announced. "Guess they'll be hauling us down pretty quick, for they're running out of the house."

His surmise was correct, for in a moment several men climbed out on to the roof through the [illegible] and seized the rope. Then hand over hand they began pulling down the balloon, while the street throngs shouted enthusiastically.

In another moment Lila and Grant stepped out of the basket to be greeted by a dozen men, who lustily cheered their safe descent. They did not [illegible] which way to turn until a red eyed man in clerical garb made his way through the throng.

"He's my horse that caught away," he bawled. "We rigged a telephone connection by getting to your telegram for a runaway balloon with two passengers, which was [illegible] in our engine yard we're sure glad to have you safe on the ground."

Amid the congratulations of the crowd with handshaking all around, and [illegible] the balloon was made fast to a chimney, and a messenger [illegible] the minister [illegible] the way to the skylight. In a few [illegible] the young aeronauts and the [illegible] in the parlor beating a lively [illegible].

"Let's [illegible] Grant at the first opportunity.

"The [illegible] for bed!"

"Hit it [illegible] it's [illegible] we landed [illegible] Then you [illegible]

For [illegible] he was silent, the [illegible] to her cheek.

"Isn't it?" he repeated eagerly.

"Yes, yes, yes. Yes, I do, Grant, dear," she replied [illegible], giving his arm a little [illegible] squeeze.

Five minutes later Grant Allen was hurrying [illegible] on the corner he met a policeman. "Which way to the office of the justice of the peace, please?" he asked breathlessly.

Weeping Marble.

The activity of surrounding business may have jeopardized more than one portion of the sacred edifice of St. Bartholomew the Great, but it was not always safe even at the hands of its own congregation. In the seventeenth century the parishioners, in their combined wisdom, thought the cloisters would look better if they were whitewashed and promptly proceeded to carry out their original idea. They then found, however, that two marble statues, which may still be seen, did not show up well enough against the white background, so in order to remedy this defect they had the images tarred! The same people wanted to get rid of the fourteenth century baptismal font in the church on the ground that it was too old for use. The most curious monument is that in "weeping marble" to Edward Cooke, scholar and physician, with the inscription:

Passinge ye brim floode. What? Can ye keep
Your eyes from teares and see the marble weep?
Burst out for shame, or if ye find no vent
For teares yet stay and see the stones relent.

For a long time the marble "wept" without restraint, but since the church has been repoofed and heated its peculiarity of "relenting" through damp has ceased to exhibit itself.—London Globe.

Whistler and a Supper.

Though frequently hard up, Whistler had no income which seemed princely to students who lived on nothing at all. If Whistler had money in his pockets, Mr. Iondes says, he spent it royally on others. If his pockets were empty, he managed to refill them in a way that still amazes M. Onlevey, who, in proof of it, told us of the night when, after the cafe where they had squandered their last sous on kirsch had closed, he and Lambert and Whistler adjourned to the Halles for supper, ordered the best and ate it. Then he and Lambert stayed in the restaurant as hostages while Whistler, at dawn, went off to find money to pay. He was back when they awoke with 300 or 400 francs in his pocket. He had been to see an American friend, he said, a painter. "And, do you know, he had the bad manners to abuse the situation; he insisted on my looking at his pictures." LINCOLN'S BIRTHDAY

Was Fittingly Observed in Charlevoix

By the Historical Society, G. A. R. and W. R. C

The observance of the one hundredth anniversary of the birth of Abraham Lincoln, held at the Congregational church Friday night, under the auspices of the Historical Society, G. A. R. and W. R. C. was in all its features a very enjoyable event and worthy of the day celebrated, the church being crowded with citizens.

The blue and gray were both represented in the company of old soldiers, who turned out in response to the call of Captain Berdan, post commander, to do honor to their beloved leader.

The program, as previously published, was well arranged and carried out in full, each speaker seemingly being inspired with the subject which was assigned them, as well as the music which was of a high order.

The decorations, which were under the charge of the ladies of the relief corps, were of a highly attractive nature in full keeping with the spirit of the day.

To Tax Automobiles

Representative Schantz of Barry county, will introduce in the legislature a measure which provides for the taxation of automobiles in addition to the license fee now in force. By the terms of the proposed new law, runabouts will be taxed $300 per annum, three-passenger cars will be taxed $400, four-passenger cars $500 and touring cars $600. The money thus raised will be turned into the state highway fund. The law was suggested by owners of automobiles, who feel that the state should be compensated for the wear occasioned by the use of the machines.

How to Cook and Serve the Traditional Christmas Turkey.

To prepare the royal bird for a Christmas dinner choose a nice fat turkey of eight or ten pounds. Clean and singe it, wipe carefully with a damp towel, but do not wash in water, and fill with dressing which has been prepared as follows: Grate enough dry bread to fill it loosely, not packed tightly. To this add a quarter of a pound of butter cut into small pieces, pepper and salt to taste and about two tablespoonfuls of thyme rubbed fine. Mix all these well together and your dressing is ready for use. Stuff your turkey, tie it well in shape; either lard the top or lay slices of bacon over it; wet the skin and sprinkle it well with pepper, salt and flour. It is well to allow a turkey to remain some time stuffed before cooking. The secret of having a good roast turkey is to baste it often and cook it long enough. A turkey weighing ten pounds should cook three hours and a half at least.

The excellence of the turkey depends much upon the frequency of basting it. Occasionally baste it with a little butter, oftener with its own drippings. Just before taking it up from the fire or out of the oven put on more melted butter and sprinkle over flour. This will make the skin more crisp and brown. While the turkey is cooking boil the giblets well, chop them fine and mash the liver. When the turkey is done put it on a hot dish. Put the baking pan on the fire, dredge in a little flour and when cooked stir in a little boiling water or stock. Strain it, skim carefully, add the giblets, season with salt and pepper. Besides the gravy, always serve cranberry jelly with turkey.

David Pike, age 15, a teamster in the employ of the Harbor Springs Lumber Co., met an instantaneous death last week while delivering a load of logs. Mr. Pike was driving down hill when the neck yoke broke, allowing the tongue to drop. He stuck to his load, however, hoping thereby to save his horses, but the sleighs kidding, turned the load partly around, and it tipped over, pinning him underneath almost the entire load of logs, and life was instantly crushed from his body, his head being literally crushed to a mass.

Mr. Pike lived at the foot of the hill, very near where the accident occurred, and his daughter, a young lady was watching him when he met his death, and was the second person to him, and assisted A. Ithan, who was near by splitting wood, in extricating her father from the wreckage and getting him to the house, but death had come before they reach him.

Besides the daughter, the dead man leaves a wife and a younger son. This makes the second violent death among the employes of the Harbor Springs Lumber Co., this year, O. C. Martin being the other.

Charles Alexander, who was in jail at Bellaire charged with assault with intent to kill, escaped and is still at large, although pursued by bloodhounds. Alexander is the man who boasted when first imprisoned that there was not a jail in Michigan strong enough to hold him. He was first arrested at Alba, but escaped and was recaptured at South Boardman. He also broke jail at Elk Rapids and served time in Jackson.

Alexander, with the aid of other inmates, climbed to a small window and lowered himself thirty feet to the ground with a string of garden hose. He was trailed for four miles but escaped through the lumber woods in the dark.

Deafness Cannot be Cured

by local applications, as they cannot reach the diseased portion of the ear. There is only one way to cure deafness, and that is by constitutional remedies. Deafness is caused by an inflamed condition of the mucous lining of the Eustachian Tube. When this tube is inflamed you have a rumbling sound or imperfect hearing, and when it is entirely closed, Deafness is the result, and unless the inflammation can be taken out and this tube restored to its normal condition, hearing will be destroyed forever. Nine cases out of ten are caused by catarrh, which is nothing but an inflamed condition of the mucous surfaces.

We will give One Hundred Dollars for any case of Deafness (caused by catarrh) that cannot be cured by Hall's Catarrh Cure. Send for circulars, free.

THE CHEROKEE ROSE.

Romantic Indian Legend of This Beautiful Flower.

There is a beautiful romance connected with the Cherokee rose. A young Indian chief of the Seminole tribe was taken prisoner by his enemies, the Cherokees, and doomed to torture, but fell so seriously ill that it became necessary to wait for his restoration to health before committing him to the fire.

As he lay prostrated by disease in the cabin of the Cherokee warrior the daughter of the latter, a young, dark faced maid, was his nurse. She fell in love with the young chieftain and, wishing to save his life, urged him to escape. But he would not do so unless she would flee with him.

She consented. Before they had gone far, impelled by regret at leaving home, she asked permission of her lover to return for the purpose of bearing away some memento of it. So, retracing her footsteps, she broke a sprig from the white rose which climbed up the poles of her father's tent and, preserving it during her flight through the wilderness, planted it by the door of her new home in the land of the Seminoles. And from that day this beautiful flower has always been known throughout the southern states by the name of the Cherokee rose.—Philadelphia North American.

A SCRAP OF PAPER.

Charred and Discarded, It Brought Wealth to a Poor Widow.

Some years ago a poor widow kept a small shop in a Berlin suburb. One evening as she was serving a customer a workingman stepped into the shop and asked permission to light his pipe. Drawing a piece of paper from his pocket, he twisted it up and, after lighting his pipe, threw down the spill and walked off with a word of thanks.

When sweeping the floor the following morning the widow took up the charred paper out of idle curiosity and unfolding it, saw that it was a lottery ticket, only a portion of which had been burned. She folded it up, put it away in her pocket and had almost forgotten it, when the result of a large lottery drawing caught her eye in the paper.

She then remembered the crumpled ticket in her pocket, and on producing it found, to her amazement and delight, that it had won a prize of $50,000. She claimed the prize, and, although she advertised widely for its original owner, with the intention of sharing it with him, she was left in undisturbed possession of her fortune.—Exchange.

When John Was In Doubt.

John was a coachman who took life most seriously and, being very particular, would return frequently in the course of the day to make sure he understood the orders that had been given him in the morning. One afternoon he presented himself before his mistress and began:

"Mrs. T., Oi'm not quite certain ez to Mr. T.'s ordher this mornin'. Oi was dhrivin' him to the thrain, an' he noticed that the horse was lame, an' he told me to do somethin' to him, mum; but, sure, Oi don't know whither he told me to shoe him or to shoot him. Mebbe ye can till me."

A shoeing was evidently required, but the execution of the order and likewise of the horse was deferred until Mr. T. returned.

Leading Up to It.

A young man married against the wishes of his parents and in telling a friend how to break the news to them said:

"Tell them first that I am dead, and gently work up to the climax."—London Tit-Bits.

FEW HERE KNOWS THIS

Says Home-Made Treatment Cures All Rheumatism.

Shake the Ingredients Well in the Bottom and Take a Teaspoonful Dose After Meals.

Few people here know that you can cure that dread American disease, Rheumatism, with just common, everyday drugs found in any drug store. The prescription is so simple that any one can prepare it at home at small cost. It is made up as follows: Get from any good prescription pharmacy Fluid Extract Dandelion, one-half ounce; Compound Kargon, one ounce; Compound Syrup Sarsaparilla, three ounces. Mix by shaking in a bottle and take in teaspoonful doses after each meal and at bedtime. These are all simple ingredients, making an absolutely harmless home remedy at little cost.

Rheumatism, as every one knows is a symptom of deranged kidneys. It is a condition produced by the failure of the kidneys to properly filter or strain from the blood the uric acid and other matter, which, if not eradicated, either in the urine or through the skin pores, remains in the blood, decomposes and forms about the joints and muscles, causing the untold suffering and deformity of rheumatism.

This prescription is said to be a splendid bracing, cleansing and invigorating tonic to the kidneys, and gives almost immediate relief in all forms of bladder and urinary troubles and backache.

Aunt Lucy's Legacy.

By JANE LEE.

Copyrighted, 1908, by Associated Literary Press

People could talk all they liked about poverty bringing happiness, but Bayard Leighton kicked—literally—at the suggestion. He had just finished reading a letter from his maiden aunt, in which she had declared, "Money has not brought me happiness. I have lived alone all my life, and I sometimes envy you in your poverty, loved and adored by so sweet a girl as Virginia."

"Well, what do you know about that?" demanded Bayard of his pal, Jimmy Bookwalter.

"I know exactly what I think of her, old man," drawled Jimmy, "but a lady's a lady, even if she is your aunt—and I'd rather not put my opinion into parliamentary English."

"You're a moral coward, that's what you are," Jimmy Bookwalter," declared Bayard as he flung the letter across the tiny hall room. "You've got a rich father who gives you more spending money in a month than you could earn in a year, besides which you're too lazy to fall in love. I hope you won't misunderstand me, Jimmy, when I tell you that the space you occupy in my luxurious apartment is much more valuable than your august presence at the present moment."

Jimmy rose from the uncomfortable straight backed chair, which was the only one in the room. Bayard had given it to him when he entered and had taken a corner of the bed for himself.

"Oh, I see," mused Jimmy. "Want to get dressed, eh? Well, so long till tomorrow night. Be sure you show up at the club and dine with me at 7 sharp."

When he was gone Bayard put the inhospitable chair up on the bed to make more room and took a suit of clothes from under the cretonne curtain which covered his meager ward robe.

"SHE WILLS AND BEQUEATHS TO Y' THIS PORTRAIT OF YOURSELF."

It did not take long to select a tie, because he only had six or seven. Bayard seemed to be going through a mental reincarnation during this process of dressing. First he said disagreeable things—not whole sentences, but just pertinent ejaculations, such as "old fossil," "ought not to be out without a keeper," "envy me, indeed."

A little later he began to whistle snatches of popular songs, nervous little thrills. And finally, with stick in hand, he opened the door of his room, humming in a most contented manner, "Love Me Little, Love Me Long." After all, life was worth while!

Virginia Tracey and Bayard Leighton had been engaged some months. Bayard's father had lived like a rich man, and when he died suddenly the son found himself penniless. Brought up to lead an idle life, untrained for practical work, he took the first position offered to him in a broker's office at $15 a week.

That seemed all right until he suddenly realized that without Virginia nothing was right. Recklessly he asked her to marry him, and with all the impulsiveness of her love she gave herself to him. They were young, and they could wait. Aunt Lucy, Bayard's maiden aunt, had promised to make him her heir, and decidedly Aunt Lucy was no longer young.

When Bayard was blue, Virginia seemed to be doubly radiant, and tonight she was at her best as she entered her drawing room to greet him.

"Had a letter from Aunt Lucy, dear," Bayard announced as an important piece of news.

"Goody," cried Virginia, "and what did the dear old lady have to say for herself?"

"She told me how fortunate I was to have you care for me, for one thing," began Bayard as he watched the color mount to Virginia's cheeks at the compliment. "Then she said a lot of rot about— But let's talk about the pleasant things. You do care for me, don't you?" he added.

"Silly! Silly! Of course I do," she cried. "You're silly for a whole lot of reasons—silly to make me wait to be really yours until you can take me to a fine home, but if you are satisfied to take a toothless old woman for a wife—well"—

And when Bayard went home that night he was still humming a happy air.

He took the chair off the bed, tucked it in one corner of the room and stretched himself out for the night.

In after years he talked much about that room. He always declared that he could open the door with his hand and the window with his foot at the same time; that if he bent over to lace up his boots he butted his head against the side wall, and when he thrust his arm through the sleeve of his shirt he invariably bruised the back of his hand on the ceiling.

The next night while dining with Jimmy a telegram was handed to Bayard.

"Your aunt died this morning—funeral Thursday," it read.

"Well, I hope the dear old lady will be happy in heaven," Bayard said, not without some feeling. "She had persuaded herself that she wasn't here."

"That telegram means a lot to you, doesn't it?" inquired Jimmy, with an air of finality.

"Yes, it does. It means that I'll have a goodly lot of the necessary, long green and that Virginia and I can be married."

Some two weeks later Bayard was notified by the express company that there was a package there for him with $40 due on it, shipped from Chicago. Bayard knew at once that it was some of Aunt Lucy's valuable silver sent on to him. Jimmy would lend him the money to pay for it.

The bill was paid, and the big packing case was ordered sent to Virginia's house and Jimmy duly invited around to participate in the unpacking. Hammer and chisels were put to use, and all three of them entered into the gay spirit of the party. Piles of packing were pulled from the box, and finally a heavy pile frame came to view. Coats were taken off, and the combined strength of Jimmy and Bayard was put to the test. Finally the picture was taken out. It proved to be a life sized portrait of Bayard as a child.

"Well, I'll be hanged!" declared Bayard as he mopped his brow.

"Here's a letter," announced Jimmy as he pulled a long white envelope from the corner of the frame. Virginia opened it and read aloud:

"Your aunt, Miss Leighton, left her entire estate to charities. She wills and bequeaths to you this portrait of yourself. The portion of the will relating to you reads as follows: 'I leave no money to my dear nephew, Bayard Leighton, because I do not wish to shatter his ideal method of life. He is earning a good salary and has good health. As a slight token of my affection and as a remembrance I leave him the Gilbert portrait of himself which now hangs in my library.'"

"Isn't it a darling!" cried Virginia as she danced about the huge portrait.

"But you can't go to housekeeping with nothing but an old oil painting," demurred Bayard.

"Seems to me," broke in Jimmy, "that there's plenty of wood right here to build the house, and it won't take long to cover the walls. There's the oil painting to begin with. Then we can have that better framed. I'm sure Bayard never wants to part with that. Then I'll give you a large photograph of myself, and—"

"What's all this nonsense about going to housekeeping?" interrupted Mr. Tracey, Virginia's father, as he came into the room. "When these young people get married—and I wish they'd hurry up about it they must come and live with me. Virginia can change her name whenever she wants to, but not her residence. And as for this legacy business, I'd rather have a man for my son-in-law who can fight his own way than one who was made by an inheritance."

Mr. Tracey picked his way across the room over the pine boards, chisels and excelsior packing. He took his daughter in one arm as he extended his free hand to Bayard.

"Do you mean it?" sang out Bayard gleefully.

"Mean it?" echoed Mr. Tracey. "Well, I bet I do, and to prove it I'll take Jimmy Bookwalter into the dining room and keep him there until you two settle on a date for the wedding."

The words "dining room" seemed to awaken Jimmy from his stupor. He had a mental picture of a sideboard plentifully stocked with reviving liquors. He announced that he was ready for the proof of Mr. Tracey's assertion, and together they went out of the room, leaving the lovers alone.

A Hypochondriac.

"Pa, what is a hypochondriac?"

"A hypochondriac, Wilfred"—

But just a moment. "Pa" in this anecdote is not a good and kind father, yearning to impart useful information to his son, but one of those smart answer givers whose main object in life is to get into the back pages of the magazines. Such fathers look upon their little sons groping for knowledge as providers of openings for senseless domestic epigrams; hence—but we'll go back.

"Pa" takes off his glasses and looks benignly at his son.

"What did you say, my boy?"

"Pa; what is a hypochondriac?"

That gives "pa" his chance.

"A hypochondriac, Wilfred"—names like Wilfred add humor to this sort of thing; John, for instance, would fall flat, and James would be indefinitely worse; but to resume—"a hypochondriac, Wilfred, is a man who has such a dread of catching cold that whenever he takes a bath he stops up all the holes in the sponge for fear of drafts."

And Wilfred not quite seven years old! Isn't it a shame?—New York Times.

What has become of the old fashioned man who was satisfied with a "good living?"—Atchison Globe.

ADVICE FOR YOUNG GIRLS.

How to Plan For Christmas Presents For Men Friends.

No man likes to be under material obligations to a woman. If the couple are engaged it is a question of what she can afford to give more than what she should not give him. If the man is not engaged to a girl, but is very attentive to her and has been in the habit of sending her books, candies or flowers, then she should remember him at Christmas by some slight gift.

She must be governed by his personal environment and his tastes, and she must not make her gift too personal. She must remember that a girl's attitude to a man to whom she is not engaged is a delicate one, and she must make her gift to him with this in mind. There are two things she must never send him—fancy work and her photograph. The former he does not want; the latter he should not have.

The following list may help a girl to make up her mind, says the Delineator for December: An umbrella with a handle of wood, its only ornament; if she wants to put the money in it, a silver plate with his full name and address engraved on it; a pair of nail brushes in ebony, with initials in silver; a half dozen linen handkerchiefs with his initials in the corner; a simple silver photo frame; a leather card case or bill book in plain color, with his name and address printed in black or gold across the inside; a soft leather bag, the top run through with a silk cord, in which he can keep his clean collars and which is admirable for a traveling bag; a portfolio of leather with compartments for paper, stamps, safely ink well and pens.

He may like something for his desk—a reversible calendar in brass, a small clock, a carved ivory paper cutter, a brass tipped blotting pad or a hand blotter. Gloves, a silk muffler, knitted cravats and other things he can wear are permissible if you have known him from childhood and regard him much as you would a brother or a cousin. If, however, the girl is engaged to a man or there is a complete understanding between them, then she is more at liberty in her choice of articles.

How to Wash Silk Handkerchiefs.

In washing a silk handkerchief care should be taken to prevent its turning yellow. It should never be boiled nor have any soap rubbed on it. Make a lather of finely shredded white soap and water, wash and squeeze the handkerchief in it, press out all the moisture possible and dry quickly in the sun. Iron it while it is still damp, but not wet. White silk handkerchiefs used as neckties are sometimes cleaned very well with dried and powdered starch in which a little powdered blue has been mixed. The handkerchief is spread over a clean linen cloth. With a pad of clean white linen powder is rubbed over the silk, then dusted out, iron with a moderately hot iron. Two folds of slightly damped linen are laid over the silk on the right side. This brightens it considerably.

How to Prepare Hot Cloths.

If it is necessary to apply hot cloths to a sick person, and very often it is, there is a good method of having them hotter than they could be wrung by hand if they are laid in a wooden bucket of water and quickly passed through a small wringer. A child's toy wringer can be fastened to the bucket for the purpose. The cloth can be lifted with a fork and rapidly run through the wringer. In cases of severe chills the wet hot cloths bring relief much more quickly than heat from hot water bags or bottles and are more soothing.

How to Make Chestnut Dressing.

To make of the dressing for the Christmas turkey use the large chestnuts called the French chestnuts. Cook one and a half pints in boiling water until tender. Shell and press through a vegetable strainer. Season with two rounding tablespoonfuls of butter, a salt spoonful of pepper, a level teaspoonful of salt and four tablespoonfuls of cream. Now add a cupful of fine cracker crumbs and a quarter of a cupful of melted butter. Never put poultry seasoning or sweet herbs into a chestnut dressing.

How to Keep the Stove Bright.

An easy way to keep the stove shining is to buy a palm brush to keep the hands from coming in contact with the polish and have a polishing brush that is made especially for stoves. Apply the polish with the paint brush while the stove is lukewarm. Allow it to dry and then polish. A beautiful shine will be the result without much time or labor. Mix the polish to the consistency of thick cream with soapsuds.

How to Open Jars.

Every housewife knows what it is to have a glass jar to which the cover is screwed so tightly that it seems impossible to remove it. One way out of this annoying difficulty is to light a piece of paper and hold the top of the jar over it. The top may then be easily unscrewed.

How to Make Hazelnut Custard.

This is a favorite at one of the New York hotels. To a custard add one-half cupful of finely ground hazelnuts. The nuts will rise to the top and form a tender crust to the custard. Walnuts, pecans or almonds may be used in place of the hazelnuts.

"Pa," said Bert, "won't you double my allowance?"

"Why should I, sonny?"

"Oh, I thought if it was bigger it would be more on your mind and you might remember to give it to me sometimes."—London Telegraph.

The Publisher's Claims Sustained

UNITED STATES COURT OF CLAIMS

"The publishers of Webster's International Dictionary allege that it "is, in fact, the popular, unabridged thoroughly re-edited in every detail, and vastly enriched in every part, with the purpose of adapting it to meet the larger and severer requirements of a more general use."

We are of the opinion that this allegation most clearly and accurately describes the work that has been accomplished and the result that has been reached. The Dictionary, as it now stands, has been thoroughly revised in every detail, has been corrected in every part, and is admirably adapted to meet the larger and severer requirements of a generation which demands more of popular professional knowledge than any generation that the world has ever contained.

It is perhaps needless to add that we refer to the dictionary in our judicial work as to the highest authority in accuracy of definition; and that in the future as in the past it will be the source of constant reference.

scarcely audible.

"It was I who brought you here. You were in the hall. You would have been found. The house is roused."

He turned abruptly to the door, but she caught his arm. "What are you going to do? You will be seen!"

"So much the better. It will be at my proper measure—as a prowler, a housebreaker, a disturber of honest sleep!"

"No, no!" she protested in a panic. "You shall not. I will not have you taken for what you are not. I know. But they would not know. No one must see you leave this room. Do you not think of me?"

He caught his breath hard. "Think of you!" he repeated huskily. "Is there never an hour when I do not think of you? Is there a day when I would not die to serve you? Yet in my very sleep"—

He mused, gazing at her where she stood in the half light, a misty, uncertain figure. She was curiously happy. The delicious and gaugless sense of guilt, however—the guilt of the hidden, not the blameworthy thing—that was tingling through her was for him a shrinking and acute self reproach.

She was silent. "Forgive me," he said, "if you can. I—I can never forgive myself. How can I best go?"

For answer she moved to the window, slender and wraithlike. He followed silently. As she parted the curtain a second of bright lightning revealed the landscape, the dark hedges and clustered trees. It blackened, and she drew him back, with a hushed word, pointing where a lantern was flashing through the shrubbery.

"It is a watchman," she said. "He will be gone presently."

"God help me!" he whispered, the pent passion of his dreams rushing to utterance. "Why did I ever see your face? I was reckless and careless then. I had damned the decent side of me that now is quivering alive. I have tried to blot your face from my memory, but it is useless. I shall always see it."

On the lawn just outside the window low voices were heard through the increasing rain. They passed, and after a moment he softly unlatched the window.

"Goodby," he said.

She stretched out her hand. He touched it, then drew the window wide. As he stepped noiselessly down on to the springy turf the lightning flashed again, a pale green glow that seemed almost before her face. She drew back, and the same instant, through the thunder, the electric bell on the wall rang sharply. She threw on her dressing gown, thrust her feet into slippers and hastened from the room.

The same flash that had startled Jessica lighted brightly the physician and the watchman, who stood at the corner of the building, having finished their tour of inspection. It was the latter who had found the open door and who had aroused the doctor, insisting that he had seen a man in the hall. The other had poohpoohed this, but now by the lightning both saw the figure emerge from the French window and disappear in the darkness.

They ran back, the physician ahead. The window was not locked, and they stepped through it into an empty room.

"To be sure," said the doctor disgustedly. "He was here all the time, heard us searching the halls and took the first unlocked door he found. Miss Holme, no doubt, is sitting up with Mr. Stires. Not a word of this," he added as they walked along the hall.

He barred the outer door behind the watchman and went on. As he reached David Stires' room the door opened, and Jessica came out. She spoke to him in a low, anxious voice. "I was coming for you," she said. "I am afraid he is not so well. I cannot rouse him. Will you come in and see what you can do?"

The doctor entered, and a glance at his patient alarmed him. Until dawn he sat with Jessica watching. When the early sunlight was flooding the room, however, David Stires opened his eyes and looked upon her quite naturally.

"Where is Harry Sanderson?" he asked. "I thought he was here."

She looked at him with a forced smile. "You have been dreaming," she answered.

"I suppose so," he said, with a sigh, "but it was very real. I thought he came in and spoke your name."

She stroked his hand. "It was fancy, dear."

He lay silent a moment. Then he said, "If it could only have been Harry you married instead of Hugh, for he loved you, Jessica."

She flushed as she said, "Ah, that was fancy too."

It was the first time since the day of her marriage that he had spoken Hugh's name.

Chapter 21

AS Harry made his way down the mountain in the blank and heavy dark, correcting his path by the lightning, he had faced squarely the question that in that dim room had become an imminent demand.

"What if I love her! What right have I to love her, with a wretched name like mine? She has refinement, a measure of wealth no doubt, and I am poor as poverty, dependent on the day's grubbing in the ditch for tomorrow's bacon and flour. Yet that would not stand in the way. I am no venal rogue, haggling for the loaves and fishes. Whatever else she cursed me with, nature gave me a brain, and culture and experience have educated it. With hand or brain I can hew my own niche to stand in."

So he had argued, but his argument ended always with the same stern and unanswerable conclusion: "To drag her down in order to lift myself! Because she pities me—pity is akin to love—shall I take advantage of her interest and innocence?"

In the cabin through the long hours till the dawn began to infiltrate the dark hollows of the wood he had lain wide eyed, thinking. When day came he had cooked his breakfast and thereafter sat watching the havoc of the storm through the window. Hours passed thus before the fury of the wind had spent itself. At length he rose, threw open the door and stood looking out upon the wind whipped foliage and the drab desolation of the fog. Then he threw on his mackinaw coat, picked up his gold pan and climbed down the slope. Beneath all other problems must lie the sordid problem of his daily food. He had uncovered a crevice in the bed rock at the end of his trench the day before, and now he scraped a pailful of the soggy gravel it contained and carried it back to the cabin.

With a sigh he took off his damp coat and threw a log on the fire. He absentedly watched it kindle, then filled and lit his pipe and turned to the bookshelf. He ran his hand absently along the row. Where had been that wide, dim expanse of library walls that hovered like a mirage beyond his visual sight? He chose a volume he had been reading and turned the pages.

All at once his hand clinched. He gave a choked cry. He was staring at a canceled bank draft bearing his own name—a draft across whose face was written in the cramped hand resembling the signature a word that seemed etched in livid characters of shame—"Forgery!"

"Pay to Hugh Stires—the sum of $5,000." He read the phrase in a hoarse, husky monotone, every vein beating fiercely, his body hot with the heat of a forge. There it was, a hideous chapter of it, the damnable truth from which he had shrunk!

Did the town know? He snatched at the draft and read the date. More than a year ago, and it had been presented for payment in a distant city, the city near which he had been picked up beside the railroad track. The forged name was the same as his own. Who was David Stires? His father? Had that city been his home once, and that infamous act the forerunner of his flight or exile? He looked at the paper again with painful intentness. It was canceled, therefore had been paid without question. Yet the man it had robbed had stamped it with that venomous hallmark. Clearly the law had not stepped in, for here he was at liberty, owning his name. He had been let go, then, disowned, to carry his badge of crime here into the wilderness. And how had he lived since then?

He stumbled to a stair and sat down, his frame rigid. He thought of the ribbed sluice in the gulch below, of his own unhappy adventure of the night. How could he tell what he had done—what he might do? Minutes went by as he sat motionless, his mind catching strange kaleidoscopic pictures that fled past him into the void. At length he rose and went to the window. Far down the hillside a faint line through the mist spanned the gulch bottom. A groan burst from his lips.

A PARISIAN HAIR CUT.

It Is Expensive at Times, but Always a Sociable Affair.

The Paris hairdresser cannot be persuaded to do anything more than pretend to remove a little hair. It almost breaks his heart if you insist on a serviceable cut.

The price charged is sometimes a painful surprise to the unsuspecting visitor. He has been warned to avoid those establishments where the tariff is not displayed and so does not hesitate when he sees the announcement, "Hair Cutting, 1 Franc."

When the operation is over, however, he is a little hurt at being asked for 3 francs.

If he knows enough French to understand, he gathers that 1 franc is for the hair cutting, 1 franc for a "friction" and 1 franc for "perfume."

Frenchmen pay these charges without complaining and seem to enjoy a visit to the barber's. As they generally go to the same shop—and Frenchmen have their hair "cut" once a week—the assistant becomes their confidential friend.

His customers discuss with him their love affairs, their ailments and lastly their business.

He is also supposed to be a great authority on horse racing, but he is too prudent to act on his own tips and generally manages to save enough money to start in business for himself.

Criminality and Alcoholism.

The Paris correspondent of the Journal of the American Medical Association writes:

"For several years, criminality has increased in truly disquieting proportions. The principal cause appears to be alcoholism. Below is an instructive table showing that since the law on free traffic in liquors, the increase in the number of murders, suicides and cases of insanity has been almost parallel to the increase in the consumption of alcohol.

	1851.	1905
Number of licenses.....	367,829	473,693
Hectoliters of alcohol manufactured	1,822,000	2,609,000
Murderers brought to justice.....	183	274
Murderers not brought to justice.....	344	495
Suicides.....	6,741	8,932
Cases of insanity.....	47,588	71,587

The Berlin correspondent of the same magazine includes in his letter the following paragraphs:

"It is evident that the authorities are supporting the campaign against intemperance as far as possible. The organs of the social workmen's insurance societies, the railroads managers and the municipal officials are taking part in this campaign by issuing appropriate regulations, establishing places for the sale of alcohol-free drinks, and by disciplinary punishment of drunkeness and the discharge of intoxicated employes. Some railroad managers have lately installed in the workshops automatic vending machines for bouillon capsules, which are gladly used by the workmen to prepare for themselves, with the aid of hot water, a palatable broth.

"For a long time apparatus for furnishing Seltzer water and for making coffee have been placed in the workshops. The use of milk, tea, coffee and nutritious broth is constantly increasing among the railroad employes. The traffic in these articles is either in the hands of the company or in those of the workmen's societies, which apply the profits to benevolent purposes."

ANATOMY.

A More or Less Helpful Lesson For Beginners.

Proceeding in a southerly direction from the torso, we have the hips, useful for padding, and the legs. The legs hold up the body and are sometimes used in walking, but when riding in automobiles they take up valuable space which otherwise might be employed to better advantage.

Attached to the legs are the feet. Some varieties of feet are cold. Some people are born with cold feet, others acquire cold feet, and still others have cold feet thrust upon them.

The surface of the body is covered with cuticle, which either hangs in graceful loops or is stretched tightly from bone to bone.

On the face it is known as complexion and is used extensively for commercial purposes by dermatologists, painters and decorators.

Between the cuticle and the bones are the muscles, which hold the bones together and prevent them from falling out and littering up the sidewalk as we walk along.

Packed neatly and yet compactly inside the body are the heart, the liver and the lungs; also the gall, which in Americans is abnormally large.

These organs are used occasionally by the people who own them, but their real purpose is to furnish surgeons a living.—Thomas L. Masson in Lippincott's.

A Free Handed Prince.

The following is told of the famous Prince of Conde. He left his son, aged nine years, 50 louis d'or to spend while he himself was absent in Paris. On his return the boy came to him triumphantly, saying:

"Papa, here is all the money safe. I have never touched it once."

The prince, without making any reply, took his son to the window and quietly emptied all the money out of the purse into the street. Then he said:

"If you have neither virtue enough to give away your money nor spirit enough to spend it, always do this for the future, that the poor may have a chance of it."

The Bab.

The East Indian teacher who founded the cult known as "Bahism" was "the Bab"—Mirza Ali Mohammed. He was born in Shiraz, Persia, in the year 1820. He was trained at first to commercial life, but a pilgrimage to Mecca awakened in his heart the religious zeal which made him devote his life henceforth to developing the faith which he held. Upon his return to his native city in 1844 he assumed the title of Bab, or "Gate" leading to the truth. In the eyes of the orthodox Mohammedans the tenets of the Bab were rank heresy, and he was taken to Tabriz and shot.—New York American.

Overdoing It a Little.

"Speaking of economy," says a character in one of Life's stories, "Gillett says that he is saving up for a rainy day."

"H'm!" came the response. "His wife thinks he must be saving up for another flood."

Five Hundred Charlevoix County Patrons Will go to Traverse City in 1909

At the Pomona meeting at Wilson last week, it was voted to make the subject of manual training a subject to be discussed in subordinate granges the coming year. It was also requested that the county road system be discussed during the month of March as well as the question of local option. Subordinate lecturers will please report these discussions to this office. From time to time the COURIER will print special articles bearing on these subjects to aid in the discussions. The address of each subordinate lecturer is earnestly requested at once.

Dialogue, "The Value of Principle,"—Two boys.

Instrumental music.

Recitation.

Dialogue, "The Lost Penknife" Four girls.

Recitation.

Solo—"Who will Reap."

All members requested to be present. Visitors welcome.

Ironton Grange No. 707.

Ironton Grange met in regular session February 2, with a good attendance. After the business session the grange was turned over to the lecturer who furnished an excellent program as follows:

Recitation—Mrs. Peter Nasson.

Reading—Ole Lyngklip.

Song—J. W. Flanders.

Some songs were then cut into strips and passed among the members to sing, the songs were: "Home Sweet Home", "My Country 'Tis of Thee," Throw Out the Life-Line" and "Darling Nellie Gray."

It was hard to get the members started as they had never heard or saw anything like it before. At the next meeting a debate will be had on the subject: "Resolved, that the Michigan Compulsory School Law is a Failure." Leaders, Mrs. Harry Mitchell and Mrs. Peter Nasson.

Meeting closed in regular form to meet again in two weeks.

South Arm Grange No. 815.

South Arm grange met in regular session Saturday evening February 6, with an attendance of 20. All officers were present.

Three applications were received. The Master appointed Will Murphy Cecil Blair and Nathalie Liskum a committee on applications. The Master then called Brother H. L. Olney to the front and presented him with a watch fob as a token of appreciation on behalf of the grange. Brother Olney has served as Master since the organization of South Arm grange with the exception of one year.

Lecturer's hour was carried out with songs, discussions and a debate. After grange closed the degree team practiced the first degree. They will meet again for practice Saturday evening February 13.

Maple Grove Grange No. 1255.

Maple grove grange met in regular session Tuesday evening with all officers present, with an attendance of twenty eight. John Price was instructed in the first and second degrees.

The special committee on social reported receipts of $13.12 from box social.

Lecturer's hour consisted of songs, recitations, and discussion of dairy cattle.

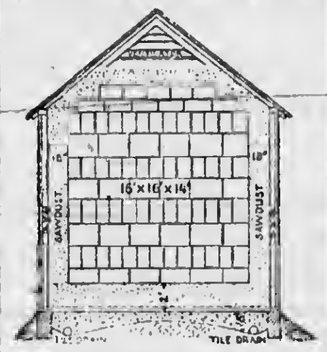
THE COUNTRY ICEHOUSE.

An Important Adjunct to the Up to Date Farm.

By PROFESSOR OSCAR ERF, Ohio Agricultural college.

In this age of advanced farming the icehouse is an important adjunct. The most economical building is the one so constructed that it will preserve the greatest amount of ice in proportion to the amount of ice stored. Waste in an icehouse is largely caused by meltage from the top, sides and bottom. In a properly constructed icehouse and when the ice is properly packed and cared for no waste should take place from the inside of the pile of ice. The melting from the sides, bottom and top is caused by insufficient insulation.

To insulate to such an extent that no meltage would take place would be impracticable, but with a thorough understanding of the construction of an icehouse a minimum amount of meltage can be obtained. The waste from the bottom is generally considered to be the greatest. The amount of ice melted in the bottom of the icehouse varies from one to six feet during the year, depending upon the construction of the floor. If the icehouse is provided with an air tight floor, with the ice laid on at least eighteen inches of dry sawdust, the bottom waste rarely exceeds twelve inches during the year. On the other hand, if the ice is piled in the icehouse on the bare ground without any insulation under it or any provision made for drainage the meltage frequently is six feet. The side and top meltage is not so great, but it frequently ranges from one to three feet, depending upon the insulation. The manner of insulation is shown in the cut of cross section of icehouse.



CROSS SECTION OF ICEHOUSE.

The icehouse should be located in the coolest place possible and always above ground. The size of the building must be determined by the amount of ice used during the year. For a man who keeps about twenty cows and sells the milk an icehouse 14 by 14 by 12 feet high is of sufficient size. However, in no case should an icehouse be smaller than 12 by 12 by 10 feet high, because the outside surface is too great compared with the volume, and therefore too much ice is wasted in proportion to the amount used.

In the plans submitted the framework is made by laying a 2 by 4 sill on the concrete foundation. Fasten this to the foundation by cementing a few bolts into the concrete and allowing them to extend through the 2 by 4 sill. Two by four studding is then placed upon this sill sixteen inches apart from center to center. The rafters for the roof are likewise made of 2 by 4's, placed the same distance apart as the studding, but the purlin plate upon the 2 by 4 studding should be at least six inches wide. The outside of studding may be boarded either with common sheeting and paper, upon which poplar siding is nailed, or with patent siding or shiplap siding, the latter being the cheapest and requiring only a single thickness of board.

The roof should be made with not less than one-half to one-third pitch and preferably covered with shingles, for shingles are better insulators than either slate or metal. However, paper may sometimes be used to good advantage. A cupola or flue should be built upon the roof to allow for the removal of the warm air from the top of the ice. The ventilator may be placed in the gable end instead of the cupola and when so placed acts for the same purpose.

A continuous door should be cut in one end to allow the ice to be put in. This door may extend from the gable down to within five feet of the bottom.

In the cut, ice and milk house combined, the side elevation shows how the scheme has the advantage of utilizing the water from the icehouse here shown for cooling the milk. No ice needs to be removed from the icehouse. It operates automatically. If the weather is warm the ice melts more rapidly and keeps water in the tank at the required temperature.

MONEY IN OLD ORCHARDS.

Profitable Fruit Crops From Run Down Farms.

A woman who owns and manages large orchards in the central part of New York state furnishes interesting information which will be of interest in all states where fruit is raised. She says:

"Within the last two months I've had as many as twenty letters from women asking for advice about investing in fruit trees. Most of these women are thinking of investing in farms or small country places where there are already what they term old, run down orchards. They come to me to find out if they can ever make those old trees bear.

"According to my experience, an apple tree in this climate has to be pretty far gone to be ready for the ax—I mean, of course, when it is a good variety. The trouble with the apple trees which we see on these old places is that they need care and attention.

"They have been allowed to stand year after year with their roots covered by sod. They are actually dying of thirst and starvation. If one will only study the difference in the color of the leaves of trees growing in a tilled orchard and in one allowed to go to grass in midsummer he will see the signs of starvation and thirst.

"The first thing to do with such an orchard is to plow it up. If it has been in sod for a number of years there will be many roots near the surface. Do not be afraid of hurting the trees by cutting these roots with the plow.

"This plowing should be done early in the spring and should be repeated several times during the first season. If the roots are so thick that you cannot plow, then chop up the sod with a disk harrow. If the land is too rough even for that, turn in hogs. Drop a few grains of corn here and there in crowbar holes and leave the rest for the hogs.

"Trees in such neglected orchards always need pruning. This should be done when the trees are dormant. February is usually the best month.

"If the tree has not been pruned for several years, do not take out all the useless wood at one time. Let some of it go over.

"Now, pruning is something that should never be carelessly done. The prunings should all be burned and the ashes scattered about the roots of the trees.

"After this severe pruning you will get a big crop of water sprouts in the summer. Rub them off promptly. After this first pruning it will be necessary to prune a little every season.

"As a rule, there is enough plant food in the soil if it is only put in shape so that the trees can use it. If, however, this should not be the case then a fertilizer containing nitrogen is the best tonic. A liberal dressing of barnyard manure is the very best way of supplying this nitrogen. Nitrate of soda is also good.

"I have found it impossible to raise good fruit without a spray pump. If you have never sprayed, begin by writing to your state experimental station for its spraying bulletins. Don't spray feebly, but do the job thoroughly.

"Trees may be healthy and blossom year after year and no fruit be formed. This condition can be remedied in two ways. One way is to graft about every third tree in every third row with a pollen bearing variety. The other and sometimes the more convenient is to replant certain rows with pollen bearers. When setting out new orchards I always plant every fourth row with pollen bearers.

"Fortunately it is only in isolated orchards of a single variety that such conditions prevail. In fruit growing districts where several varieties are raised and bees are kept a total failure is next to impossible. It is not always necessary to keep bees, but it will pay a fruit grower, especially in a new country, to be on the safe side."

A fashionable dressmaker had been showing a friend a number of lovely wedding gowns, each ready for "sending home."

"In every one of those dresses, were you to take them apart," she said, "you would find a small lock of hair hidden—auburn hair, brown hair, golden hair, even gray hair. Seamstresses believe that she who works on a wedding gown if she sews a lock of her own hair into it will be married herself within the year."—London An-

FORTY-FIFTH ANNIVERSARY

Of the Founding of the Knights of Pythias.

CELEBRATED FRIDAY NIGHT, FEB. 19

A Short History of this Great Order Founded by Rathbone.

Now has Lodges Wherever the Flag Floats —Membership is Close to a Million —Is Rapidly Increasing.

Last Friday night was a great day for Pythianism in the United States, it being the fortyfifth anniversary of the founding of the order by Justus H. Rathbone in 1864. In Charlevoix the event was celebrated by the local lodge, over sixty being present. The program which follows was full of the sentiment of the order:

Opening song—Lodge.
Violin and piano duet—Misses Helen and Dorothy Armstrong.
Roll call in part.
Selection—Orchestra.
Completion of roll call.
Vocal solo, "One Morning, Oh so Early"—Mrs. A. L. Coulter.
"Our Charter Members and Early Days"—F. A. Smith.
Piano solo—Miss Smith.
"Looking Backward"—Hon. E. R. Harris. Judge Harris was unable to be present but sent a letter in response.
Duet, "Juanita"—Mrs. Coulter and Clare Coulter.
"Our Absent Brothers, Who They are and What They are Doing"—Dr. Armstrong. Dr. Armstrong was assisted by his little son Bruce and daughter Phila in a song.
"Our Fraternal Anniversary"—A. L. Fitch. After which lunch was served.

Letters were read from the following absent members: Charles Lamphear, Harold Hampton, E. M. Washburn, A. E. Stripp, J. G. Myers, J. W. Allcox, Lon A. Comfort, S. Stephenson.

Mr. Fitch's address took up the history of the order and its growth during the forty-five years of its existence, being along the same lines which we quote below:

The founder of the order was Justus H. Rathbone, a department clerk, to whom the thought first came of organizing a fraternal society, especially for the social advantage of the great army of clerks and employes in the several government departments in the city of Washington. This was in the midst of the civil war, and all surroundings seemed favorable to instituting such a body.

During the fall of 1863 Rathbone came into possession of a copy of John Banim's play of "Damon and Pythias," and this so impressed him with its adaptability for the ceremonial work of a fraternal society, that he at once commenced the preparation of a ritual for a body to be known as the "Knights of Pythias."

Just at that time—through a peculiar chain of circumstances—he had abundant leisure for the work, and as a result, by the end of 1863, the first ritual for the degrees of page of this order was ready.

For a few years after the installation of the first lodge in that city, the new order had a hard struggle, and several of the early lodges failed. After several close brushes with absolute failure, the Pythians spread into several states and a new impetus was given the life of the order. In a few years the supreme lodge was established in Washington and things were put on a firm footing. The first supreme chancellor, Samuel Read of New Jersey, was a great organizer, and did much to promote the growth and perfect the details and improve general conditions in the order. The troubles of the Knights of Pythias were not all over, however. Like the two friends in old Syracuse, they found they must bear many trials together to prove the "mettle of the pasture." When affairs were supposed to be moving smoothly it was found at the Richmond convention that the supreme commanding scribe was a defaulter, and financial collapse was narrowly averted. So for two conventions representatives had to pay their own expenses, and the organization had hard sledding. Finally through the energy and indomitable courage of the workers, improved conditions came about, and life stretched out in a smoother, more promising path before them.

No secret order has a higher ideal than that which the Knights of Pythias expect each member to realize. It is that of love for one's fellow-man so great that it will transcend all lesser things and leave self-love forgotten. The sentiment is a very old and very sweet one. It goes back into the fourth century before Christ, and touches the lives of two students who were followers of Pythagoras, and who were members of a secret society that believed in and taught his doctrines. Damon and Pythias were their names and in the stress of political strife that swung about Syracuse, their home city, they forty-fifth anniversary found need of a close friendship. They were men of high ideals and unblemished honor, and the corrupt political atmosphere incident to the rule of Dionysius was not pleasing to them. Pythias publicly denounced the tyrant and was imprisoned for his temerity, and condemned to death. He asked permission to go home and arrange his private affairs, and knowing the love of Damon to be strong, offered him as hostage against his return. Damon willingly came and stayed in prison and when Pythias, after overcoming many difficulties that beset his return journey, arrived at Syracuse just in the nick of time to save Damon from execution. Dionysius was so touched by such devotion that he pardoned the offender. He even asked to be admitted as a third into so loyal and devoted a brotherhood, but the friends refused him.

Auction Sales

The popularity of the COURIER'S plan of advertising auction sales and its value as an advertising medium has been proven beyond dispute by the following facts:

We have advertised every auction sale advertised in this locality.

Of all the sales advertised we have never had a dissatisfied patron.

An increase in the amount estimated the sale would bring has been the universal result of COURIER advertising according to the testimonials we have received.

Now is the time to hold an auction. Investigate the COURIER'S plan of advertising sales. We are the pioneers in auction sale advertising in Northern Michigan. This week on page 8 we advertise the sale of Mrs. Catherine Tunnith, one mile west and three fourths of a mile south of Ironton, Monday, March 1 at one o'clock p. m., E. B. Ward, auctioneer, J. W. Flanders, clerk.

On page 2, we advertise the sale of George and Henry Block, one mile southwest of Barnard, Thursday, March 4, at ten o'clock a. m., E. B. Ward, auctioneer.

DIFFICULT OPERATION

Performed on Everett Fahles by Dr J. B. Thielen

Kicked in the Side of Face by Horse Will Probably Recover From Injury

Everett Fahles of Echo, who has been engaged in hauling logs for Tracy Boss, of near Ellsworth, was kicked by a colt Thursday morning while working in the stable, the horse's hoof striking him on the left side of his head, breaking his ear and badly crushing his skull above the ear.

Dr. J. B. Thielen was called and found it necessary to remove a piece of the skull two inches square which had been driven into the brain by the force of the blow, also a large blood clot. The operation was a most difficult one, it being necessary to cut away the skin from around the wound and remove several of the smaller pieces of the skull which were deeply imbedded in the brain. The patient was unconscious for over seventy-two hours, regaining consciousness Monday, and at the present time is getting along nicely.

Dr. Levi Lewis assisted Dr. Thielen in giving the anesthetic.

A SUCCESSFUL BUSINESS MAN

Whose Business is Growing All the Time

BY THE USE OF NEWSPAPER SPACE

Which He Considers His Most Profitable Investment

Carries a Complete Line of Goods in His Line—Invites Comparison With Catalogue Houses

We take pleasure this week in presenting to our readers a cut of one of Charlevoix's most progressive merchants, Benjamin Brown.

Mr. Brown, who was brought up in Hayes township, learned the trade of harness making in Petoskey, where he worked at it for four years. Ten years ago he came to Charlevoix and opened a shop on Bridge street, which he operated for four years, selling out to Oldham & Oldham, after which he went west, where he remained for a year. On returning Mr. Brown formed a company known as the B. Brown Harness company, which continued up to a year ago, when Mr. Brown took over the entire business and has since continued it under the name of Benj. Brown.

Mr. Brown carries a full and complete stock of harnesses of all kinds, robes, blankets, fur coats, work coats, rain coats and veterinary remedies, besides maintaining a complete shop for all kinds of harness and shoe repairing.

A liberal advertiser, Mr. Brown says he attributes in a large degree his success in business, which is constantly increasing, to the use of printer's ink. "Why," says Mr. Brown, "I consider no investment which I make brings me better returns than the amount expended in newspaper advertising."

He stands ready at all times to compare prices with any catalogue or mail order house and in the majority of cases will go below their prices.

PRESIDENT ANGELL RESIGNS

After Nearly Forty-Eight Years of Service For the U. of M.

President James B. Angell submitted his resignation at Wednesday's meeting of the university regents and was offered the position of chancellor at a salary of four thousand dollars per year with the continued use of the president's mansion and free rent, heat and light. HAD NARROW ESCAPE

Five Harbor Springs Fishermen Afloat on Drift Ice.

Charlevoix Life Savers Went to Rescue but Others Were There First.

Thursday, word came that five men were afloat on the ice on Little Traverse bay. The life saving crew immediately took their boat and went to the rescue, making a nine mile pull of it, but others had saved the men from their dangerous position before their arrival. Dispatches from Harbor Springs tell the story of the danger and the rescue.

While a number of fishermen were at their shanties near three mile point Thursday morning, the ice suddenly parted and began to move out to open lake, carrying five men on it, Captain Charles Wright and son Byron, Edward Juifferet, Morris Powers and William Rosemeir. They soon realized the seriousness of the situation and set about cutting loose a cake about twenty-five feet square on which they hoped they might reach shore ice, by using lines floated to them on small chunks of ice by men on the stationary side, but the lines broke and they at once began to drift to the floating field, when Albert Zuber procured a canvas boat from one of the cottagers at Idylwild, and started out to be of what assistance he might. Unfortunately the boat was very light and leaked badly and he was unable to even return with it, so he too climbed to the floating block, and it was then the canvas boat served them best for it was used as a sail to hasten them back to the outside field where they remained until they were rescued, which was not until they had drifted some five miles into the open lake in a blinding snow storm. Excitement ran high in the village until nearly 3 o'clock, for the rescue seemed very uncertain at times because of the storm and the scarcity of boats suitable to reach them. Finally—a large life boat was taken from the Searchlight and carried to the shore some four or five miles up and a crew made up of Arthur Gower, Charles Clark, Oliver Gailhault, Charles Laurie and A. Whitney started out to rescue the six which they did, and brought them to shore about 4 o'clock. Aside from getting wet the men did not suffer much physical inconvenience as they had fuel in their shanties and a few eatables, but the experience is one they do not care to repeat, and anxious wives and mothers were overjoyed when the news came that the unfortunate ones were safe in the life boat, for it was feared by many that the rescue work would not be completed by nightfall, and that would have made matters still more serious.

TO FIGHT TUBERCULOSIS

Modern Woodmen Society Will Conduct Free Sanatorium

Society Has Over One Million Members and 13,000 Local Camps

At the last meeting of the Executive Council of the Modern Woodmen society, held at the headquarters of the society in Rock Island, Ill., it was decided to conduct that society's sanatorium, located at Colorado Springs, Colo., for the treatment of members afflicted with tuberculosis free of all charge to members.

The Modern Woodmen society, several months since, acquired 1,380 acres of land within seven miles of Colorado Springs, and has established thereon an up-to-date sanatorium, the tent colony plan being employed. The first colony was opened for the reception of patients on January 1, 1909. It is equipped to care for 121 patients, to which number admissions will be limited for the present.

The tents are octagonal structures, with shingle roofs, canvass sides, hardwood floors on solid cement foundations, heated by a central plant, equipped with all modern conveniences, such as telephones, etc., and each tent will accommodate one patient. An administration building for physicians, nurses, dining hall, baths of all kinds, etc., stands in the center of the colony.

A movement is already under way to equip the second colony plant of 60 tents. Each tent or tent house, completely equipped, represents an expense of $250, and a number of local camps or lodges of the society have decided to donate tents. As there are over 13,000 local camps of Modern Woodmen, and over 1,000,000 members, it is anticipated that several colonies will soon be equipped in this way.

The members and local camps of the society have voluntarily contributed to the sanatorium fund over $70,000, and at the last national convention a permanent tax of ten cents per year was voted.

Each life saved to the Woodmen society, by means of this sanatorium, will, it is stated, represent a saving of $1,700—the average amount of the Woodmen policies in force—at an expense for treatment of approximately one-twentieth of that sum. In the broader sense, each life saved means the preservation to the family of its head and bread-winner and to the state of a useful, self-sustaining citizen.

TWO MEN KILLED

By Railroad Accident at Boyne City Friday

William Spratt and James Mehegas the Victims of Collision

Struck by a switch engine on the Boyne City, Gaylord & Alpena railroad at 9 o'clock Friday morning, William Spratt and James Mehegas were instantly killed. Ralph Bears, who was on the car with them escaped by jumping.

The three men, who were all wood scalers, employed by the chemical works, had orders to follow the passenger train out on a gasoline car to make an inspection of some wood. This they did and when they got into the cooperage yards, they ran into a dense cloud of steam coming from the dry kilns. Neither Mehegas nor Spratt saw the engine coming, but Bears, who was standing up to button his coat, discerned it descending down upon them through the steam.

With a cry of warning, he jumped to safety, but the other two did not have time. Both men were horribly mangled and their deaths were instantaneous. Both were married and had families, and both were highly esteemed citizens, the shocking accident stirring the town deeply.

An inquest was held and no blame was placed on the crew of the switch engine. The men had followed the passenger closely, but in some manner, they got onto the wrong track and the switch engine struck them.

HISTORICAL SOCIETY

Next Meeting will be Held with Dr. and Mrs. G. W. Crocker

The Historical society will meet Friday evening with Dr. and Mrs. G. W. Crocker.

PRESENT CORP OF TEACHERS

Are Nearly all Engaged for the Next Year

SPLENDID SPIRIT NOW IN SCHOOLS

Superintendent Woodley a Man of Broad Experience

In all Lines of School Work—Citizens and Board are to be Congratulated on Again Securing Him

At the last meeting of the board of education, the present corps of teachers were all tendered their present positions at increased salaries, all of whom accepted, with the exception of Mr. Wilson, Miss Weatherwax of the eighth grade, Miss Penfield of the sixth grades, Miss McClanathan and Miss Tysver of the south side schools.

This will be good news to all the patrons of our schools who have kept track of the work which is being done at the present time and the enviable reputation which has been gained by Charlevoix schools and their teachers, which stand second to none in the state.

Mr. Woodley, the superintendent, was born on a farm in the southern part of the state and secured his early education in the district schools. When sixteen years of age he took a review course at Benton Harbor college, after which he taught in the district schools of Berrien county for seven years, afterward attending Benton Harbor college from which he graduated in 1898, when he went to California and taught at Modesto for one year. On returning to Michigan he filled the position of assistant in the science department of Benton Harbor college for one year, afterward entering the University of Michigan, from which he graduated in 1903 with the degree of A. B. He then accepted the position of superintendent at Three Oaks, which he held for two years, receiving from the U. of M. the degree of M. Pd. in absentia.

In 1905 Mr. Woodley was engaged as superintendent of schools of this city and during that time the standard has constantly increased under his management and the splendid corps of teachers who have worked under him. His experience in both the district and village schools, as well as his college life, has given him a knowledge of the different phases of work needed in school work, which has proven invaluable to our pupils.

Mr. Woodley is not content to follow the old beaten paths but has constantly reached out for whatever would make for better work in the schools, and while not biased in any way in his views, when he is thoroughly satisfied that he is in the right will carry out his plans despite opposition, and the splendid spirit now shown in our school, the same spirit which made the pupils successful on the athletic field is proof of the correctness of his views.

The board is to be congratulated in again being able to secure the services of our present teachers as it means another year of the same good work which we have had in the past.

COUNTY ROAD SYSTEM

How the Plan Differs From the Present System.

Duties of the Commissioners and Board of Supervisors Explained.

In a nut shell, the county road system is a plan whereby the leading public roads of the county are improved and kept in repair by a board of county road commissioners at the expense of every property owner in the county.

The tax for county roads cannot be more than $2 on each $1,000 valuation.

All roads not taken over by the county road commissioners are kept in repair the usual way by the township.

All damages on county roads are collected from the county.

The township road taxes on the property abutting the county road goes to the township to be expended on roads in other parts of the township.

Costly bridges are thus built on the leading roads by the county instead of by the township.

Property in villages and cities contribute toward the county road fund as does the farm property.

If a majority of those voting thereon vote "Yes," then the system is adopted.

The next move is for the supervisors to decide—

1st. How many county road commissioners there shall be, not to exceed three.

2nd. What their compensation shall be.

3rd. To appoint the commissioners.

The commissioners must meet on or before October 1 each year, and decide which roads should be built and how much tax should be levied for county roads, not to exceed two dollars on each one thousand dollars of assessed valuation, and hand their determination to the board of supervisors.

The board of supervisors has the veto power so the road board have to make such recommendations as will suit the supervisors, or fail to get the tax spread.

The tax is collected in December.

Then the county commissioners can lay out their work and begin early the next spring to build state reward road.

No real work can be done in counties not now under the system until 1910.

ONE MILLION DOLLARS FOR A GOOD STOMACH

This Offer Should be a Warning to Every Man and Woman.

The newspapers and medical journals recently have had much to say relative to a famous millionaires' offer of a million dollars for a new stomach.

The great multi-millionaire was too busy to worry about the condition of his stomach. He allowed his dyspepsia to run from bad to worse until in the end it became incurable.

His misfortune serves as a warning to others.

Everyone who suffers with dyspepsia for a few years will give everything he owns for a new stomach.

Dyspepsia is caused by an abnormal state of the gastric juices. There is one element missing. The absence of this destroys the function of the gastric fluids. They lose their power to digest food.

We are now able to supply the missing element—to restore to the gastric juices their digestive power, and to make the stomach strong and well.

We know that Rexall Dyspepsia Tablets will positively and permanently cure disordered stomachs, indigestion and dyspepsia.

We want you to try them and will return your money if you are not more than satisfied with the result.

CHAPTER XXI—Continued.

"That is the hydraulic flume," he said aloud. "Gold has been stolen there in the past again and again. Some was stolen two nights ago. How do I know but that I am the thief?" Was that what Preudergast had meant by the "safe way to beat the game?" A shiver ran over him. "How do I know!" he thought. "I can see myself—the evil side of me—when the dark had fallen waking and active. I see myself creeping down there, stealing from shadow to shadow, to scoop the gold from the riffles when the moon is under a cloud. I see men sifting from dark to daylight with loaded rifles across their knees watching. I see a flash of fire. I hear a report. I see myself there by the sluice boxes, dead, shot down in the act of a thief, making good the name men know me by!"

The figure of Jessica came before him, standing in her soft white gown, her hand against her cheek and the jasmine odors about her. The dream he had dreamed could not be—never never, never! All that was left was surrender, ignominious flight to scenes barren of suggestion.

At that instant a shining point caught his eye. It came from the pan of gravel on the doorstep, on which the rain had been beating. He thrust the draft into his pocket and seized a double handful of the gravel. He plunged it into a pail of water and held it to the light. It sparkled with coarse, yellow flakes of gold. He dropped the handful with a sharp exclamation, threw on his coat and rushed from the cabin.

All day, alone on the fog soaked hill side, Harry toiled in the trench with only food or rest.

* * * * * * *

It was a fair, sweet evening, and the room where Jessica sat beside David Stires' bed, reading aloud to him, was flooded with the falling sun light. Since the old man's seizure in the night he had been much worse, and she had scarcely left his room. Today, however, he had sat propped by pillows, able to read and chat, and the deep personal anxiety that had numbed her had yielded.

A knock came at the door. It was a nurse with letters for him from the mail, and while he opened them Jessica laid aside the book and went slowly down the hall to the sun parlor, where the doctor stood with the group gathered after the early supper, chatting of the newest "strike" on the mountain.

"We'll be famous if we keep on," he was saying as she looked out of the wide windows across the haze where the sunlight drifted down in dust of gold. "I've a mind to stake out a claim myself."

"We pay you better," said one of the occupants grimly. "Anyway, the whole of Smoky mountain was staked in the excitement a year ago. There's no doubt about this find, I suppose?"

"It's on exhibition at the bank," the doctor replied, "more than $5,000 cached in a crevice in the glacial age as neat as a Christmas stocking!"

The talk went on about her.

"Where is the lucky claim?" some one asked.

"Just below this ridge," the doctor replied. "It is called the 'Little Paymaster.'"

The name caught her ear. The Little Paymaster? That was the name on the tree—on Hugh's claim! At that instant she thought she heard David Stires calling. She turned and ran quickly up the long hall to his open door.

The sight of his face at first startled her, for it was held captive of emotion, but it was an emotion of joy, not of pain. A letter fluttered in his grasp. He thrust it into her hands.

"Jessica," he exclaimed, "Hugh has paid it! He has sent the $5,000, interest and principal, to the bank to my account."

"Hugh has paid it."

For a moment she stood transfixed. The talk she had mechanically heard leaped into significance, and her mind ran back to the hour when she had left the draft at the cabin. She caught the old man's hand and knelt by his chair, laughing and crying at once. During these last few days the impulse to tell all that she had concealed had been almost irresistible. Now, the barrier had fallen. The secret she had repressed so long came forth in a rush of sentences that left him mute and amazed.

"I should have told you before," she ended, "but I didn't know—I wasn't sure"— She broke down for very joy.

He looked at her with eyes unnaturally bright. "Tell me everything, Jessica!" he said. "Everything, from the beginning!"

"He was young and irresponsible, Jessica," said the old man. "Money always came so easily. He didn't realize what he was doing when he signed that draft. He has learned a lesson out in the world. It won't hurt his career in the end, for no one but you and I and one other knows it. Thank God! if his memory comes back"—

"Oh, it will!" she breathed. "It must! That day on the Knob he only needed the clew! When I tell him who I am he will know me. He will remember it all. I am sure—sure! Will you let me bring him to you?" she added softly.

"Yes," he said, pressing her hand, "tomorrow. I shall be stronger then."

She rose and lighted the lamp, shading it from his eyes.

"Do you remember the will, Jessica," he asked her presently—"the will I drew the day he came back? You never knew, but I signed it—the night of your wedding. Harry Sanderson was right, my dear, wasn't he?

"I wish now I hadn't signed it, Jessica," he added. "I must set it right! I must set it right!" He watched her with a smile on his face. "I will rest now," he said. And she adjusted the pillows and turned the lamp low.

Crossing the room, she stepped through the long window on to the porch and stood leaning on the railing. The words of the Biblical narrative flashed through her mind: "And he arose and came to his father. But when he was yet a great way off his father saw him and had compassion and ran and fell on his neck and kissed him." So Hugh's father would meet him now!

Harry had labored, spurred by a fierce haste to make requital. Till the last ounce of the rich "pocket" had been washed and the whole taken to the bank in the town no one had known of the find. It had repaid the forgery and left him a handful of dollars over—enough to take him far away from the only thing that made life worth the effort.

A gradual feeling of apprehension had come to Jessica—an impression of blankness and chill that affected her strangely. She stood still, frightened at the sudden sense of utter soundlessness.

She caught up the lamp and, turning the wick, approached the bed. She put out her hand and touched the wasted one on the coverlet. Then a sobbing cry came from her lips.

David Stires was gone. A crowning joy had goldened his bitterness at the last moment, and he had gone away with his son's face in his heart and the smile of welcome on his lips.

Chapter 22

DARK was falling keen and cool, for frost was in the air, touching the fall foliage on the hills to crimson and amber and etching delicate lace tracery on the spidery framework of the long black railroad bridge that hung above "the hole." The warning light from a signal post threw a crimson splash on the ground. Its green zone cast a pallor on a bearded face turned out over the gloomy water.

"It was here," he said aloud. He stood a moment, his hands clinched. "The new life began here. Here, then, is where the old life ended." From where he stood he could see blossoming the yellow lights of the little city, five miles away. He set his shoulders, whistled to the small dog that nosed near by and set off at a quick pace down the road.

Once in the streets he turned up his coat collar and settled the brim of his felt hat more closely over his eyes. He crossed an open square and presently came to the gate of a Gothic chapel set well back from the street. Its great rose window was alight, for on this evening was to be held a memorial service for the old man whose money had built the pile, who had died a fortnight before in a distant sanitarium.

He turned at the sound of wheels, and the blur shocked itself apart to reveal a kindly face that looked at him for an instant framed in the window of a passing carriage. Inside the carriage Bishop Ludlow settled back, with a sigh. "Only a face on the pavement," he said to his wife, "but it reminded me somehow of Harry Sanderson."

"How strange it is," she said—the bishop had no secrets from his wife—"never a word or a sign, and everything in his study just as he left it. What can you do, John? It is four months ago now, and the parish needs a rector."

He did not reply for a moment. The question touched the trouble that was ever present in his mind.

"I know," he said at length. "I may have failed in my whole duty, but I haven't known how to tell David Stires, especially since we heard of his illness. I had written to him—the whole story. The ink was not dry on the paper when the letter came from Jessica telling us of his death."

Behind them as they talked the man on the pavement was walking on feverishly, the dog following with a reluctant whine.

At last he came to a wide, dark lawn set thick with aspens clustering about a white house. He hesitated a moment, then walked slowly up the broad, weed grown garden path toward its porch. In the half light the massive silver door plate stood out clearly. He had known instinctively that that house had been a part of his life, and yet a tremor caught him as he read the name—Stires. The intuition that had bent his steps from the street, the old stirring of dead memory had brought him to his past at last. This house had been his home!

He started. A man in his shirt sleeves was standing by a half open side door regarding him narrowly.

"Thinking of buying?" The query was good humoredly satiric. "Or may be just looking the old ranch over with a view to a shakedown?"

The trespasser smiled grimly. It was not the first time he had seen that weather beaten face. "You have given up surgery as a profession, I see," he said.

The other came nearer, looked at him in a puzzled way, then laughed.

"If it isn't the cove we picked up on

"It was here," he said aloud.

the railroad track," he said, "dog and all! I thought you were far down the coast, where it's warmer. Nothing much doing with you, eh?"

"Nothing much," answered the man he addressed. Others might recognize him as the black sheep, but this nondescript watchman whom chance had set here could not. He knew him only as the dingy vagabond whose broken head he had bandaged in the box car.

"I'm in better luck," went on the man in shirt sleeves. "I struck this about two months ago as gardener first, and now I'm a kind of a sort of a watchman. They gave me a bunk in the summer house there"—he jerked his thumb backward over his shoulder—"but I know a game worth two of that for these cold nights. I'll show you. I can put you up for the night," he added, "if you like."

The "wayfarer" shook his head. "I must get away tonight, but I'm much obliged."

"Haven't done anything, have you?" asked his one time companion curiously. "You didn't seem that sort."

The bearded face turned away. "I'm not 'wanted' by the police, no, but I'm on the move, and the sooner I take the trail the better. I don't mind night travel."

"You'd be better for a rest," said the watchman. "But you're the doctor. Come in, and we'll have a nip of something warm anyhow."

His guest followed him into a spacious hall, scarce conscious of what he did. A double door to the left was shut, but he nevertheless knew perfectly that the room it hid had a tall French window letting on to a garden where camellias had once dropped like blood. The open door to the right led to the library.

There the yellow light touched the dark wainscoting, the marble mantelpiece, dim paintings on the wall and a great brass bound Korean desk in a corner. What black thing had once happened in that room? What face had once looked at him from that wheel chair? It was an old face gray and lined and passionate, his father doubtless. He told himself this calmly, with an odd sense of apartness.

The other's glance followed his pridefully. "It's a fine property," he said. "The owner's an invalid, I hear, with one leg in the grave. He's in some sanitarium and can't get much good of it. Nice pictures, them," he added, sweeping a candle round. "That's a good looker over there. Must be the old man's daughter, I reckon. Well, I'll go and get you a flinger or two to keep the frost out of your lungs. It'll be cold tonight. Make yourself at home." The door closed behind him.

The man he left was trembling violently. He had scarcely repressed a cry. The portrait that hung above the mantelpiece was Jessica's, in a house dress of soft Romney blue and a single white rose caught in her hair. "The old man's daughter!" The words seemed to echo and reecho about the walls, voicing a new agony without a name. Then Jessica was his sister!

As he stared dry eyed at the picture in the candle light the library slowly passed. He must know. Who she was, what she was to him, he must learn beyond peradventure. He cast a swift glance around him. Orderly rows of books stared from the shelves; the mahogany table held only a pile of old magazines. He strode to the desk, drew down its lid and tried the drawers. They opened readily, and he rapidly turned over their litter of papers, written by the same crabbed hand that had etched the one damning word on the draft he had found in the cabin on Smoky mountain. Most of the papers the searcher saw at a glance were of no import, and they gave him no clew to what he sought. Then, mysteriously guided by the subtle memory that seemed of late to haunt him, though he was but half conscious of its guidance,

THE campaign for local option may now be said to be fairly on. So far we have heard no argument which would cause us to change our opinion that the best interests of the county, in every way, would be served best by a vote in its favor. We have been in sections of the state which went dry last spring, and on inquiry, as well as by personal observation, became convinced that from both a business and moral standpoint, prohibition of the liquor traffic was right and should be urged. Even the liquor dealers themselves do not defend the traffic but make their stand on the proposition that "prohibition does not prohibit." We believe, however, that if the people of Charlevoix county, next April, say by an overwhelming majority that "prohibition MUST prohibit," that it will.

While we are satisfied that local option is for the best interests of the county and will advocate its adoption through our editorial columns, we realize that the other side is entitled to their day in court and we shall not refuse them space to present their case to the jury made up of the electors of Charlevoix county.

WHAT A DIFFERENCE

In Regard to the Effect of Local Option in Cadillac.

The momentous question has arisen: Is or is not prohibition a failure in Wexford county, where they adopted it by local option last April. The 'liquor interests' state press bureau has sent a sheet to every member of the legislature which contains among other things this knock by Mayor Metheny of Cadillac:

"Prohibition in Wexford county is an absolute farce. The people are paying hundreds of dollars for a vague dream, but I am confident that they are beginning to wake up. The law has driven young men who never drank whiskey before to be topers. The freight offices in Cadillac have almost been swamped with whiskey shipments since the prohibition law went into effect."

Supt. G. W. Murray of the State Anti-Saloon league, sends this bobst, furnished by Editor Perry Powers:

"I think in the opinion of a very large majority of our business men the law is working well. I think the reply of the average business man here touching the possible resumption of the saloon business in Cadillac would be that our city could not afford it in a business way. It is not true that any loss of farmers' trade is caused by the absence of the saloons. I am persuaded that the law against selling liquor in Wexford county is as fully accepted and complied with as the law against stealing. Even the drug stores are not selling as much liquor as they sold while all the saloons in our county were wide open and doing business. We have had less than one-third as many arrests for drunkenness and disorderly conduct during the eight months that the law has been in operation here as we had during the eight months preceding its enactment."

She Watched.

A southern woman, leaving her home in a hurry, spoke hurriedly to the maid about some apples baking in the oven.

"Watch when the apples burn, Chloe," she called as she was leaving the house.

When she returned there was a pan of burned and charred apples on the kitchen table, but Chloe was placid and happy.

"Them apples burned at just 11 o'clock this morning, ma'am," said Chloe complacently, "for I noticed the time particular."

EMINENT CATHOLIC DIVINE SAYS PROHIBITION A FAILURE

Rev. Father T. J. Ryan of Pontiac, an Enthusiastic Advocate of the License System and Strict Regulation of the Saloons in Michigan, Gives an Interesting Interview on the Conditions as They Exist in Oakland County.

Pontiac, Feb. 13.

Rev. Father T. J. Ryan, for 15 years pastor of the church of St. Vincent de Paul at Pontiac and one of the most widely known priests in Michigan, has come out openly in opposition to the county prohibition law.

"The county prohibition law is a palpable farce and has only served to increase drunkenness in Oakland county," declared Father Ryan.

As the spiritual head of a church of over one thousand members I have been able to study the law thoroughly and it is a failure.

"Manly boys who would never think of openly entering a saloon now loiter around the so-called 'blind pigs.' They have no difficulty in obtaining all the whisky they want and as a result drunkenness has greatly increased among young men. 'A stolen apple is always the sweetest' and it was not until the young men were told that liquor was a prohibited article that they began to obtain it by stealth.

"Under the present law the liquor business has simply been transferred from the saloon where the traffic could be regulated to the drug store where minors and undesirables obtain all the whisky they want. The liquor business should be conducted openly and above board and not over the bars of secret dens.

"There are many places in Pontiac today that are far worse than were any of the saloons. They operate under the guise of 'pool rooms and cigar stores and a large proportion of their patrons are minors. I have seen more drunkenness since these illicit places began operation than ever before.

"A member of my parish had an option on a drug store in Birmingham, Oakland county, and was about to purchase the place when by chance he became aware that the business consisted practically of selling whisky. He at once declined he could not be a party to the traffic that was going on under the guise of 'co-operance' and declined to engage in an illegal business.

"There is just as much common sense in closing the saloons because one or two men drink to excess as there would be in starting a law to do away with automobiles because of a few reckless chauffeurs. During my fifteen years residence in Pontiac I have been a careful student of the liquor question and the result of my studies can be summed up these words: 'Prohibition does not prohibit.'"

Prohibition was enacted in Oakland county one year ago every licensed saloon in the county being compelled to close its doors, but the sale of liquor has not stopped. The drug store sales of whisky, as shown by the druggists' returns filed with the county prosecutor, for one week (January 18th to 24th) amounted to 115 gallons and a half; brandy, three gallons, 1 quart ½ pint; alcohol, 10 gallons, 1 pint; gin, 4 gallons, 1 quart; wine 5 gallons, 1 quart 1½ pints.

Strong drink is being sold in large quantities while on the other hand the sales of the light beverages, such as ale and beer amount to scarcely nothing. The same records show that 2 gallons and ½ pint of ale were sold during the week and only 2 gallons of beer.

Less than one-tenth of the liquor sales made by druggists are recorded. Not only is a large amount of liquor being sold in Pontiac and Oakland county, but many go to nearby towns and get it. Business men are complaining of the decrease in trade and many prominent men of the town have lifted up their voices to denounce the immorality attended upon the present prohibition regime.

A REAL CLOUDBURST.

One That Descended Upon a Mountain In Scotland.

What a real cloudburst is like is described by a Scotland correspondent of Country Life: "A cloudburst of exceptional size descended on the Cairngorm mountains, and an old watcher who has his hut almost exactly where the cloud burst, gives the following details: On July 10, 1901, the morning opened brilliantly fine and warm, with a cloudless sky and brilliant sunshine but toward noon heavy clouds formed on the hills, and it rapidly became so dark that it was almost impossible to read. He was standing in the door of his hut, when suddenly he heard from the hill across the glen a report like a thunderclap, followed by a noise like the tearing of linen, only a thousand times louder and more majestic in sound. Then he noticed that a solid mass of water had struck the hilltop, and part of it, bounding up again with the force of the impact, had descended on the hilltop immediately behind his hut. Immediately afterward a tremendous volume of water came pouring down both hillsides forming great rifts in the hills as it swirled, irresistible in its course, down rocks and stones. The channel the flood scooped out was in places quite twelve feet deep, and large rocks were tossed down its course as if they had been pebbles. The sand and stones brought down by the water so dammed up the river that quite an extensive loch was formed. During the time of the cloudburst the weather a mile or two up the glen remained fine, but to the south the clouds were black as night."

A Cruel Jest.

The only Welshman I have found with the slightest sense of humor says that the old families have a profound veneration for their names and, like the Spaniards, insist upon repeating the entire inventory when called upon. Some years ago, he says, an Englishman was pasing along the highway on horseback when he heard a cry for help from behind a hedge. A weak and appealing voice answered that he had broken his leg and wanted help.

"What is your name? Who are you?"

"Hugh Ap Morgan Ap Howell Ap Gornawy Ap Llywelyn Ap Gwalchmai Ap Dygannwy."

"Well, since there is so many of you I dare say you can get along without help," retorted the Englishman and put spurs to his horse.—William E. Curtis in Chicago Record-Herald.

Prohibition Does Prohibit

Some apologists for the liquor traffic may still ring the changes on the old cry, "Prohibition Doesn't Prohibit;" but to be believed they must tell it to others than to the fellows who have been testing out the matter in Michigan's local option counties. Those who have tried it are finding that they had better monkied with a buzz saw. Where blind pigs abounded, stiff court sentences and free lodgings in jail or the house of correction have much more abounded. In Oakland county, Judge George W. Smith has been making life miserable for the dispensers of beer, under the guise of "soft drinks." Almost two score warrants have been issued against violators of the local option law, and so many convictions and jail sentences have already been secured that one of the wards of the jail at Pontiac has come to be known as "The Local Option Ward." In consequence there has been a scurrying to close up the thirst emporiums; and the Pontiac brewery, which has been running on "soft drinks," has received notice from Prosecuting Attorney Covert that it must close its doors at once. In Barry county another Judge Smith, Hon. Clement Smith, has been dispensing like justice with a free hand. One fellow who, while under suspended sentence furnished booze to a man who went home and hammered his wife, got seventy-five days in the Detroit house of correction, and two others who gave liquor to men who became drunken, received ten days in jail and $25 costs each. In Gratiot county an Alma man who pleaded guilty to giving liquor to a friend was sentenced by Judge K. S. Searl to pay a fine of $100 and $10 costs and also to serve sixty days in the county jail. In Osceola county a 70-year-old pioneer of Hersey was convicted of selling liquor, and Judge Rose sentenced him to pay a fine of $100, $27 costs and ninety days in the Detroit house of correction, while a hotel proprietor, convicted of like offense, got $200 fine, $100 costs and seventy-five days in the same institution. Later, Judge Rose being ill, Judge Mayne of Charlevoix, held court for him and gave two other violators each $100 fine, costs and ninety days in the Detroit house of correction. In Cadillac, Judge Chittenden sentenced a Missaukee county man, who sold a pint of liquor, to keep the others company in the Detroit free boarding house. Oh, yes; they are finding out that "prohibition prohibits" in Michigan's dry counties, thank you.

Prohibition County Convention

There will be a county convention of Prohibitionists at Dr. Wilkinson's office Monday evening, February 22d, 1909, at 7 p. m., for the purpose of electing delegates to the Prohibition state convention to be held in the Masonic Temple, Jackson, Michigan, Friday, February 26, 1909, at 10 a. m. All who are interested in the putting down of the saloon are earnestly urged to be present and do our best for the furtherance of our county organization.

Herbert Phare, aged 40, was instantly killed at a lumber camp east of Boyne City Wednesday morning of last week by being hit on the head with a dead limb, which dropped down on him while he was working in the woods. He had only been in camp a few hours, but letters on his body indicate his home is in Detroit. The authorities are holding the body in an effort to get word to his relatives. He had worked at Gaylord, Trout Lake and Mackinaw City recently.

Word has been received in the city that Frank Howe, for a number of years an instructor in the Michigan Agricultural college at Lansing, has been appointed to a fine position in the government agricultural department at Washington. He left Lansing last Friday to take up his new position, but his family will remain in Lansing for a time yet. Mr. Howe was formerly superintendent of the Charlevoix schools, and has a great number of friends who will wish him all success in his new position, extending the heartiest of congratulations.

W. J. Rachow, cashier of the Charlevoix State Savings bank, this week purchased the residence property of E. A. Burnett on Park avenue. This property faces the entrance of the harbor and is one of the choicest locations that "Charlevoix the Beautiful" affords. The material and finish of the house was carefully selected and it was constructed upon honor. It is in every way a first class home. While Cashier Rachow is now nicely located in the Bartholomew residence on State street this transaction is evidence of his being satisfied with Charlevoix and that he is looking into the future.

BUSINESS CHANGE

George and Henry Block Buy X L Produce Company

Are Experienced Men in Dairy Business—Will Push It

Last week a deal was finished whereby the business of the X L Produce Co. passed into the hands of George and Henry Block, of Barnard, who will take possession April 1 and run the business under the name of the X L Creamery.

The new owners are experienced men in the dairy business and will make a strong bid for patronage. They will continue the retail milk trade now carried on by the present company and will manufacture and market butter for their customers for three cents per pound. At all times it will be their aim to pay their patrons the highest possible price for their produce.

The business of dairying is a growing one in this community and means much in the future development of our county, as dairying and sugar beet growing go hand-in-hand, each being, in a measure, dependent on the other. A well patronized creamery means a steady source of income to our farmers, without robbing the soil of its fertility, but rather adding to it, and we wish the Messrs. Block all prosperity in their new venture as their success means the prosperity of us all.

Prof. L. R. Taft, state inspector of nurseries, has made the unwelcome discovery that the brown-tail moth, one of the most dreaded tree parasites known, has invaded Michigan. The little cuss sneaked over from France as a stowaway in an importation of nursery stock by a Michigan grower. Every effort will be made to stop its being fruitful by using arsenate of lead spray and oil solution. The moth has been doing much damage in Massachusetts, where a million dollars is spent every year to get rid of it. In Europe it does great harm but is held somewhat in check by parasitic insects for even these pests have their "little ones to bite 'em." The moth is white and about as large as ten cabbage caterpillar. It gets its name from tufts of brown fuzz on its abdomen.

The Grand Rapids Press: "R. G. Peters president of the Peters Salt and Lumber company of Manistee, passed through the city, today en-route for his home in northern Michigan and was just returning with Mrs. Peters from a two weeks' stay in Tampa, Florida. 'While in Florida I purchased a tract of yellow pine and cypress covering 38,000 acres, one end of the tract being within six miles of Tampa,' he said. 'The tract, it is estimated, will cut 200,000,000 feet. Our Manistee plant will be kept busy for at least another eight years to cut all of our present holdings in that section of the state.'"

Butler Actaney, who came from Grand Rapids and had been working as watchman in the round house for the Antrim Iron Co. for about a week, tried to steal one of the locomotives and with some drunken companions take a ride out to Coldsprings. George Dunham, engineer on the company's railroad heard about the proposed trip while up town and in company with Claud Hutt made a hurried trip to Antrim and caught the party before they had gotten out of the yards. Dunham quickly boarded the locomotive and throwing Actaney and his companion out of the cab stopped the engine and caboose near the saw mill and then backed up to the round house again. Actaney has not been seen since Dunham threw him off the locomotive.—Mancelona Herald.

February 17, State oil inspector, Frank S. Neal filed his annual report as oil inspector with the state board of auditors. It shows that he has turned into the state treasury $11,565.32 over and above the expenses of the department. Under the law governing oil inspection the inspector retains all the money collected during the year but Neal sent in $8,812.58 during the shortage last December he reports. He also shows that he collected and turned in to the state $183 in interest collected on money placed on deposit.

Deafness Cannot be Cured

by local applications, as they cannot reach the diseased portion of the ear. There is only one way to cure deafness, and that is by constitutional remedies. Deafness is caused by an inflamed condition of the mucous lining of the Eustachian tube. When this tube is inflamed you have a rumbling sound or imperfect hearing, and when it is entirely closed, Deafness is the result, and unless the inflammation can be taken out and this tube restored to its normal condition, hearing will be destroyed forever; nine cases out of ten are caused by catarrh which is nothing but an inflamed condition of the mucous surfaces.

We will give One Hundred Dollars for any case of Deafness (caused by catarrh) that cannot be cured by Hall's Catarrh Cure. Send for circulars, free.

The Old Speckled Hen.

By M. QUAD.

(Copyright, 1908, by T. C. McClure.

The Thompsons and the Browns, farmers, had been neighbors for ten years, when in the same year Abel Thompson was left a widower and Aunt Martha Brown a widow. Plenty of people said it would be only natural for the two to marry after a year or so, but what the principals in the case thought of it did not come out for over two years. The farmer and the widow saw each other every day during this time. She continued to run her farm by the help of a hired man, but he was more or less interested. They sat together of evenings and talked of everything but what other people were talking about.

It was one evening in winter after the farmer had imbibed a quart of cider and eaten three or four apples and realized the loneliness of his own home that he hitched around on his chair for awhile and then said:

"Widder, there was a windmill-man along today—He wants to put up a mill for me in the spring."

"Yes, windmill men come long about once in so often," she replied.

"He 'pears to have a purty good mill."

"Yes?"

"And the price is purty reasonable."

"Yes?"

"We wasn't talkin' about windmills all the time," continued Abel as he motioned for another slice of cider. "We was talkin' about other things."

"They are great folks to talk. I've known 'em to hang around all day and do nothin' but talk."

"That windmill man said folks was wonderin' why I didn't git married ag'in."

"What impudence!"

"He said folks was a-sayin' that it was my duty to."

"Humph!"

"And he said folks was wonderin' why you didn't git married ag'in."

"Just as if it was anybody's business!" snapped Aunt Martha.

"He said folks said it was your duty."

"Well, if folks will attend to their own business I'll attend to my duty. I'll tell 'em so if they come talkin' to me. I hope you didn't encourage him to keep on rabbitin'!"

"N-no. I hadn't much to say, though after he'd gone I did considerable thinkin'. I'm a lonely man, Aunt Martha."

"You orter git a fiddle and learn to play on it."

"Shu! I hain't talkin' about fiddles. I'm a-sayin' that if I had a wife around the house things would be different. Just another sweeter of that cider, please. I'm thinkin' you've got the best cider in the neighborhood. Yes, Aunt Martha, things would be different."

"Well, why don't you go and git married then?"

"Gosh hang it, I will. That's what I come over here this evenin' for. Aunt Martha, we have known each other a long time. I know you are a mighty good woman, and you know I'm a purty good man. Our farms jine, and I can run two farms as well as one. You must be lonesome too. There must be times when you'd like to have a man around the house to manage things. You've got twenty-eight hogs, and if the cholera breaks out among 'em what on earth you goin' to do? I was a-thinkin' to myself last night"—

"Abel, stop right there," said the widow, kindly, but emphatically. "I know you to be a good man, but I hain't in love with you. You haven't teched my heart yet. I'm'll you do I don't want to talk about marriage. You just go right along livin' good and feelin' lonesome and if I find my love doin' aroused I'll tell you so."

"That's only fair," said the suitor as he rose up to go. "I hain't one to drive a woman into marriage as one drives hogs. I'll keep right on and take your word for it, and if you findy-on can't love me I'll stay single all the rest of my days. 'Um Kruger set on you, you see, and I don't want nobody else."

During the next month things went

"THERE MUST BE TIMES WHEN YOU'D LIKE TO HAVE A MAN ABOUT."

on much as usual with the exception that Abel was sent for, and as he reached the house she said:

"Abel, my sister, over at Tompkinsville, is sick and has sent for me. I'm goin' over and may be gone three or four days."

"Well, I'll run things the best I can while you're gone," he replied.

"What I want you to look out for in particular is that old speckled hen. You know I've had her for the last ten years, and I've learned to think a good deal of her. She hain't well 'tall jest now, and I hate to go away and leave her. She's got signs of the pip, and if I should come back and find her dead it would almost break my heart, Abel. I want you to be kind to her. I want you to sympathize with her. I want you to doctor and nurse her."

"I'll do it, Aunt Martha. I'll just put in all my time nursin' her up. I'll be jest as kind to her as I would be to a baby."

"That's good of you. She's only a critter, but when one gits nigh to a critter he can even love an old speckled hen. She ain't laid an egg for these five years past, but she's got a hold in my affections for the eggs she used to lay. Why, she's laid over a hundred with double yolks, and one time she bit and licked a chicken hawk."

"You go right on, widder, and leave it all to me," said the farmer. "I'll do jest as much for that old hen as I would for a brother. I hain't sot up a night for the last twenty years, but if she's taken bad I shan't close my eyes till you git back."

The widow departed, and half an hour later Abel was carrying the old hen home under his arm. The three days went past, and the widow returned. She had only entered her house when the farmer appeared with the hen in a basket. He had her wrapped in red woolen cloths. She smelled of camphor and various liniments. Her feet had been trimmed and greased, and he had applied salve to her comb. With proud deliberateness he removed wrap after wrap and finally reached the last rag and set the hen down on the floor with:

"There she is, Aunt Martha, and jest as good as she was five years ago. I've worked over her for three days, and I'm feelin' you there hain't a hen in the hull county can come up to her."

"How splendid of you, Abel how splendid!" cried the widow, and as if to corroborate her words the hen raised her head, swelled out her breast and tried to give utterance to a crow.

"See that, hear that, widder?" asked Abel.

"Yes, I do, and, oh, Abel".

"Is your heart behind, widder?"

"It is, and"

"And you'll be mine?"

That was in March, and they were married in May, and the old speckled hen was alive at last accounts and making efforts to return to her duty.

The First War Correspondents.

In a sense Julius Caesar was a war correspondent, only he did not send his "Commentaries" piecemeal from the "theater of war," but bullied them at his leisure in the subsequent peace time. The old Swedish Intelligencer of the Gustavus Adolphus period was genuine war correspondence, published, indeed, tardily compared with our news of to day, but nevertheless fresh from the scene of action, full of distinctiveness, quaint and racy beyond compare. The first modern war correspondent professionally commissioned and paid by a newspaper was the late G. L. Gruneisen, a well known literary man, who was sent to Spain by the London Post with the Spanish legion which Sir de Lacy Evans commanded in 1837 in the service of the queen of Spain. But this new departure was not followed up, and no English paper was represented in the great battles of the first and second Punjab wars.

A Clock That Stutters.

Gerund, who stuttered badly, returned home at 4 a. m. in a blissful mood from an "evening" at the club. On entering the house he was greeted from above by Mrs. Gerund, and the following dialogue ensued:

"Is that you, John?" asked Mrs. Gerund from the landing.

"Y-y-yes, m'dear; that's m-me," delightedly answered Gerund.

"What do you mean, sir," thundered his wife, "by coming home at 4 o'clock?"

"F-four o'c-clock!" echoed Gerund in a gently surprised and hurt tone. "Why, it's j-j-just 1 o'clock."

"Sir," came the fright'ning voice from above, "the clock has just struck 4!"

When Gerund replied it was in a subdued, almost hopeless, tone, but with absolute conviction. "D-do you know, my d-d-dear, that infernal clock is st-st-stuttering again?"—Chicago Record-Herald.

Canalboats in France.

Comparatively little of the traffic in the longer French canals is moved otherwise than by horses. There are a few steam freighters, which carry half a million tons a year, most of it between Paris and Rouen, and one some canals are regularly organized towing systems. But the great part of the hauling is done by horses and with so much economy on the part of the barge owners that the government has had to provide by regulation that every barge must have "power" enough not unnecessarily to block traffic. Every barge also must have a crew of two, "one of whom must be a man." So runs the regulation. So nearly every French barge is the home of a more or less happy couple, whose charcoal fire pot scents up the air along the waterways with the preparation of the endless meals.—Boston Transcript.

Instead of trying to "cream" sugar and butter for a cake with a tiresome spoon or knife blade try using a wire potato masher. This chops the butter finely and blends the two with little trouble in a comparatively short time.

nis uervous fingers suddenly found and pressed a sprlug, a panel fell down, and he drew out u folded parchment.

Another instant and he was bending over it with the candle, his fingers tracing familiar legal phrases of a will laid there long ago. He read with the blood shrinking from his heart:

"To my son, Hugh, in return for the care and sorrow he has caused me all the days of his life, for his dissolute career and his graceless desertion, I do give and bequeath the sum of $1,000 and the memory of his misspent youth. The residue of my estate, real and personal, I do give and bequeath to my ward, Jessica Holme"—

The blood swept back to his heart in a flood. Ward, not daughter! He could still keep the one sweet thing left him. His love was justified. Tears sprang to his eyes, and he laid the parchment back and closed the desk. He hastily brushed the drops away as the watchman entered and set down two glasses and a bottle.

"There you are. That'll be worth five miles to you!" He poured noisily.

His guest drank, set down the glass and held out his hand. "Good luck!" he said.

The dog thrust a cold muzzle into his hand as he walked down the gravel path slowly, feeling the glow of the liquor gratefully, with the grudging release it brought from mental tension. He had not consciously asked himself whither now. In some subconscious corner of his brain this had been asked and answered. He was going to his father. Not to seek to change the stern decree, not to annul those bitter phrases—"his dissolute career, the memory of his misspent youth!" Only to ask his forgiveness and to make what reparation was possible; then to go out once more to the world to fight out his battle.

Chapter 23

THE bell was tapping in the steeple of the little Catholic church on the edge of the town, and the mellow tone came clearly up the slope of the mountain where once more the one time partner of Prendergast stood on the threshold of the lonely cabin, sentinel over the mounds of yellow gravel that marked his toil.

The returned wanderer had met with a distinct surprise in the town. As he passed through the streets more than one had nodded or had spoken his name, and the recognition had sent a glow to his cheek and a lightness to his step.

Since the daring feat in the automobile the tone of the gossip had changed. His name was no longer connected with the sluice robberies. The lucky find, too, constituted a material boom for Smoky Mountain and bettered the stock in its hydraulic enterprises, and this had been written on the credit side of the ledger. Opinion, so all powerful in a new community, had altered. All this he who had been the outcast could not guess, but he felt the change with satisfaction.

Till the sun was low he sat in the cabin thinking. At length he called the dog and fastened it in its accustomed place and began slowly to climb the steep ascent toward the Knob. When he came to a certain vine grown trail that met the main path he turned aside. Here lay the spot where he had first spoken with her, face to face. Here she had told him there was nothing in his past which could not be buried and forgotten.

As he parted the bushes and stepped into the narrow space beside the jutting ledge he stopped short with an exclamation. The place was no longer a tangle of vines. A grave had been lately made there, and behind it, fresh chiseled in the rock, was a statue—a figure seated, chin on hand, as if regarding the nearby mound. As in a dream he realized that its features were his own. Awestruck, the living man drew near.

It was Jessica's conception of the prodigal son as she had modeled it in Alaska in her blindness, after Hugh's early return to the house in the aspens. David Stires had pointed out the distant Knob as a spot in which he would choose to be buried, and the wish had been observed. Her sorrow for his death had been deepened by the thought that the end had come too suddenly for David Stires to have reinstated his son. This sorrow had possessed one comfort—that he had known at the last and had forgiven Hugh. Of this she could assure him when he returned, for she could not really believe—so deep is the heart of a woman—that he would not return. In the days of vigil she had found relief in the rough, hard work of the mallet. None had intruded in that out of the way spot, save that one day Mrs. Halloran, led by curiosity to see the grave of the rich man whose whim it had been to be buried on the mountain side, had found her at her work, and her Jessica had pledged to silence. She was no fool, was Mrs. Halloran, and to learn the name of the dead man was to put two and two together. Her motherly heart overflowed to the girl who worked each day at that self appointed task. Only the afternoon before Jessica had finished carving the words on the base of the statue on which the look of the startled man was now resting: "I will arise and go unto my father."

The gazer turned from the words, with quick question, to the mound. He came close and in the fading light looked at the name on the low headstone. So he had come too late! If he could only have learned the truth earlier! If he might only put back the hands of the clock!

Hours went by. At length he rose to his feet, his limbs cramped and stiffened, and made his way back to the lonely cabin on the hillside. There he found fuel, kindled a blaze in the fireplace and cooked his frugal supper.

He thought of the losing battle he had fought there once before, when tempest shielded without the battle which had ended in defeat. He thought of the will he had seen, now sealed with the great seal of Death. He was the sham beggar, she the beneficiary. What duty she had owed his father was ended now. Desolate she might be in need of a hand to guide and guard her, she was beyond the reach of penury. This gave him a sense of satisfaction. Was she there on the mountain at that moment?

At last he took Old Despair's tattered violin from the wall and, seating himself in the open doorway, looking across the mysterious purple of the gulches to the skyline sown with pale stars, drew the bow softly across the strings. Through manifold variations the music wandered till at length there came from the hollowed wood an air that was an unconscious echo of a forgotten wedding day—"O perfect love, all human thought transcending!"

The light breeze that shook the pine needles bore the sound far to an ear that had grown tense with listening—to one on the ridge above to whom it had sounded the supreme call of youth and life. He did not feel her nearer presence as she stole breathless across the dark path and stood behind him.

The music died, the violin slipped from beneath his chin, the bow dropped and his head fell on his arms. Then he felt a touch on his shoulder and heard the whisper: "Hugh! Hugh!"

THE PARANOIAC.

Queer Delusions That Come With This Curious Mental Disease.

"That curious form of mental disease known as paranoia is seldom or ever cured," said a noted Chicago alienist.

"A paranoiac may be able to transact business with a fair degree of efficiency, but, as a rule, few of this class can be made to stick to work, as the nature of the malady prevents concentration of mind. One so possessed is afflicted with strange delusions, especially with the notion that he is being persecuted. Many an individual who is denominated a crank has paranoia. In general these unfortunates are misanthropic, have no social intercourse with their fellows and are brooding and introspective. Very often their mania leads them to the notion that they have been born to lead mankind in a religious way, and they proclaim themselves prophets of God. Quite often, too, they are discoverers of some wonderful invention that will astonish the world.

"It was a paranoiac who followed the great actress Mary Anderson from place to place, declaring himself her favored suitor and threatening to kill any man who sought her company. These threats were what led to the locking up of the demented creature, and I believe he finally shot one of the asylum attendants. Paranoiacs very frequently develop homicidal tendencies, and it is prudent to watch them at all times."—Baltimore American.

How to Preserve Your Linen.

Does the average housekeeper realize that the surest way to keep linen is not to use it consecutively? Does she know that in spite of the original outlay of money necessary to provide herself with a large stock of linen the possession of a great many pieces is in reality the most economical method? For instance, one woman found that by using one set of tablecloths and napkins for six months and then putting it away for a year's rest, during which time she levied on her extra supplies, her napery could be made to last almost twice as long as did that of other women. In the same way this woman was in the habit of letting two weeks elapse before she used each sheet again. And at the end of two months she put away the set that she had just been using and got from the depths of her linen closet another set.

A Real Conversion.

"So you are converted, Maggie?" a maid's mistress said to her.

"I don't know, ma'am," said the maid seriously, "but I seem to be. A great change has certainly come over me."

"How great a change?" said the lady.

"Well, ma'am," replied the maid, "since that there revival I always sweep under the mats now."—Washington Star.

IN FIVE MINUTES

All Your Indigestion and Stomach Misery Will End.

Eat You Favorite Foods Without Fear of Dyspepsia or an Upset Stomach Resulting.

Take your sour stomach—or maybe you call it Indigestion, Dyspepsia, Gastritis or Catarrh of Stomach; is doesn't matter—take your stomach trouble right with you to your Pharmacist and ask him to open a 50-cent case of Pape's Diapepsin and let you eat one 22-grain Triangule and see if within five minutes there is left any trace of your stomach misery.

The correct name for your trouble is Food Fermentation—food souring; the Digestive organs become weak, there is lack of gastric juice; your food is only half digested, and you become affected with loss of appetite, pressure and fullness after eating, vomiting, nausea, heartburn, griping in bowels, tenderness in the pit of stomach, bad taste in mouth, constipation, pain in limbs, sleeplessness, belching of gas, biliousness, sick headache, nervousness, dizziness and many other similar symptoms.

If your appetite is fickle, and nothing tempts you, or you belch gas or if you feel bloated after eating, or your food lies like a lump of lead on your stomach, you can make up your mind that at the bottom of all this there is but one cause—fermentation of undigested food.

Prove to yourself, after your next meal, that your stomach is as good as any; that there is nothing really wrong. Stop this fermentation and begin eating what you want without fear of discomfort or misery.

Almost instant relief is waiting for you. It is merely a matter of how soon you take a little Diapepsin.

AGED LIONS.

The Big Brutes Get Lazy and Spiritless as They Grow Old.

As he grows old a lion gets lazy and spiritless, says Everybody's. The haughty beast that stares at the crowd outside his cage usually is as fierce of spirit as a fat night watchman who blinks out upon the dark world through the circle of light cast by the lamp at his feet.

Very lazy to eat, nothing to annoy him, the keeper to look after his every need, the king of beasts becomes as peaceful, portly and self satisfied as some of our latter day human monarchs, whose ministers of army, navy, state and other things take proper care of the regal edge and see to it that the usual three square meals per day await the royal guilet at the proper hours.

The story took impression that lions are always on the hunt in their native jungle is quite at variance with the truth. Indeed, the older lions will frequently go hungry or seek the leavings of another beast's kill rather than summon the energy to hunt prey for themselves.

In a group of ten or twelve trained lions two or three young, nervous animals usually supply the act with all its dash and spirit. The others are somnambulists.

Tigers, too, frequently grow lethargic with advancing years, but never to such a degree as the aging lion. There is always a pinch of ginger in the big striped cat. For that reason he makes a more spectacular performer than the lion and usually a tougher proposition for the trainer.

How to Roast Ducks.

Clean and truss them like chickens. For two make a dressing of half a pound of breadcrumbs, three ounces of butter, one large onion, grated, one teaspoonful of salt and half teaspoonful of pepper. Season the ducks both inside and out with pepper, salt and a little sage. Put them in the dripping pan with a little water. Put bits of drippings over them and as they cook baste very often. Stew and chop the giblets for the gravy, which must be made in the dripping pan after pouring off most of the fat, thickening it a little with flour, and season well. Stewed cranberries or apple sauce should be served with them.

How to Relieve Choking.

Raising the left arm as high as you can will relieve choking much more rapidly than by thumping on the back. Very frequently at meal time and when they are at play children get choked while eating, and the customary manner of relieving them is to slap them sharply on the back. The effect of this is to set the obstruction free so that it can be swallowed. The same thing can be brought about by raising the left hand of the child as high as possible, and the relief comes much more rapidly.

How to Polish Mirrors.

If mirrors are very dull and speckled the following method is excellent for polishing them: Take a small portion of whiting and add sufficient cold tea to it to make a paste. Rub the glass with warm, dry tea with a soft cloth; then rub a little of the paste well on the mirror and polish dry with tissue paper. Stains and finger marks may be removed from a looking glass by rubbing with a soft cloth wet with alcohol.

South Arm Grange No. 815.

South Arm grange met in regular session Saturday evening, February 20, with Worthy Master St. John in the chair. The master appointed members to fill chairs of chaplain and lady assistant steward, who were absent.

Moved, supported and carried, that we buy new officers badges.

There was some discussion of grange fertilizers, some of the members having had some experience with them. There will be several ton of fertilizer used by members of South Arm grange the coming season.

Lecturer's hour was carried out with songs, readings and discussions of these questions: Which should be the pleasantest and handiest room in the house? and should farmers hold their potatoes and what extra remuneration should they receive for so doing? We all agreed that the kitchen should be the handiest room, but opinions differed as to which should be the pleasantest. The general opinion on the second question was that it depended wholly on the season as to whether potatoes should be held over but that we should all read the crop reports and know what was the general crop throughout the country, not only on potatoes, but on all other marketable crops. We decided that from 10 to 15 cents advance in price per bushel was sufficient to pay for pitting or cellaring potatoes.

Grange closed in form. Thirty members present.

Question for discussion for next meeting. What change should be made in the creamery to benefit the farmers?

Peninsula Grange No. 706.

BUTCHERING ON THE FARM

In killing hogs, as with everything else, the work may be made much easier by simply studying the best methods to pursue and by providing suitable tools with which to work.

One convenience that is especially essential with the present day butchering and scarcity of fuel and which has taken the place of the inconvenient backlog and open fire which smoked the workmen's eyes almost out is the arch and scalding pans for large jobs of butchering or sheet iron fire pots for ordinary work. These latter arrangements are very popular, and not only do they come in good service at butchering time, but as well in case of boiling off a batch of apple butter or homemade soap they do not endanger the women folks by the sweeping flames of fire often occasioned by high winds.

When the size of the kettle to be used is determined, usually of quite large size for general purposes, a jacket made from heavy sheet iron or light boiler iron is formed about the base of the kettle at least eighteen inches from the ground and making a sufficient fireplace beneath it for building a good fire. With a door cut into the front of this jacket and a place in the rear near the top fixed for a stove pipe joint one of the handiest conveniences about the farm is made.

This hooker can be set upon the ground in any sheltered location, or if the day becomes stormy before the task is completed it may be removed to an outdoor building or shed, where the lard may be rendered out without any smoke or danger from fire sparks, as a few joints of pipe can be added to the flue and run out through the roof or side of the shed and the work proceed as though no ill weather conditions existed.

Only healthy hogs which have been properly fattened should be selected for butchering, as it is impossible to secure good meat from poor, sickly stock. The inside of every hog killed should be carefully examined for tuberculosis, especially hogs which have been fed on skimmilk or whey from a creamery, and the carcass discarded if the disease is found in an advanced stage. The most profitable time for killing hogs is when they are from nine to twelve months old, and the best pork is made from hogs of this age, provided they are well bred. Pork of good quality cannot be made from scrub pigs.

The most important thing about butchering is to get a good scald, so that the hair can be easily and quickly removed by the scrapers. It is better to have the water too cold than too hot, for a "cold scald" can be remedied by an application of hotter water, but a scald with the water too hot "sets" the hair, so that the skin, being cooked, will scrape off with the hair, making it necessary to shave off the hair with a sharp knife, doing a poor job and requiring much time. Some butchers think they can tell the proper temperature of the water by putting their hands in it, which is rather doubtful. The exact temperature can be secured every time by the use of a thermometer. For large, 300 pound hogs 170 degrees is about right. For small hogs and pigs the water should not be above 150 or 160 degrees, and then they should not be kept in the bath too long.

READY FOR CUTTING.

Points For the Horseman.

Teach the horse more than common sense methods. Teach him to stop at the word and stay stopped until told to go on. He should be taught to back at the word. Too much dependence is placed on the lines. When a horse has once learned these things he does not forget them as a man does. A horse should also be taught to walk a good gait. The fast walker is the horse that gets along with the work. Where horses are taught more things necessary there will not be so much occasion to complain at them for not doing what is required of them. The horse is tractable and will do what is desired of him if he knows what is wanted. A horse is a poor guesser. Much of the language of the driver is unintelligible to him, and especially the profane talk.

RECIPE MIXED OFTEN

Druggist Hear Much Praise for This Mixture.

Lots of Men and Women Here Had the Simple Home Made Mixture Prepared, Says Druggist.

Some remarkable stories are being told about town and among the country people coming, in of this simple home-made mixture curing Rheumatism and Kidney trouble. Here is the recipe and directions for taking: Mix by shaking well in a bottle one half ounce Fluid Extract Dandelion, one ounce Compound Kargon, three ounces Compound Syrup Sarsaparilla. Take as a dose one teaspoonful after meals and at bedtime.

No change need be made in your usual diet, but drink plenty of good water.

This mixture has a peculiar tonic effect upon the kidneys; cleansing the clogged-up pores of the eliminative tissues, forcing the kidneys to sift and strain from the blood the uric acid and other poisonous waste matter, overcoming Rheumatism, Bladder and Urinary troubles in a short while.

A druggist here who has had hundred of calls for these ingredients since the first announcement in the newspapers last October stated that the people who once try it "swear by it," especially those who have Urinary and Kidney trouble and suffer with Rheumatism.

All the druggists in this neighborhood say they can supply the ingredients, which are easily mixed at home. There is said to be no better blood-cleansing agent or system tonic known, and certainly none more harmless or simple to use.

CHARLEVOIX COURIER

The Leading Newspaper in the Best Little City Anywhere

VOL. 26. NUMBER 9 — CHARLEVOIX, MICHIGAN, WEDNESDAY, MARCH 3, 1909 — PRICE $1.50 PER YEAR

PROGRESS OF THE CAMPAIGN

The Wet Element Arguments Proven False

FATHER RYAN REPUDIATES STATEMENT

Given Out by the Opponents of Local-Option

Proves a Boomerang to the Liquor Element—Courier Makes Final Statement of its Position

As the time draws nearer when the voters of Charlevoix county will be asked to decide whether or not saloons will longer be allowed to exist in this county, the desperation of the wet forces to bolster up their losing cause is becoming more and more evident.

Last week the COURIER, in carrying out its announced policy of giving each side of the question, an opportunity to present its cause, printed what purported to be a statement by Father Ryan of Pontiac, denouncing the workings of the local option law in Oakland county. Since then Father Ryan has refuted this statement saying: "I never dreamed that what I said would be added to and scattered broadcast throughout the state." A circular was prepared alleging to give the evidence from Wexford county. A history of that circular will be found in another portion of this issue. The COURIER has never beaitated to announce its position, from the very first agitation of the queation of local-option in this county, to be in favor of the proposition and that while the abolishment of the saloon would not only be advocated through its columns, but the personal efforts of the publishers would be exerted to that end, we would not shut out the arguments of the other side when given to us by someone in authority to speak for their organization.

If in the carrying out of this policy—the policy of the square deal—the policy of giving every man an opportunity to present his case, our motives have been misconstrued, we cannot help it, nor have we any apologies to make.

If local option is right, and we believe it is, its advocates are not afraid to meet the arguments of the liquor dealers. We believe that the best interests of the temperance cause will be advanced by allowing them the widest publicity, giving the temperance forces an opportunity to know what line of argument they will have to meet rather than forcing them to make a still hunt for votes, the hardest kind of a campaign to meet.

For the last time the COURIER will announce its policy in this campaign.

We SHALL advocate local-option for Charlevoix county from now until the votes are counted.

We shall, at all times, allow space to the advocates of each faction, reserving to ourselves the right to reject such portions of their communications which, in our opinion, are not within the lines of legitimate argument or which is taken up with personalities. In adopting this rule we realize that fault may be found by our friends, who are on the same side of the question as ourselves, but we believe it is a mighty poor cause that is afraid of the light of publicity. We believe that only through differences of opinion, honestly and fairly discussed, can we arrive at the truth on all public questions, be it local-option or something else.

We ask our friends, who are on the same side as we are, to throw aside their predjudices and make this campaign throughout, what it has started out to be, a business man's campaign to better the economic and moral conditions of our county and not a campaign under the direction of the Anti-Saloon league. We believe that the liquor traffic is wrong; is contrary to this era of quickened conscience and the demand which is now uppermost in all parts of our state and nation for the proper enforcement of the law; that the people desire to no longer continue in that silent partnership with the liquor dealers which has continued for years under the convenient term of regulation.

Holding firmly to this final statement, we reiterate the statement made in the first issue of the COURIER under our management. "We shall always advocate that which we believe to be right." We believe local option is right and we believe it is going to win.

DEMOCRATIC STATE CONVENTION

Was Held at Lansing Thursday, February 26

LESS THAN 200 DELEGATES PRESENT

A Full Ticket is Placed Before the Electors

Warm Contest Over the Platform—Attempt to Incorporate a Prohibition Plank

Supreme Justice—
CYRENIUS P. BLACK, Lansing.
MARTIN J. CAVANAUGH, Ann Arbor.

Board of Regents—
LEWIS P. COUMANS, Bay City.
MYRON H. WALKER, Grand Rapids.

Board of Agriculture—
JAMES A. TAYLOR, Kalamazoo, six year term.
WILLIAM CARPENTER, Goodrich.
C. A. DOCKSTADER, Three Rivers, four year term.
B. T. HALSTEAD, Petoskey.
JOHN SMITH, Ithaca, two year term.
RIAL B. MCARTHUR, Grand Rapids.

Superintendent Public Instruction
W. SHERMAN LISTER, Ionia.

Member of Board of Education—
DR. HENRY KREMERS, Holland.

Above is the ticket nominated at the Democratic state convention, held at Lansing Thursday, all candidates being nominated by acclamation. M. J. Doyle of Menominee was chairman of the convention, less than two hundred delegates being present.

A warm contest developed over the following resolution, which was finally defeated by a vote of seventy to forty-one.

"We denounce the organization of the liquor interests of this state and its action in politics and legislation as wrong, undemocratic and detrimental to the interests of good government." "We recognize that the saloon has always tended to destroy that which law and order, schools and churches have built up, and has even been an institution in our state, required to be regulated by law and to be watched by the officers of law; and we now recognize the saloon and its alliances as an institution injurious to public morals and dangerous to the government of the state; and because, thereof, we hereby declare that it is the policy of the Democratic party of this state to put the liquor organization out of politics and the liquor traffic out of existence and to cause to be enacted a state-wide prohibitory intoxicating liquor law."

The resolutions follow in part:

Representing the Democracy of Michigan in convention assembled, we affirm the right of the people to choose their own officials, judges included, free from the interference or manipulation of any sectional or partisan machine.

We insist that common fairness demands that our state's supreme court should not be exclusively constituted of adherents to one political party. Such one-sided partisanship is not conducive to that confidence in and respect for the state's highest tribunal, which good government demands.

We are for the broadest popular education among all classes and conditions in life and to that extent oppose any and all infractions of the non-partisan policy for the educational institutions of our state.

We regret that the election laws of this state fail to provide for non-partisan nominations, by petition or call of candidates for judges as well as for regents of the university, members of the agricultural board and state superintendent of schools and favor a provision for non-partisan nominations for positions of this kind in the proposed new primary law.

We believe that members of the supreme court should reside at the capital of the state.

We condemn the deceit and falsification made by machine officials in high offices in this state in their desperate effort to conceal from the electors the bankrupt conditions of the state treasury, the financial condition of the Jackson prison and its binder twine plant and demand a rigid investigation of all the branches of the state government.

WHERE WOMEN VOTE

Have Full Suffrage Over One-fifteenth of the World.

Four States in the Union They Have Exactly the Same Rights as Man.

Petitions for women suffrage are being circulated and generally signed in Charlevoix county. It will be interesting to our readers to learn how the movement for women suffrage has spread over the globe in the past generation.

"It is a mistake to suppose that the agitation for votes for women is confined to Great Britain and the United States. There are suffrage associations extending from Finland, at one end of the globe, to South Africa, at the other end. There are national woman suffrage associations in sixteen different countries and these are affiliated in the International Woman Suffrage Alliance. There are women in the Philippines, in Bulgaria, in Austria-Hungary, in Germany, in Italy, in Spain, in Holland, in Belgium, and in South Africa who are thoroughly aroused to the vital importance of their political emancipation. Even Persia, Turkey, Japan and China know that there is a 'woman question.'

"Progress in this movement has been by no means confined to our own country. We find women exercising the municipal suffrage by tens of thousands in Ontario, New Brunswick, Nova Scotia, Manitoba, Quebec, British Columbia, in Iceland and in the Northwest territory, in England, Ireland, Scotland and Wales.

"Women have municipal suffrage in Sweden, and in Denmark they have the right to vote for all officers except members of parliament. In 1907 Norway gave full parliamentary suffrage to more than 300,000 women who were already possessed of the municipal franchise.

"Women have full suffrage in the Isle of Man. In Federated Australia and in New Zealand they are fully enfranchised and have had their part in the beneficent legislation of these progressive commonwealths—legislation so extraordinary as to challenge the admiration of the whole civilized world.

"Full women suffrage prevails in Finland. The first year after it was granted 19 women were elected members of parliament representing constituences in all walks of life. One member was a baroness, another the official head of the Servant Girl's Union. Last year 25 women members were returned to the Finnish parliament.

"Women have some voting privileges in France, in Russia and even in parts of India. Full woman suffrage already prevails over one-fifteenth of the earth's area. A movement which has made such progress as this in but little more than half a century can not but command serious and respectful attention.
